APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir John Stanley, Knight, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Griffin.

CHIRANJI LAL (Defendant) v. KEHRI SINGH (Plaintiff).*

Civil and Revenue Courts—Jurisdiction—Suit to set aside decree of Revenue Court—Matters within exclusive jurisdiction of Revenue Court.

Held, that no suit can be entertained by a Civil Court for the purpose of setting aside a decree of a Court of Revenue in a matter as to which the latter Court has exclusive jurisdiction. Keshab Deo v. Bahori (1) and Kishen Sahai v. Bakhtawar Singh (2) referred.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

The defendant, who was a recorded proprietor, obtained decrees for profits from the Revenue Court on the 19th June, 1905, and the 1st September, 1905, against the plaintiff and realized the money due under the decrees. The plaintiff then brought the present suit in the Civil Court and prayed (1) for a declaration that the defendant was not entitled to any profits for the land in suit, and (2), that the decrees of the Revenue Court dated the 19th June 1905, and the 1st September, 1905, be declared null and void and be set aside, and the amount decreed as profits be refunded. The Court of first instance granted the first prayer ; but on appeal the lower appellate Court decreed the whole suit. The defendant preferred a second appeal as to this second relief only.

* Second Appeal No. 478 of 1909 from a decree of H. W. Lyle, District Judge of Agra, dated the 17th of March, 1909, modifying a decree of Lakshmi Narayan, Munsif of Agra, dated the 31st of October, 1908.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

I. C. 891.

Babu Piari Lal Banerji (for Babu Durga Charan Banerji), for the appellant :—

Under section 201 of the Tenancy Act, all that the Civil Court could do was to declare the right of the plaintiff. The [2] Legislature only reserved to the unsuccessful party in the Revenue Court, the right to get his title declared by a Civil Court. When there was no question of fraud, a Civil Court could not set aside a decree of a competent Revenue Court in a matter within its exclusive jurisdiction. He relied on Keshab Deo v. Bahori (1) and Rai Krishn Chand v. Mahadeo Singh (2). He further contended that the money which was realized under a decree of a competent Court could not be refunded. The Civil Court could only declare the plaintiff's right and not order any restitution consequential to the declaration. It had no jurisdiction to set aside the Revenue Court's decree, much less could it pass a decree for the refund of the money paid under the Revenue Court's decree. He relied on Marriot v. Hampton (3) and Kishen Sahai v. Bakhtawar Singh (4).

Munshi Govind Prasad, for the respondent :—

When the very basis of the Revenue Court's decree was taken away by the Civil Court's declaration that the plaintiff was not entitled to the profits, then the Civil Court was competent to decree by way of refund the amount which had been improperly realized under a wrong decree. He cited Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (5) and Shama Purshad Roy Chowdery v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdery (6).

Babu Piari Lal Banerji was not heard in reply.

STANLEY, C.J., and GRIFFIN, J.:—The plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen prayed for a declaration that the defendants were not entitled to any portion of a piece of land entered as holding No. 3 in the khewat of a village and also to have two decrees of the Revenue Court, dated respectively the 19th of June, 1905, and the 1st September, 1905, set aside and declared void, and for an order that the defendant No. 1 should be ordered to refund to the plaintiff two sums of money paid to him under and by virtue of the said decrees of the Revenue Court.

The Court of first instance passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff in regard to the declaration as to title asked for, but dismissed his claim in other respects.

[3] Upon appeal the lower appellate Court give a decree to the plaintiff in the terms of his claim.

This second appeal has been perferred, and it is contended before us that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to set aside decrees passed by the Revenue Court under the powers conferred on them by the Agra Tenancy Act. It appears to us that this contention is well founded. If we were to entertain suits to set aside decrees of the Revenue Courts, we should be bringing the Civil Courts into direct antagonism with the Revenue Courts. In certain matters the Agra Tenancy Act has provided that the Revenue Courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction, and it is not within the power of Civil Courts to interfere with the decrees of the Revenue Courts, which have been passed in matters exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts. This was so held by a Bench of this Court, of which one of us was a member in the unreported case of Keshab

Deo v. Bahori (1). The facts of that case were similar to those before us now, and in the judgment we find the following passage:— "In our opinion this suit has been misconceived. The plaintiff asked the Civil Court to set aside a decree of the Revenue Court in a matter as to which the Revenue Court had exclusive jurisdiction. We are of opinion that such a suit could not be entertained by the Civil Court." We would also refer to the case of Kishen Sahai v. Bakhtawar Singh (2). We therefore allow this appeal. We set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and restore the decree of the court of first instance with costs in this Court and also in the lower appellate court.

MADHO RAM (Defendant) v. DURGA PRASAD (Plaintiff). *

Act No. XXVI of 1881 (Negotiable Instruments Act), section 98—Want of notice of dishonour—Whether damage caused by reason of such want of notice—Burden of proof.

In a suit by intermediate endorsers of a hundi against earlier endorsers, the court found that the hundi had not been presented for payment within a reasonable time and the notice of dishonour was not given. Held that it lay upon the plaintiffs to prove that the defendants could not suffer damage by reason of want of notice of dishonour; not upon the defendants to prove that they had suffered damage. Moti Lal v. Moti Lal (3) followed.

[Fol: 39 All. 364.]

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

Ali Sajjad and Kanhaiya Lal drew a hundi for Rs. 806 on Lachman Das and Piari Lal in favour of Ismail and Tayab Ali. The hundi was drawn on the 10th November, 1903. The hundi was endorsed by Ismail and Tayab Ali in favour of Madho Ram and Gopal Das, appellants in the case. Madho Ram and Gopal Das transferred it to Mata Din and Durga Prasad, the plaintiffs respondents. The hundi passed through the hands of the following in order:—

1. Mata Din and Durga Prasad.
2. Thakur Prasad and Ganga Prasad.
3. Prabhu Dayal and Sham Lal.
4. Kedar Nath and Babu Lal.
5. Sheo Dat and Banarsi Das.

All these transfers took place between the 10th and 16th of November, 1903. The last holders sent the hundi to their agent at Calcutta for recovery of money. The hundi was dishonoured, as the business of the drawees had failed. It was presented after three months and some days and after dishonour returned to the last endorsees Sheo Dat and Banarsi Das. They realized the money from Kedar Nath and Babu Lal, and the latter in their turn from Prabhu Dayal and Sham Lal who brought a suit on the hundi against their endersers and the drawers and the payees.

The Munsif decreed the suit against the drawers, the payees and the first three sets of endorsees. The payees appealed and [5] the suit against them was dismissed as the hundi had not been presented within three months and no notice of dishonour had been given to them. Prabhu Dayal and Sham Lal realized the money from Mata Din and Durga Prasad.

This was a suit by Durga Prasad to recover the money from Madho Ram and Gopal Das and the drawers.

The defence was that the hundi was not presented in time and that no notice of dishonour was given. The first court gave effect to these pleas and dismissed the suit. The lower appellate court considered the question how far the respondents had suffered loss by reason of want of notice of dishonour and held that they had failed to prove loss by reason of want of notice and decreed the suit.

The defendants appealed.

Babu Durga Charan Banerji, for the appellants, contended that it was for the plaintiffs to prove that the defendants had not suffered any loss through want of notice and not for the defendant to prove that they had suffered loss. He cited Moti Lal v. Moti Lal (1), Amiruddi Bepari v. Bahadoor Khan (2), section 98 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, Jambu Ramaswamy Bhagavathar v. Sundararaja Chetti (3) and Askaran Baid v. Piyar Bux (4).

It was for the holder to give notice of dishonour.

Munshi Damodar Das, for the respondents, submitted that in the cases referred to by the appellants, the plaintiffs were the holders of the hundis. It was not so in this case. The person in possession for the time being was the one to give notice. An endorsee could not know that a hundi had been dishonoured. He cited Subramanian Chetty v. Alagappa Chetty (5).

STANLEY, C. J., and GRIFFIN, J. :—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by intermediate endorsers of a hundi against earlier endorsers and the drawers of the hundi to recover the amount paid by them to the holder of the hundi. The court of first instance dismissed the plaintiff's claim, finding that the hundi was not presented for payment within a reasonable time, and that notice of dishonour was not given. It also held, in accordance [6] with the ruling in Moti Lal v. Moti Lal (1), that in a case of the kind the onus lies upon the plaintiffs to prove that the defendants could not suffer damage by reason of want of notice, and that being so, the want of notice of dishonour was excused. It pointed out that in this case the plaintiffs did not venture to allege, much less prove, that the defendants could not suffer damage by reason of the want of notice.

Upon appeal all other questions appear to have been abandoned, except the question as to whether the defendants suffered loss by reason of want of notice of dishonour. In other words whether notice of dishonour in this case was excused. Section 98 of the Negotiable Instruments Act provides that no notice of dishonour is necessary when the party charged could not suffer damage for want of notice. If the plaintiff seeks to excuse the want of notice of dishonour, it lies upon him to establish that the party charged could not suffer damage for want of such notice. This was so held in Moti Lal v. Moti Lal, which we have quoted above. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court, however, shifted the onus of proof in this case upon the defendants. He says in his judgment—" it was for the defendants to prove the damage" and that "it was necessary to see whether they had proved it." Then he finds that the defendants had failed to prove loss by reason that the notice of dishonour had not been given and the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to their money.

In this view of the law we are unable to concur. It was for the plaintiffs, as we have said, to show that by reason of the want of notice of dishonour the defendants could not suffer damage. The decision of the court of first instance appears to us to be correct upon the findings, and we accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and restore the decree of the court of first instance with costs in all courts. The objections are disallowed.

Appeal decreed.

Hindu Law—Joint Hindu family—Sons' liability for father's debts—Mortgage—Suit for sale—Sons not made parties—Property sold in execution of decree for sale—Act No. IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property Act), section 85—Purchase by mortgagee decree-holder.

In execution of a decree for sale upon a mortgage of joint family property executed by the head of a Hindu joint family certain property was brought to sale and purchased by the mortgagees. A member of the family (great-grandson of the original mortgagor) sued the mortgagees for redemption upon the ground that the mortgagees at the date of the suit had been aware of his existence and had not impleaded him. Held that the plaintiffs' suit would not lie on this ground alone, and that his position was not affected by the fact that the mortgagee had himself purchased the mortgaged property. Debi Singh v. Jia Ram (1) followed. Ram Prasad v. Man Mohan (2) dissented from. Lal Singh v. Pulandar Singh (3) referred to.

THIS was a suit by the respondent for redemption of a mortgage made by his great-grandfather, Pirthi Singh, in favour of the appellants. The latter brought a suit upon the mortgage, impleading as defendants his son and grandsons, including the father of the respondent, and they obtained a decree for sale, in execution of which they purchased the property themselves. The respondent based the present suit on the allegations that he was born before the appellants instituted their suit : that they were aware of his existence; that they should have impleaded him as a defendant, and as they failed to do so, his right to redeem the mortgage was still subsisting. The appellants contended that the respondent had no right to sue for redemption of the mortgage. The first court dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by the proceedings in and consequent upon the suit upon the mortgage. The lower appellate court reversed that decision and remanded the suit for trial on the merits. The defendants have appealed.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the appellants :—

The question in this case is whether a great-grandson can bring a suit for redemption after the mortgaged ancestral property has been sold in execution of a decree to which he was not a party, [8] and purchased by the mortgagee. I submit he cannot. The ruling in the case of Bhawani Prasad v. Kallu (1) was much modified by subsequent rulings. Now the son or grandson, who has not been made a party to the mortgage suit, only gets an opportunity to show that the debt was not of such a character as would be binding upon him in Hindu Law; Debi Singh v. Jia Ram (2). In the present case the binding nature of the debt is admitted, and the sole ground of the plaintiff's suit is that he ought to have been made a party to the mortgage suit. The mere ground that he was not impleaded is no longer held, by itself, sufficient to entitle him to any relief. The fact that in the present case the plaintiff is willing to redeem does not take the case out of the rule laid down in the case of Debi Singh v. Jia Ram. The case of Lal Singh v. Pulandar Singh (3) which followed the case just referred to was a suit for redemption like the present suit. A similar case to that in I. L. R. 25 All. was that of Chattarpal Singh v. Natha (4). The case of Jhabba Lal v. Chhaju Mal (5) and Ram Prasad v. Man Mohan (6) have gone back again from the rule laid down in Debi Singh v. Jia Ram and subsequent cases cited above. The case of Ram Prasad v. Man Mohan is in the teeth of the ruling in Debi Singh's case and in direct conflict with Lal Singh v. Pulandar Singh. I rely also on S. A. Nos. 711 and 712 of 1905 ; and L. P. A. Nos. 110 and 111 of 1907, decided on 6th December, 1907.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the respondent :—

I rely upon the latest ruling of our Court, viz, the case in I. L. R. 30 All. already cited, which, I submit, lays down the correct law. A Hindu son born after the family property has been mortgaged takes, by his birth, an interest in the equity of redemption which is the property then left to the family. The case is analogous to that of a second mortgagee, who is interested in the equity of redemption of the prior mortgage. The interest which the plaintiff had in the equity of redemption, that is to say, his right to redeem, has never been lost and still subsists. I take my stand on section 85 and section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act. In the case of Debi Singh v. Jia Ram the plaintiff did not [9] seek to redeem it was the case of a Hindu son who wanted the court to entirely ignore the sale and restore the property without any payment. In that case the mortgage was not admitted. The observations of the Chief Justice in Bhawani Prasad's case in I. L. R. 17 All. are not touched by the case of Debi Singh v. Jia Ram, which did not overrule the former case but only distinguished it.

I also rely upon the case of Khairaj Mal v. Daim (7), where a distinction was drawn between the case of the mortgagee himself becoming the purchaser and that of a third person being the purchaser.

CHAMIER, J.:—This was a suit by the respondent for redemption of a mortgage made by his great-grandfather, Pirthi Singh, in favour of the appellants. The latter brought a suit upon the mortgage, impleading as defendants his son and grandsons, including Mulayam Singh, the father of the respondent, and they obtained a decree for sale, in execution of which they purchased the property themselves. The respondent based the present suit on the allegations that he was born before the appellants instituted their suit; that they were aware of his existence; that they should have impleaded him as a defendant, and as they failed to do so, his right to redeem the mortgage still subsists. The appellants contended that the respondent had no right to sue for redemption of the mortgage. The first court dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by the proceedings in and consequent upon the suit upon the mortgage. The lower appellate court reversed that decision and remanded the suit for trial on the merits. The defendants have appealed.

We have been referred to a large number of cases bearing more or less on the point at issue. The first case to which I think it necessary to refer is that of Bhawani Prasad v. Kallu (1), in which it was held by five Judges (BANERJI, J., dissenting) that if a mortgagee institutes a suit for sale upon a mortgage made by a father in a joint undivided Hindu family without joining as defendants the sons of whose interests in the property he has [10] notice, and obtains a decree and an order absolute for sale against the father alone, the sons may obtain a declaration that the mortgagee, decree-holder, is not entitled to sell the interests of the sons in the mortgaged property in execution of his decree, although the sole ground of their suit is that they were not parties to the suit brought by the mortgagee. The next case is that of Debi Singh v. Jia Ram (2). There the sale had taken place before the sons brought their suit, and it was held by a Bench of three Judges that in such circumstances the sons could not succeed merely upon the ground that they had not been made parties to the suit by the mortgagee, but must establish some ground which under the Hindu law would free them from liability as sons to pay their father's debts. Both the learned Chief Justice (with whom KNOX, J., concurred) and BANERJI, J., pointed out that all that was held in the case of Bhawani Prasad v. Kallu was that before a sale has taken place the sons may have their interests excluded from the sale simply on the ground that the mortgagee who had brought the suit had notice of their interests and omitted to implead them as defendants. The decision of the Court in the case of Debi Singh v. Jia Ram is avowedly based upon certain decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council, and in particular it would seem upon the following well-known passage in the judgment in the case of Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (3), namely.—" It appears to their Lordships that sufficient care has not always been taken to distinguish between the question how far the entirety of the joint estate is liable to answer the father's debt, and the question how far the sons can be precluded by proceedings taken by or against the father from disputing the liability. If his debt was of a nature to support sale of the entirety, he might legally have sold it without suit, or the creditor might legally procure the sale of it by suit. All that the sons can claim is that not being parties to the sale or execution proceedings, they ought not to be debarred from trying the fact or the nature of the debt in a suit of their own." The only differences between the case of Debi Singh v. Jia Ram and the case now before us are that in that case the plaintiffs sought to recover their shares in the family property without [11] offering to redeem the mortgage, whereas in the case now before us the plaintiff admits the validity of the mortgage and seeks to redeem it, and that in that case the auction-purchaser was a stranger, whereas in the present case he was the mortgagee himself. The decision in Debi Singh v. Jia Ram, was followed by BANERJI, J., in Banke Rai v. Raghubir (1) (unreported), in which the property of the family had been put up for sale in execution of a decree upon a mortgage made by the father and purchased by the mortgagee himself. The son sued to redeem the mortgage on the ground that the mortgagee had had notice of his interest but had not made him a party to the suit upon the mortgage. It was, therefore, a case exactly like the one now before us. BANERJI, J., held that the son could not succeed merely upon the ground that the mortgagee had had notice of his interest and had not made him a party. To the same effect is the decision in the case of Lal Singh v Pulandar Singh (2), where also the suit was brought by sons for redemption of their interests in the family property after it had been sold in execution of a decree based on a mortgage made by their father. In that case the auction-purchaser was a stranger to the mortgage and decree. That decision was followed by BANERJI, J., in the case of Karan Singh v. Razi-ud-din (3) (unreported), and an appeal against his decision under the Letters Patent was dismissed in December, 1907. That also was a suit for redemption after a sale had taken place in execution of a decree on a mortgage of joint family property made by the plaintiff's father. The auction-purchaser was a stranger, but had transferred the property to the mortgagee before the son brought his suit.

Thus in December, 1907, there was an undisturbed current of authority to the effect that after a sale of joint family property has taken place in execution of a decree passed upon a mortgage made by a father, his sons are not entitled to sue to recover their shares in the property merely upon the ground that they were not parties to the suit brought by the mortgagee and that they cannot sue to redeem the property or their interests in the property merely upon that ground. The same rule was followed whether the auction-purchaser was a stranger or was [12] the mortgagee. But in April, 1908, in the case of Ram Prasad v. Man Mohan (4), where joint family property had been foreclosed in execution of a decree passed upon a mortgage made by the father, AIKMAN and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ., held that he sons and grandsons were entitled to redeem the mortgage, inasmuch as the mortgagee who had purchased the property had been aware of the interests of the plaintiffs and should have impleaded them in the suit. They distinguished the case of Debi Singh v. Jia Ram, from the case before them on the ground that the former was a suit to get back from innocent purchasers the plaintiffs' share of the family estate, whereas in the case before them all that the plaintiffs asked was that they should be given an opportunity to redeem a mortgage which had been foreclosed by the defendants who knew of the plaintiffs' interests and yet did not make them parties to the suit, on the mortgage. The circumstance relied upon by AIKMAN and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ., that it was owing to the defendants' failure, not the failure of a person not a party to the suit, to comply with section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, that the plaintiffs did not have an opportunity to redeem the mortgage, was not, I think, a sufficient ground for not following the decision in Debi Singh v. Jia Ram. It is true that the learned CHIEF JUSTICE, with whom KNOX, J., concurred, laid stress on the fact that the defendants were strangers to the suit on the mortgage, but BANERJI, J., did not allude to this feature of the case, and in the later case of Banke Rai v. Raghubir he dismissed the son's suit for redemption against the mortgagee, who had purchased the property at the execution sale. In their judgment in Lal Singh v. Pulandar Singh, the learned CHIEF JUSTICE and BURKITT, J., refer with approval to the decision of BANERJI J., in Banke Rai v. Raghubir, and quote the following passage from the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (1) :—"This case is an authority for these propositions, first, where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons by reason of their duty to pay their [13] father's debt cannot recover that property unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted, and, secondly, that the purchasers at an execution sale being strangers to the suit, if they had no notice that the debts were so contracted, are not bound to make inquiry beyond what appears on the face of the proceedings." This passage shows that strangers who purchase at a sale in execution of a decree on a mortgage against a Hindu father may, if the debt was not originally binding on the son, have a stronger position than the mortgagees would have had if they had purchased; but it seems to afford no warrant for the view that a mortgagee who purchases is in any worse position than a stranger in a case where the debt is binding upon the son, or rather upon his interest in the property. The crucial question is whether the debt was of a nature to support a sale of the property. If it was, the son cannot recover his share of the property, and a fortiori he cannot redeem the property, for an offer to redeem involves an admission that the debt is binding on his interest in the property. AIKMAN and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ., seem to have treated the question as one not of the Hindu law but of procedure depending upon section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, but this view was not admissible in force of the decision of three Judges in Debi Singh v. Jia Ram. The learned Chief Justice devoted a considerable portion of his judgment in that case to the question whether the decisions of the Privy Council as to the circumstances in which a son could recover his share of the family property had been superseded by section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act; and with the concurrence of KNOX, J., and in this matter of BANERJI J., also, came to the conclusion that they had not been superseded and that once the property had been sold all that the sons could claim was an opportunity of "trying the fact or the nature of the debt in a suit of their own." AIKAMAN and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ., refer to a passage in the judgment of BANERJI, J., in the case of Bhawani Prasad v. Kallu, where he expressed the view that a suit like the one before us could be maintained; but in the case of Banke Rai v. Raghubir, BANERJI, J., considered himself bound by the decision in Debi Singh v. Jia Ram to dismiss such a suit. [14] Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the respondent, contended that his client was in a position analogous to that of a puisne mortgagee who has not been made a party to a suit by the first mortgagee against the mortgagor for sale of the property, but there appears to me to be an important distinction between the two cases. Generally speaking, a mortgagee is not bound by the acts of the mortgagor done after the mortgage and certainly cannot be deprived of his rights by the failure of the mortgagor to redeem the prior mortgage. A sale of the property out of court by Pirthi Singh would admittedly have been binding upon the respondent, and it seems to me impossible to hold that he is entitled to disregard the execution sale merely because he was not made a party to the suit on the mortgage. As pointed out by PONTIFEX, J., in Pursid Narain Sing v. Honooman Sahay (1), the mortagee had a right validly acquired to have the property sold. The passage was cited with approval by the Privy Council in Daulat Ram v. Mehr Chand (2), and unless the law was altered by the enactment of section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, the decision of their Lordships in the case last cited seems to be conclusive. The decision of the three Judges in the case of Debi Singh v. Jia Ram is a clear authority by which we are bound that the law was not altered by that section. I am of opinion that the decision of AIKMAN and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ., is inconsistent with the principle underlying the decision in Debi Singh v. Jia Ram, and therefore we are not bound to follow it. I would allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and restore the decision of the court of first instance.

TUDBALL, J.:—I concur.

BY THE COURT.—The appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower court is set aside and that of the court of first instance is restored. Appellant will have his costs here and in the lower court.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

One Musammat Sheo Kunwar sued for possession of certain lands and for cancellation of a perpetual lease executed by her mother Atrajo Kunwar in favour of the defendants. Sheo Kunwar died during the pendency of the suit. Sheo Pujan (respondent) was brought on the record as an heir to the estate of the deceased plaintiff's father. The defence was that the defendants were the tenants of Sheo Kunwar; that consequently the Court ought to have proceeded under section 202 of Act II of 1901; that the suit had abated on the death of the plaintiff (Sheo Kunwar) and that Sheo Pujan was not entitled to proceed with the suit. Both the courts below decreed the claim. The defendants appealed.

Munshi Govind Prasad (with him The Hon'ble Nawab Muhammad Abdul Majid), for the appellants, contended that Sheo Pujan being a reversioner was not the legal representative of Sheo Kunwar. He could have sued in his own right. One reversioner cannot represent another reversioner. He relied on Bhagwanta v. Sukhi (1), Balak Puri v. Durga (2) and Sakyahani Ingle Rao Sahib v. Bhavani Bozi Sahib (3).

Babu Sital Prasad Ghosh, for the respondent, was not called upon, but cited section 2, cl. (11), of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[16] STANLEY, C. J., and GRIFFIN, J.:—"The suit in this case was brought by the plaintiff to recover possession of 60 bighas of sir land which were leased in perpetuity to the defendants by one Musammat Atrajo Kunwar, the mother of the plaintiff. The plaintiff Musammat Sheo Kunwar died during the pendency of the suit, and thereupon the respondent Sheo Pujan Singh, as the reversionary heir of Baldeo Rai, the last male owner, was placed upon the record in place of Musammat Sheo Kunwar. A decree in his favour was passed by the court of first instance which was confirmed by the lower appellate court. This second appeal has been preferred, and the main ground of appeal is that the cause of Sheo Kunwar was personal and did not survive to the respondent, the reversionary heir. There appears to us to be no force in this contention. Prior to the passing of Act V of 1908 there are several authorities to be found on the point raised. In the case of Katama Natchier v. The Raja of Shivagunga (4) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that upon the death of a Hindu widow the right of action formerly vested in her devolves not upon her heirs but upon the next heirs of her husband." In the case of Premmoyi Choudhrani v. Preonath Dhur (5) it was held by MACPHERSON and HILL, JJ., that on the death of a Hindu heiress after the institution of a suit to recover property belonging to her deceased husband, the reversionary heirs of her husband were her legal representatives within the meaning of section 365 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Again in the case of Tribhuwan Sundar Kuar v. Sri Narain Singh (6) it was held by our brothers BANERJI and AIKMAN that a reversioner succeeding to the estate of a deceased person after the death of the widow of that person would be bound by a decree obtained against the widow, provided that there was a fair trial of the suit in which the decree was passed, and that consequently the widow's right to sue survives to and devolves upon the heir of the husband entitled to the estate, and such heir, and not her personal heirs, should be her legal representative for the purposes of section 365 of the Code of Civil Procedure. When we turn to the definition of "legal representative" contained in section 2 of [17] Act V of 1908, the question seems to us to be set at rest. Legal representative, as defined in that section, means "a person who in law represents the estate of the deceased person, and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased, and where a person sues or is sued in a representative character the person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party so suing or sued." It seems to us clear from this definition that the plaintiff as the reversionary heir to the estate of Baldeo Rai was entitled to be placed on the record in the place of Musammat Sheo Kunwar and to prosecute the suit as representing the estate of Baldeo Rai. There is no force therefore in this ground of appeal.

It is contended further that a tenancy subsists between the defendants appellants and Musammat Sheo Kunwar, and that action ought to have been taken under section 202 of Act No. II of 1901 and not in a Civil Court. There appears to be equally no force in this ground of appeal. The defendant Rikhai Rai in his written statement did not allege that he was a tenant of the plaintiff. He simply stated that he was in possession of the land in question as a tenant and that the plaintiff was the owner and zamindar. We agree in the conclusion arrived at by the lower appellate court as to this. For these reasons we think the decision of the courts below is correct and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Lambardar and Co-sharer—Powers of lambardar—Lease of timber-bearing common land for the purpose of cutting the timber and making charcoal.

Held that a lambardar has ordinarily no authority to grant leases of timber-bearing common land of the village to lessees for the purpose of having the timber cut and converted into charcoal.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

Four persons, lambardars of a village, gave for a term of three years, a lease to the plaintiffs of a jungle in the village on 27th [18] July, 1908, under the terms of which the plaintiffs were entitled to clear the wood, cut the timber and convert it into charcoal. The plaintiffs were to pay Rs. 12 per loaded waggon to the lambardars. Other co-sharers prevented the plaintiffs from cutting wood. The Magistrate, apprehending a breach of the peace, attached the wood under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and left the parties to their remedy in a civil suit. Plaintiffs, the lessees, brought a suit for damages for the loss of the profit they would have made. The defendants, co-sharers, contended that the lambardars had no right to grant a lease of the kind, and as it was not executed by the remaining co-sharers, it was not binding on them. The suit was decreed by the courts below. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, for the appellants:—

A lambardar can make a lease for cultivation and not for cutting down wood. The terms of the wajib-ul-arz of the mahal gave no power of the kind to the lambardar.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru (with him The Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru), for the respondents:—

The joint land in the mahal was in the hands of the lambardars and if the lease was reasonable, the other co-sharers could not impeach it. The powers of management rested with the lambardars and management did not mean management for the purposes of cultivation only. A lambardar could do things unconnected with the cultivation of the land. He relied on Mukta Prasad v. Kamta Singh (1) and Muhammad Kazim v. Mian Khan (2).

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, replied.

STANLEY, C. J., and GRIFFIN, J.:—The sole question involved in this appeal is concerned with the right of lambardars in the course of management of parti lands in a village in which parti lands are timber-bearing lands, to grant a lease of that land to lessees for the purpose of cutting down timber and converting it into charcoal.

A lease was executed in this case by the lambardars on the 27th of July, 1908, for a term of three years, to give the plaintiffs, [19] the lessees, power to cut down wood and convert it into charcoal. The appellants, who are co-sharers in the village, objected to and interfered with the cutting down of the timber and alleged that the lambardars had power to grant a lease of the kind.

The Court below, relying upon the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz of the village, came to the conclusion that the lambardars were authorized to grant the lease. It is said that the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz do not give the lambardars such power and that under the ordinary powers of management they are not entitled to grant a lease of the kind. On the other hand it is argued that they have such power under the wajib-ul-arz, and that in any case they have such a power if the lease be not detrimental to the interests of the co-sharers.

We are not aware of any authority, and none has been cited, for the proposition that lambardars can ordinarily grant leases of timber-bearing common land of the village to lessees for the purpose of having timber cut and converted into charcoal. In the absence of authority we do not see our way to travel outside the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz. In clause 4 of the wajib-ul-arz the practice as to the management of parti land is set forth. The heading of the clause is as follows:—"Usage as to the management of parti lands capable of being cultivated and as to breaking up (for tillage) of such parti land." The provision then follows:—"Each co-sharer manages the parti land within his own patti and the lambardars the shamilat, and according to mutual agreement rent is taken, &c." The question is, whether the words "the lambardars managed the shamilat" in view of the context justified the lambardars in this case in granting the lease in question. It appears to us that this question must be answered in the negative. The power given to manage shamilat land is in connection, as it appears to us, with the breaking up for tillage of the land. It does not seem to contemplate the granting of a lease to lessees authorizing them to cut down at will the timber existing upon the shamilat lands and convert it into charcoal. In view of the language of the wajib-ul-arz we think that the Courts below were wrong in decreeing the plaintiffs' suit as against the appellants. They were not consenting parties to the lease, and [20] as co-sharers in the shamilat land, were entitled to prevent the plaintiffs from cutting down their timber without their consent. If the lease had been a valid lease within the powers of the lambardars, the case would have been different.

For these reasons we allow the appeal in so far that we set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court as against the defendants appellants. In other respects the decree of that Court will stand. The other co-sharers have not appealed and they may have been consenting parties to the lease. The appellants will have their costs in all Courts against the plaintiffs.

Appeal allowed.

MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL.

33 A. 20=7 A. L. J. 842 =7 I. C. 315.

The facts of the case are stated in the following report by the Stamp Reporter of the Court : —

"The plaintiff in the suit claimed to recover Rs. 2,100 for principal and interest due on a bond, dated the 20th April, 1881, by sale of the property hypothecated therein. Upon the trial of the suit, the court of first instance passed a decree for Rs. 1,700-2-10 out of the amount claimed by enforcement of hypothecation lien against 7½ shares out of 11½ shares of the mortgagor's rights, thus exempting 3½ shares of Data Ram from the operation of the decree.

"From this decision both the parties appealed to the lower appellate court, and their appeals having been dismissed by that court, the defendant has come in second appeal to this Court, and the plaintiff files a cross-objection under order XLI, rule 22, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and has valued his petition of objection at Rs. 700 and paid a court fee of Rs. 2 on the same.

"I beg to submit that the object of this cross-objection being to make the share of Data Ram aforesaid jointly liable with other property for the satisfaction of the plaintiff's decree obtained by him from the first court, it should be valued at Rs. 1,700-2-10 and an ad valorem fee of Rs. 115 should be paid on the same under schedule I, article 1, of Act VII of 1870, as amended by section 155 and the 4th Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908). In support of the reasons for this report, I rely upon a decision, dated the 26th April, 1901, of a Division Bench of this Court on the question of court fees in Second Appeal No. 640 of 1899, which is on all fours with the present case. That being so, an additional court fee of Rs. 113 is payable by the objector (plaintiff respondent) on this memorandum of cross objection.

"For the reasons stated above, there is a deficiency of Rs. 55 to be made good by him on the memorandum of appeal filed by him in the lower appellate court and numbered as 310 of 1909 in that court. In this connection I would further submit that the plaintiff's appeal to the lower appellate court was valued at Rs. 800, while in this Court he has valued his objection at Rs. 700 only."

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the respondent, took objection to the above report on the following grounds:—

"I object to the report of the office with regard to the deficiency in the court fee on the following grounds: —

"(1) The object of the petition of objections is not to get a decree from this Hon'ble Court for any sum in excess of that allowed by the lower appellate court but to make Data Ram's share which has been exonerated from the operation of the decree equally liable with the shares of the other judgement-debtors. The appellant has already paid court fee on the amount for which the lower appellate court has passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff respondent who is the objector in this Court. Once the full amount of the court fee having been paid, it should [2d] not, I submit, be levied over again when the plaintiff respondent asks for no relief for any additional amount, but only that a certain person who had been exempted should not be so extempted. Section 7 of the Court Fees Act has no application when no amount is claimed. I submit the principle laid down by the Madras High Court in the Full Bench decision at page 96 of the I. L. R. 30 Mad., covers my case.

"I have, however, no objection to the concluding portion of the report of the Stamp Reporter where he points out that the plaintiff's appeal to the lower appellate court was valued at Rs. 800, while in this Court he has valued his objection at Rs. 700 only. I am willing to raise the valuation from Rs. 700 to Rs. 800."

The Stamp Reporter submitted a further report as under : —

"The payment of full fee by the appellant on his memorandum of appeal is no excuse for the respondent. Section 16 of the Court Fees Act (No. VII of 1870), which governed cross objections, has been repealed (vide Schedule V, Act No. V of 1908), and they are now like plaints and memoranda of appeal governed by article 1, schedule I, of Act VII of 1870 (vide Schedule IV of Act No. V of 1908).

"The law as administered by the courts in these Provinces is that laid down in the precedent cited by me in my report, dated the 28th January, 1910, and so far as I know, it has neither been dissented from nor overruled by a larger Bench of this Court."

The Taxing Officer referred the case to the Taxing Judge with the following report:—

"In the present reference the sole point for decision is, whether, when a party objects by way of appeal or under the provisions of order XLI, rule 22, to a decree of a subordinate court, excluding from liability a portion of a certain property, the whole of which he claims to be liable for a mortgage debt, and while accepting the correctness of the amount found due, asks that the excluded portion of the property be also declared liable, court fees should be paid (a) with reference to the amount found due under the mortgage; or (b) with reference to the value of the property which it is sought to render liable.

"The second view is supported by a Full Bench decision reported in I. L. R. 30 Mad. at page 96, but the former has the support of an unreported case (Dumber Singh v. Musammat Narain Kunwar, Second Appeal No. 640 of 1899, decided by a Divisional Bench of this Court on 26th April, 1901).

submitted for orders under section 5, Act VII of 1870.

The Taxing Judge referred the case to a Bench of two Judges by the following judgment:—

TUDBALL, J:—This matter raises a question of the amount of court fees payable upon the objections raised by the respondent to the decree of the Court below. The lower Court has granted a decree to the respondent for Rs. 1,700-2-10 to be recovered by sale of a portion of the mortgaged property. Some of the defendants have appealed. The respondent has filed [23] objections under which he asks this Court to declare that the property of one Data Ram, which has been exempted from the operation of the decree in his favour is also liable to be sold in execution of that decree. According to the office report the fee which is chargeable upon the memorandum of objection is to be calculated under clause (i) section 7 of the Court Fees Act on the full amount decreed by the lower court. To this objection is taken and reference is made to the Full Bench ruling reported in I. L. R. 30 Mad. 96. In Second Appeal No. 640 of 1899 a similar point was raised and a Division Bench of this Court in the course of its judgment remarked:—" To such a case no other clause or section of the Court Fees Act appears applicable except clause (i) of section 7." It appears to me from the above language that the point was not fully discussed on that occasion. The ruling of the Madras High Court appears to me to take a more correct view. It is further contended before me that the objector, as a matter of fact, is only asking for a declaration, and his objection should at the most bear the fee of Rs. 10. In my opinion there is considerable force in this objection: but in view of the ruling in Second Appeal No. 640 of 1899, the point is one which should be referred to a Bench of two Judges, to obtain an authoritative decision on the point. I accordingly refer this matter to a Bench of two Judges.

The case then coming on before KNOX and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ., their Lordships held that they had no jurisdiction to decide the reference and they directed the papers to be returned to the learned Judge by whom the reference had been made. In doing so their Lordships drew attention to the case which appeared in the Allahabad Weekly Notes, 1895 page 56, and also to section 5 of the Court Fees Act 1870.

The following order was then passed by the Hon'ble Taxing Judge:—

TUDBALL, J:—The Bench to which this matter was referred finds that it has no jurisdiction to deal with it. I have had, however, the opportunity of consulting my learned brothers who constituted that Bench (KNOX and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ), The matter was argued before them and I find that their opinion agrees with mine, i.e., that the ruling of the Madras High Court, [24] I. L. R. 30 Mad. 96, is the correct and equitable view. The respondent in this case seeks to bring certain property within the operation of his decree. Its value is Rs. 800 (this being less than the amount of the decretal debt) and that is the value of his cross-objections. He must, therefore, pay an ad valorem fee on the value of this property. He seeks more than a mere declaration. There is consequential relief in his demand, viz., an order that the property be sold if the decretal debt be not paid. He will, therefore, pay the ad valorem fee as noted above. I allow one month to make good the deficiency.

Order accordingly.

RAM KISHAN (Defendant) v. PIARI LAL (Plaintiff).*

[21st June, 1910].

Act No. XX of 1847—(Copyright Act) sections 7 and 12—Copyright—Suit for damages for infringement of copyright—Jurisdiction.

A suit to recover damages for infringement of copyright does not lie in the court within the jurisdiction of which the plaintiff, but not the defendant, resides. Neither is the possessor of a pirated copy of a copyright work bound to deliver it to the owner of the copyright wherever he (the owner) may happen to reside.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

A suit was filed by one Piari Lal in the court of the District Judge of Aligarh, on the allegation that the plaintiff had a copyright in a book entitled "Kok Shastra" and that the defendant, Hakim Ram Kishan, had infringed this copyright by printing, publishing and selling an imitation of his book in Urdu and also in Gurmukhi. The reliefs he sought were twofold; first, that a permanent injunction might be issued against the defendant restraining him from printing, publishing or selling the offending book; and secondly, that the defendant might be orderd to deliver up all the unlawfully printed copies of the books or failing this to pay damages to the plaintiff. The books by printing, publishing and selling which the defendant was said to have infringed the copyright of the plaintiff were printed, published and sold at Lahore, where the defendant [25] resided and carried on business. One of the defences to the suit was that the District Judge of Aligarh had no jurisdiction to try the case. It was not proved that the defendant or his agent had been in possession of the offending books within the jurisdiction of that court. The court below, however, decreed the suit, holding that it had jurisdiction to try the case. It held "that the plaintiff has a legal right to demand that the defendant shall deliver to him all copies of any book that may infringe his copyright. The place of delivery is not regulated by the Contract Act, and it is not suggested that the plaintiff gave the defendant instructions to make delivery at any particular place; neither side has brought to notice any enactment or authority on the point. In the circumstances it would appear to be reasonable to hold that the place of delivery should have been Aligarh. Now non-delivery gives a right to claim damages, and if the books should have been delivered in Aligarh, failure to give delivery in Aligarh gives the plaintiff one cause of action arising in Aligarh." The defendant appealed.

Babu Purushottam Das Tandan, for the appellant :—

The only section which gives jurisdiction to a court in matters of copyright is section 7 of the Indian Copyright Act. That section definitely lays down that all suits in respect of infringement of a copyright are to be instituted in the highest court of original civil jurisdiction within whose limits the offending books have been printed, published or sold. There is no question of contract here. In the presence of the special enactment, no general law in regard to jurisdiction would be applicable. Now there is no finding that the defendant by his agent or otherwise was in possession of the offending books within the jurisdiction of the court at Aligarh. The court, therefore, cannot try the case. The view that under section 12 of the Copyright Act, the defendant should have delivered all copies of the offending books at Aligarh and that failure to give such delivery furnished a cause of action at Aligarh, is, it is, submitted incorrect. All that section 12 says is that the proprietary right in such books shall vest in the owner of the copyright. But it is the lookout of the owner to get his property from the person in [26] whose possession it is ; it is not the duty of the latter person to find out the owner and deliver it to him wherever he may be. He relied on MacMillan v. Shamsululma Moulvi Zaka (1). That case was one under the English Copyright Act [Stat. 5 and 6, Vict., Cap. 215], but the provisions in regard to jurisdiction are exactly the same there as in the Indian Act, and section 12 of the Indian Act has also its counterpart in the English Law. The case in the Bombay High Court is on all fours with the present case.

No one appeared for the respondent.

TUDBALL and CHAMIER, JJ. :—This is an appeal by the defendant in the suit against a decree passed by the District Judge of Aligarh. The plaintiff respondent is the proprietor of the copyrght in a book called Kok Shastra. The defendant appellant has printed and is or was selling a work on the same subject and under the same title. The court below has found that the appellant's book is an infringement of the respondent's copyright and has decreed that the appellant shall either deliver up all the pirated copies of the book now in his possession or pay the respondent Rs. 600 as damages for the detention thereof. It has also granted an injunction restraining the appellant from further infringing the copyright.

The appellant contends that the suit was not maintainable in the Court of the District Judge of Aligarh, inasmuch as the appellant resides at Lahore and the cause of action arose there. Section 7 of the Indian Copyright Act, 1847, as it now stands, provides that "if any person shall print or cause to be printed, either for sale or exportation, any book in which there shall be subsisting copyright without the consent in writing of the proprietor thereof, or shall have in his possession for sale or hire any such books so unlawfully printed without such consent as aforesaid, such offender shall be liable to a suit in the highest local court exercising original civil jurisdiction." Upon this provision it is quite clear that a suit for damages for infringement of copyright can be brought only in the court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action arises or in the court within whose limits the defendant resides. The respondent has not appeared [27] in this Court, but in the court below he seems to have contended that the suit was maintainable in Aligarh, because, although the appellant resides at Lahore, the cause of action arose at Aligarh where the respondent resides. He relies upon section 12 of the Copyright Act, which runs as follows :—"All copies of any book wherein there shall be copyright, and of which entry shall have been made in the said Registry book, and which shall have been unlawfully printed without the consent of the registered proprietor of such copyright in writing under his hand first obtained, shall be deemed to be the property of the proprietor of such copyright and who shall be registered as such, and such registered proprietor shall, after demand thereof in writing, be entitled to sue for and recover the same or damages for the detention thereof." The learned Judge in the court below seems to have accepted the contention of the respondent that it was the duty of the appellant to deliver up all printed copies of the book in his possession to the respondent at Aligarh because the respondent resides at Aligarh or because the demand was made from Aligarh. We are unable to take this view. It seems quite clear that the place of residence of the person who makes the demand for surrender of pirated copies of a book or other work is altogether beside the question. If the respondent was justified in bringing his suit in Aligarh, it must be reason of the fact that he called upon the appellant to deliver the books to him at Aligarh. But the law does not require a person in possession of pirated copies of a book to deliver them to the proprietor of the copyright at any place selected by him, no matter what the expense of doing so may be. It appears to us that there is no justification for imposing on a person in the position of the appellant a burden which the Legislature has not laid upon him. In this connection it must be remembered that section 12 of the Copyright Act applies as much to the innocent possessor of a pirated copy of a book as to the printer or publisher in possession of a whole edition of pirated copies of a book, and the same duty is cast upon both. We cannot think that, it was the intention of Legislature to require every person in possession of a pirated copy of a book to deliver it up to the proprietor of the copyright in the book at any place selected by the latter. [28] In our opinion the cause of action in the present case arose at Lahore, where also the defendant appellant resides, and under section 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, which was in force when the suit was brought, the suit should have been instituted in Lahore. We therefore allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the court below, and direct that the plaint be returned to the respondent in order that he may present it to the proper court. The respondent will pay the appellant's costs in this Court. The parties will have their own costs in the court below.

Appeal allowed.

When a mahal has been perfectly partitioned, no right of pre-emption under the Muhammadan law subsists in favour of the owner of one of the new mahals in respect of the other new mahal or any portion of it on the ground of vicinage alone. Mahadeo Sing v. Mussamut Zeenut-un-nissa (1), Sheikh Mahomed Hossein v. Shaw Mohsin Ali (2) and Abdul Rahim Khan v. Kharag Singh (3) referred to. Nor will the fact that a village chaupal has remained undivided give the owner of either of the new mahals a right of pre-emption against the owner of the other as a shafi-i-khalit. Rahtab Singh v. Tahal Misser (4) and Shaik Karim Buksh v. Kamar-ud-deen Ahamad (5) distinguished. Abdul Rahim Khan v. Kharag Singh (3) and Lalla Puriag Dutt v. Shaikh Bundek Hossein (6) referred to.

But a right of pre-emption as shafi-i-sharik may subsist in relation to villages in large estates equally with houses, garden and small plots of ground. Sheikh Mahomed Hossein v. Shaw Mohsin Ali (2) and Sheikh Karim Buksh v. Kamr-ud-deen Ahmad. (5) referred to.

THE facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment of the Court.

The Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru, Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba and Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal and the Hon'ble Nawab Muhammad Abdul Majid, for the respondents.

[29] TUDBALL and CHAMIER, JJ.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption in respect to three separate mahals, being portions of three villages, Jarthal, Rasulpur-Gadhouli and Bidhuni, in the district of Etah. The plaintiff respondent, Musammat Hajira Jan, is the own sister of Musammat Zobaida Jan, defendant No. 3.

The claim is based on Muhammadan Law. The plaintiff, while admitting that the shares of her sister and herself had in each village been partitioned and separate mahals had been formed, pleaded that the partitions had been made "khaibat" and not "chakbat"; that the village site of Jarthal had not been divided; that the mahals were contiguous to each other and that certain rights of way, water-courses and other rights had been left common to the mahals in each village. She therefore claimed the right of pre-emption.

(1) As a shafi-i-sharik, or co-sharer in the thing sold.

(2) As a shafi-i-khalit, or co-sharer in the appurtenant rights.

(3) As a shafi-i-jar, or contiguous neighbour.

The sale-deed which has given rise to this suit was executed on the 19th June, 1906, by Zobaida Jan in favour of the first two defendants, Munna Lal and Gulzari Lal, who are Hindus, in lieu of Rs. 17,900. The 6th and 7th grounds entered in the memorandum of appeal relating to the preliminary demands, not having been pressed in this Court, the defence, so far as we are concerned within this appeal was:—

(1) That the mahals of the vendor and the pre-emptor had been perfectly partitioned and that nothing was left joint, and therefore that the plaintiff could not claim pre-emption as a shafi-i-sharik.

(2) That the plaintiff was not a shafi-i-khalit, in that there were no common rights appurtenant to each of the mahals.

(3) That the "appurtenances" relied upon by the plaintiff were rights of a public nature and not of a private nature and could not give rise to a right of pre-emption.

(4) That the rule of vicinage or contiguity did not apply to large estates like separate mahals.

[30] (5) That under the Muhammadan law there was no right of pre-emption except in regard to small plots of land and houses.

The lower court decreed the claim. It held that though the partition in each village was a perfect partition "there was no doubt that wells, passages and watercourses and the village site of Jarthal (abadi) were 'joint.'" The word "passage" is the lower court's interpretation of the word "rasta" or "roadway." The so-called watercourses are the small channels which cultivators make to conduct water from their wells to the fields they seek to irrigate. They are usually made annually, along the edges of their fields and sometimes across them. The lower court, therefore, held that the plaintiff was both a shafi-i-sharik and a shafi-i-khalit. In respect to the latter capacity it also remarked that the tanks do not appear to have been divided by metes and bounds. In regard to the claim on the basis of "vicinage," it held that though ordinarily when mahals had been separated no right of pre-emption on this basis could be allowed, still in the present case, as the partition had been made "khetbat" and the various plots constituting the two mahals in question were so intermixed that most of the plots allotted to one co-sharer were surrounded by those allotted to the other or adjoined them, their right could be claimed on the basis of vicinage also; for to decide otherwise would be to hold contrary to the principles on which the law of pre-emption is based.

It also held that in the case of large estates the rights of pre-emption could be claimed on the grounds of partnership in the estate and partnership in the common appurtenances.

The defendants vendees appeal, and the points pressed before us and which call for our decision are:—

(1) That the partition in each case was perfect, nothing was left joint;

(2) That no "appurtenances" or common rights of a private nature are in existence and those of a public nature give no rise to a right of pre-emption;

(3) That in the case of large separate estates like those in question there can be no right of pre-emption on the basis of vicinage or contiguity;

[31] (4) That the Muhammadan law of pre-emption only applies to houses, gardens and small plots of land and not to large estates. This last ground of appeal was but feebly pressed.

In the case of Shaikh Mahomed Hossein v. Shaw Mohsin Ali (1) it was held by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court that a partner (shafi-i-sharik) has a right of pre-emption in villages of large estates.

In 1874, in the case of Shaik Karim Buksh v. Kamr-ud-deen Ahmad (2), it was held that pre-emption extends to agricultural estates and is not confined to urban properties or small plots. There are numerous other decisions on the point to be found in the Law Reports, e.g., 10 W. R. 314; 15 W. R., 223; 12 W. R. 484, in which pre-emption was allowed in the case of large estates. In nearly all these instances it was allowed on the ground of partnership in the thing sold. There is therefore no force in this plea.

The next question for decision relates to the nature and extent of the partition, and we have to see whether any portion of the original mahals were left undivided and whether any rights or appurtenances were left common to the two mahals into which each of the original ones was subdivided and the nature of these common rights if any.

The Subordinate Judge, while stating that the partition (which admittedly was made by the Revenue Courts under the Land Revenue Act) was "perfect," held that "wells, passages and watercourses and the village site of Jarthal" were left joint. He sets forth the oral evidence on the point given by the parties, but omits to state what he accepts or rejects of that evidence, and fails even to mention the documentary evidence on the record. It is not possible to extract from his judgment the grounds on which he held the above to be joint.

The plaintiff in her plaint admitted that separate mahals had been formed. Separate mahals are only formed in partitions by the Revenue Court where the partition is "perfect."

After discussing the evidence as to the nature of the partition which had taken place, the judgment then proceeded :—

This evidence shows clearly that the partitions were perfect [32] in every way, and there was nothing left to be jointly held or used by the zamindars. The latter do not reside in any of these three villages and have no sir lands. They have a collection house or chaupal in mauza Jarthal : that house was not within the scope of a partition by a Revenue Court, but the land on which it stood has been divided.

The patwari's evidence, even if it stood alone, would be amply sufficient to rebut the vague and bald statements of the plaintiff's witnesses ; but it receives corroboration and support from the partition proceeding of mauza Jarthal, and the settlement records filed by the defendant. The settlement took place after the partition, and each mahal was recorded as a separate 20 biswa mahal with a separate record of rights, and the various plots in the separate mahals were separately numbered.

The defendant produced at a late stage of the case the partition proceeding of the other two villages, but the lower court refused to accept them. They have been tendered here again, but there is no adequate reason put forward for their non-production at the proper time, and we have refused to accept them.

The essence of a perfect partition is the division of every thing that is divisible. Burial grounds and places of worship are usually not divided. In the present case there are none. In some cases wells, tanks, watercourses and embankments are of necessity left to be joint property of the co-sharers, but the court has to determine the extent to which the proprietors may use them, the proportions in which repair charges have to be borne and the manner in which the profits, if any, have to be divided.

In the present case, as the patwari shows, everything has been divided.

His evidence as to the result of the partition is worthy of all belief. It is highly improbable that he would testify falsely on points in regard to which, to his own knowledge, there existed public documents which could prove the truth. The defendants have been negligent in not having called for the partition record. We, however, accept the evidence of the patwari and hold that nothing was left, after partition, as the joint property of the [33] co-sharers. The village chaupal in Jarthal is apparently still the joint property of the parties. But the land on which it stands has been divided. The roadway and watercourses have even been divided, and the soil thereof is the property of the owners of the various mahals, but all public and private rights of way remain as before. The co-sharers are not shown to have any private rights of way or water. Public rights remain unaffected; so also do the rights of the tenants in respect to irrigation. The co-sharers own no wells and having no sir lands have no private rights of irrigation over each other's lands.

The abadi of Jarthal, i.e., the soil, has been divided. The residents remain the owners of their houses as before, with all rights which they had acquired. The co-sharers do not reside in these villages.

As to khalyans and sugarcane presses, there are no lands specially set apart for these, and neither party is shown to have any rights in respect thereto over the separate mahals of the other. In our opinion the plaintiff has completely failed to establish her position as a shafi-i-sharik in the zamindari mahal which she seeks to pre-empt.

She has equally failed, in our opinion, to establish her position as a shafi-i-khalit. The fact that a tenant irrigates his field in one mahal from his well situated in another mahal does not constitute the plaintiff a shafi-i-khalit. Nor does the fact that she and the vendor are tenants in common of the chaupal put her into that position. The ownership of the house is distinct and separate from that of the zamindari. A sale of the latter does not necessarily include a sale of the former.

Reliance is placed on the ruling in Mahtab Singh v. Ram Tahal Misser (1). It was therein held that the plaintiff as a partner in the Julkur and Neemuksaher was a shafi-i-khalit. An examination of the judgement will show that there had been in that case an imperfect partition into pattis, and the Julkur and Neemuksaher had been reserved and not divided. These are rights from which part of the income of a mahal is derived. In the present case no such rights have been reserved and left undivided. There has been a complete separation of all [34] zamindari right. A chaupal is but a house and may be adapted to any other use to which a house may be put.

The case of Shaikh Karim Buksh v. Kumr-ud-deen Ahmad (2) does not help the plaintiff. That also was a case of imperfect partition in which some land and tanks and trees were left joint and undivided between the co-sharers. In the case of Abdul Rahim Khan v. Kharag Singh (3) it was held, in a case similar in many ways to the present, that no right of pre-emption arose from the fact that a burial ground and a chaupal had remained undivided. There had been a perfect partition, as here, and a burial ground and a chaupal were left common property. See also the case of Lalla Puriag Datt v. Shaikh Bundeh Hossein (4). In our opinion the plaintiff is not a shafi-i-khalit. She has no rights of easement over the defendant's mahal, nor do the owners of the two mahals share any rights or appurtenances.

There remains the question of "vicinage." The right of pre-emption has been allowed in the case of zamindaris and large estates in many cases on the ground of partnership and in a few cases on the ground of partnership in the rights and appurtenances by the Indian Courts, and our attention has been called to the various rulings. Not a single case has been quoted (nor have we been able to find one) in which in such a case as this pre-emption has been allowed on the ground of vicinage. On the contrary there are several reported decisions in which the claim in such cases on this ground has been repelled and disallowed.

In Mahtab Singh v. Ram Tahal Misser (1) the claim was made both as shafi-i-khalit and shafi-i-jar. It was decreed to the plaintiff only in the former capacity.

In Mahadeo Singh v. Mussamat Zeenut-un-nisa (1) it was ruled that after perfect partition of a zamindari share, no claim on ground of vicinage would remain. In Sheikh Mahomed Hossein v. Shaw Mohsin Ali (2) a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that in the case of villages and large estates no right of pre-emption could be claimed on the ground of vicinage, and that such a right based on vicinage was restricted to the case of houses, gardens and small plots of land.

[35] In the case of Abdul Rahim Khan v. Kharag Singh, mentioned above, it was held by a Bench of this Court that where an estate had been divided into two separate mahals no right of pre-emption under the Muhammadan law would subsist on behalf of one of such mahals in respect of the other, merely by reason of vicinage. The Subordinate Judge has tried to distinguish the present case from all these rulings on the ground that the partition of the villages in suit was " khetbat " and not "chakbat" and the fields which constitute the two mahals are all intermixed. The same plea has been raised before us, and it is urged that if the vendor had sold each field separately by a separate sale-deed, the plaintiff would have been entitled to pre-emption on the ground of vicinage if one of her plots adjoined it. The argument is specious, but has no force. The vendor has not sold each plot separately, but the mahal as a whole. In very few partitions is it possible to divide a mahal into large blocks of equal value. Where possible this is always done, but it is seldom possible. The rights of the tenants have to be considered in assessing the value of the land to the zamindar. Many have occupancy rights and many pay favourable rates of rent by reason of their caste or for other causes.

In the large majority of partitioned mahals, the fields of the resultant mahals will be found intermixed, and we do not think that this is a sufficient reason for holding that vicinage will give the plaintiff a right to pre-empt.

We would point out that there are many villages in these provinces which have fields standing right in the midst of the fields of other villages. As between such villages or between adjacent villages the right of pre-emption has never been allowed by (and probably never claimed in) the courts of this country. When a mahal is perfectly partitioned into two parts, these two new mahals stand to each other in the same relation as two separate villages. Many villages, or mauzas, have no inhabited site.

We do not deem it right to extend the right of pre-emption beyond the bounds which have been set to it by the courts in India in a long course of decisions. In our opinion when a mahal has been perfectly partitioned, no right of pre-emption [36] under the Muhammadan law subsists in favour of the owner of one of the new mahals in respect to the other new mahal or any portion of it, on the ground of vicinage alone. In this view we allow the appeal and set aside the decree of the lower court. The suit will stand dismissed with costs in both courts. The costs incurred by the respondent in the matter of printing and translating in this Court are costs in the cause and will fall on the respondent herself. The costs incurred by the appellants in the translating and printing of the rejected fresh evidence will not be the costs in the cause and must be borne by the appellants themselves.

This aggregate sum of Rs. 208-12-0 consisted of various items, some eighteen in all, which the accused was alleged to have received at various times between the dates mentioned [37] and from various persons. On this charge the accused was convicted and sentenced by the Assistant Sessions Judge of Meerut. On appeal to the Sessions Judge, however, the conviction and sentence were set aside and a retrial ordered, the Sessions Judge being of opinion that the case fell within the ruling of the Privy Council in Subramania Ayyar v. King-Emperor (6) and that the trial was an illegality in that the prosecution was able to prove the embezzlement of eighteen specific items and therefore the accused should have been charged separately in respect of separate items and not on the aggregate sum. Against this order the Local Government applied to the High Court in revision.

TUDBALL and CHAMIER, JJ.:—This is an application in revision filed by the Local Government seeking to have cancelled the order of the Sessions Judge of Meerut, whereby he set aside the conviction and sentence passed by the Assistant Sessions Judge of that district, upon Ibrahim Khan, in respect to an offence under section 409, Indian Penal Code, and ordered a retrial of the case.

The question raised in the case involves the true construction of clause (2), section 222, Criminal Procedure Code.

The accused, Ibrahim Khan, was a naib darogha, employed in the Meerut Cantonments, and the charge against him is, that in that capacity he realized the total sum of Rs. 208-12-0 as grazing fees, from various persons who grazed cattle on the Cantonment grass lands between the 1st July and 1st November, 1909, and embezzled the same, failing to pay it into the Treasury.

The sum of Rs. 208-12-0 consists of some eighteen items, which the accused is said to have collected on dates (somewhat uncertain) between the 1st July and 1st November, 1909. Apparently he had no power to expend any money, but it was his duty to pay it in as he collected it, presumably daily. One charge in respect of the gross sum was framed against him, in view of the provision in clause (2), section 222, Criminal Procedure Code, and being [38] committed for trial, he was found guilty and convicted by the Assistant Sessions Judge.

On appeal the Sessions Judge held that in view of the rulings reported in I. L. R., 17 All., 153 and 18 All., 116, and the Privy Council ruling in Subramania Ayyar v. King-Emperor. (1) the trial was an illegality, in that the prosecution was able to prove the embezzlement of eighteen specific items, and therefore he should have been charged separately in regard to each item embezzled, there being in fact eighteen separate offences. In this view he set aside the conviction and sentence and ordered a retrial. It is this order which we are now asked to set aside on revision. It is contended that in view of the plain language of clause (2) of section 222, Criminal Procedure Code, and the rulings of this Court and of the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras, reported in I. L. R. 24 All., 254; 27 All., 69; 31 Cal., 928; 32 Cal., 1085; 29 Mad. 558, all of dates subsequent to the alteration of the law in 1898, the decision of the lower court is incorrect, and that the Sessions Judge has relied upon decisions which were passed prior to the Code of 1898

Section 222, clause (1) of the Code sets forth the particulars as to time, place and person which have to be entered in a charge sheet.

When the Code of 1898 became law, clause (2) was added to the section. It runs as follows: —"When the accused is charged with criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money, it shall be sufficient to specify the gross sum in respect of which the offence is alleged to have been committed and the dates between which the offence is alleged to have been committed without specifying particular items or exact dates, and the charge so framed shall be deemed to be a charge of one offence within the meaning of section 234. Provided that the time included between the first and the last of such dates shall not exceed one year."

The plain meaning of the above language appears to us to be that where a man in a certain capacity is entrusted from time to time with various sums of money and commits criminal breach of trust in respect thereto, he may be charged with an offence [39] in respect to the gross sum embezzled, and it is not necessary to specify the particular items embezzled, or the exact dates on which they were so embezzled, and that a charge so framed shall be deemed to be a charge of one offence, provided that the period within which such embezzlement has taken place is not more than one year.

Section 234 allows of the trial of an accused person at one trial in respect to three offences of the same kind committed within the space of twelve months. If the accused embezzled more than three separate specific items on specific dates, in the same capacity, within the period of twelve months, he could (under section 234) be tried at one trial in respect to only three of such items were it nor for clause (2) of section 222 of the Code which lays down that in such a case he may be charged in respect to the gross sum embezzled without specifying the particular items or exact dates, and that such a charge shall be deemed to be a charge of one offence within the meaning of section 234.

It is quite clear that the latter section is qualified by the former to a certain extent. Nor is there anything in the language of clause (2), section 222, which goes to show that where particular items and exact dates can be specified, they shall be so specified and the section shall not apply and that the accused shall be charged and tried in respect to each item or set of three items.

This is the view taken of the meaning of this section in the case of Emperor v. Gulzari Lal (1), and this was followed in the case reported in I. L. R. 27 All. 69.

The same view was adopted by the Calcutta High Court in the cases reported in I. L. R. 31 Cal. 928; 32 Cal. 1085 and by the Madras High Court in the case reported in I. L. R. 29 Mad. 558.

While admitting that the weight of authority is against him, the learned counsel for the accused has pressed the contention that the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1898 amended the law in this matter simply with a view to set at rest the conflict of decision between this Court and the Calcutta High Court in respect to those cases in which the prosecution is able only to [40] establish a general deficiency and has no means of proving the exact dates and particular items. Prior to 1898 this Court had held that where a general deficiency could be established, the accused could be charged and convicted in respect thereto. (Vide I. L. R. 17 All. 153; 18 All. 116.) The Calcutta High Court ruled otherwise in I. L. R. 24 Cal. 193.

It is further contended that the Legislature did not intend to introduce any organic change in the law by enacting the Code of 1898, that the clause in question was intended to cover cases in which the accused after receiving many sums at different times has on a certain date embezzled the whole amount thus received or part of it, i.e., where there has been really only one act of embezzlement and also cases of general deficiency where it is impossible to give particular items or specific dates.

It is urged that clause (2) controls clause (1), and that an accused might be greatly prejudiced by being tried at one trial in respect to a thousand different items, or more, embezzled within the twelve months on specific dates, by reason of the complexity of the case. The contention as to the intention of the Legislature may be a correct one, but we have primarily to look to the language used by the Legislature to ascertain its meaning and intention. Where that language is plain and unambiguous, as in the present case, we are not allowed to look at extraneous matters and read other language into the section so as to give it a meaning which we may believe the Legislature intended to express.

Our attention has been called to the case of Emperor v. Kashinath Bagaji Sali (1), in which it was held by Mr. Justice CHANDAVARKAR, that where there have been defalcations in respect of different items in the course of twelve months, there the Court can try a man in respect of three offences by selecting different items combining those items into one lump sum and of making the selection so as to get at three sums, the appropriation of each constituting an offence by itself. The decision may or may not be correct, but we fail to see that it goes so far as to hold that all the sums may not be put together to form one gross sum and the accused charged in respect to the gross sum so arrived at; such a [41] charge is clearly deemed to be a charge of one offence within the meaning of section 233 (vide clause 2 of section 222). If it goes so far as is contended before us, we cannot agree with it.

Nor can we see that the accused has in the present case been at all prejudiced at his trial.

In our opinion the order of the Sessions Judge is wrong. We allow this application, set aside his order and direct that the appeal be decided on its merits according to law.

Order set aside.

GOPI (Defendant) v. MUSAMMAT JALDHARA (Plaintiff).*

[4th July, 1910.]

Hindu Law—Will—Construction—Bequest in favour of two married daughters—Joint tenancy or tenancy in common.

A Hindu died leaving a will whereby he bequeathed the whole of his property to his two married daughters without specification of shares. Held that the estate taken by the legatees was a tenancy in common and not a joint tenancy.

Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (1) followed.

[Fol. 37 All. 241; Ref. 20 I. C. 756; 62 I. C. 436; 33 All. 665 : 62 I. C. 436.]

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

On the 28th of February, 1881, one Mohan Lal executed a will in favour of his two daughters, Lila and Maya, in the following terms:—

"I Mohan Lal, son of Har Dayal, Brahman by caste, alias Dubi, resident of Kasba Soron Khas, district Etah, declare as follows:—

"Life is transient, therefore it is necessary for every person to make such arrangement during his lifetime that after his death his name may be perpetuated and commemorated in this world. I am now about 55 years old and have got no son. I am in proprietary possession of the whole of the movable and immovable property up to the present time. No stranger or a relative of mine is a partner or sharer with me. No one else besides me is in possession and enjoyment of the property. Therefore, while in a sound state of body and mind, I make a will under this deed of will that after my death my daughters, Musammats Lila and Maya, shall be the owners in possession of the whole of the property in my possession specified below, like myself. If any ralative or sharer comes forward and brings any claim against my daughters, Lila and Maya, then his claim shall be false under this will. It is necessary for Musammats Lila and Maya to provide [42] with pleasure Musaminat (paper torn) with food if she lives after my death during her lifetime with her consent. I have therefore executed these few presents by way of a will in order that it may serve as evidence"

Both the daughters survived Mohan Lal. Lila subsequently died, leaving a daughter, Jaldhara, and a husband, Bhaskaran. On the 31st May, 1900, Maya, the surviving daughter, and Bhaskaran executed a mortgage of one of the houses and of the birt jijmani books, to Gopi, who obtained a decree on his mortgage. Jaldhara then instituted the present suit. The court below found the will proved. The question raised in appeal was whether on the death of Lila, her sister Maya became entitled to the whole property as survivor of the two legatees under the will of Mohan Lal. The Court below held that the legatees were tenants in common and decreed the plaintiff's suit. The defendant appealed.

Mr. S. Shams-ad-din, for the appellant, contended that the principle of English law that a gift to two persons without words of division created a joint tenancy and not a tenancy in common, applied to the present case; Mankamna Kunwar v. Balkishna Das (1). He also submitted that under the Hindu Law daughters get a joint estate in the property inherited from their father. He referred to Mayne's Hindu Law, ed. 7, para. 563, Sant Kumar v. Deo Saran (2) and Venkayyamma Garu v. Venkataramanayyamma Bahadur Garu (3).

Munshi Gulzari Lal, for the respondent, submitted that the principle relied on by the appellant was a highly technical rule of the English law of conveyancing and did not apply to India. He cited Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (4), Bhoba Tarini Debya v. Peary Lall Sanyal (5) and Lakshmibai v. Hirabai (6) which was affirmed on appeal in Hirabai v. Lakshmibai (7).

Mr. S. Shams-ud-din was heard in reply.

STANLEY, C. J., and GRIFFIN, J.—The sole question in this appeal depends upon the true construction of the will of one [43] Mohan Lal, dated the 28th of February, 1881. Mohan Lal had two daughters, namely, Lila and Maya. Both these daughters were married, Bhaskaran being the husband of Lila. Lila left a daughter, namely, the plaintiff Jaldhara. According to the will of Mohan Lal, which is a short document, after setting out that life was transient and therefore it was necessary for every person to make arrangements during his lifetime so that after his death his name may be perpetuated and commemorated, he directs that after his death his daughters, Musammats Lila and Maya, shall be the owners in possession of the whole of the property in his possession like himself. Nothing is to be found in the will to qualify the terms of this gift. The sole question before us is whether or not this gift to his two daughters was a gift to them as tenants in common or as joint tenants. Bhaskaran, the husband of Lila, and Maya executed a mortgage on the 31st of May, 1900, of a house which belonged to the testator, in favour of the defendant appellant Gopi, and it is his contention that the gift was a gift to the two daughters in joint tenancy, and therefore the survivor Maya was able to give a valid mortgage of the entire house. On the other hand it is contended that according to the rule of construction to be applied in the case of a Hindu will the gift in question was a gift to the two daughters as tenants in common. The court below held that it was such a gift and decreed the plaintiff's claim for a declaration that the plaintiff is the owner in possession of one-half of the property in dispute by right of inheritance from her mother Lila.

The question appears to us to be concluded by the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (4). The testator in that case made a gift in the following terms:—"The remaining 4-anna share I give to you Srimati Rani Doorga Kumari, and the son born to your womb, Jogeswar Narain Deo, for your maintenance." This was followed by a direction in the following terms:—"Upon my death you and your son and grandsons, et cetera, in due order of succession, shall hold possession of the zamindari, et cetera, according to the above distribution of shares. And I give to you the power of making alienation by sale or gift." It was there [44] contended, upon the authority of Vydinada v. Nagammal (1), that by the terms of the will the Rani and her son, Jogeswar Narain Deo, became joint tenants of the 4-anna share and not tenants in common. In Vydinada v. Nagammal a Hindu by his will granted jointly to his brother's son and Nagammal, the wife of the latter, certain lands with power of alienation, and it was held in accordance with the rule of English conveyancing governing a gift of the kind that the grantees were joint tenants and not tenants in common. Their Lordships of the Privy Council overruled this decision, stating that there were two substantial reasons why it ought not to be followed as an authority, the first of these being "that the learned Judges of the High Court of Madras were not justified in importing into the construction of a Hindu will an extremely technical rule of English conveyancing." "The principle of joint tenancy," they observed, "appears to be unknown to Hindu law, except in the case of coparcenary between the members of an undivided family." By this decision of their Lordships we are bound in the present case, the facts of which appear to be on all fours with those in the case of Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt. We may point out that the gift was not made to members of a joint Hindu family but to the two daughters of the testator, both of whom were married women. It is most unlikely that the testator would, under such circumstances, have given his property to his own daughters in joint tenancy. We think, therefore, that the decision of the court below was correct and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

HASAN ALI (Plaintiff) v. MIAN JAN KHAN AND ANOTHER (Defendants.)*

[6th July, 1910.]

Pre-emption—Claim of pre-emptor based on purchase by him of another share in the same mahal—Claim made before confirmation of sale in plaintiff's favour—Civil Procedure Code, section 316.

Held, with reference to section 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, that a purchaser at auction sale in execution of a decree of a share in zamindari property does not become a co-sharer in the mahal in which such property is situate until the sale has been confirmed in his favour.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

The plaintiff appellant purchased a share in a village on the 20th June, 1907, at an auction sale. The sale was confirmed on the 24th July, 1907. On the 23rd July, 1907, another share in the village was sold by a private sale to one Muhammad Taki by the respondent. The plaintiff sued for pre-emption with respect to this latter property as a co-sharer in the village by virtue of the former sale. Mutation of names had not been effected in the interval between the sale of the 20th June and its confirmation on the 24th July, 1907. The courts below dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The case came up for hearing before KARAMAT HUSAIN, J., who referred it to a Bench of two Judges by the following order:

"The suit out of which this appeal arose was for pre-emption on the basis of a wazib-ul-arz. The pre-emptor, on the 20th of June 1907, purchased a share which was sold by auction. That sale was confirmed on the 24th of July, 1907. The property which the pre emptor sought to pre-empt was sold under a sale-deed of the 23rd of July, 1907. The case for the pre-emptor was that he became a co-sharer on the date of the auction sale, that is the 20th of June, 1907, and that therefore he was a co-sharer for the purposes of pre-emption on the 23rd of July, 1907, when the property, the subject-matter of the suit, was sold to the defendant vendee. The case for the defendant vendee was that the pre-emptor did not become a co-sharer until the confirmation of the sale on the 24th of July, 1907. Both the courts below accepted the contention of the defendant and dismissed the plaintiff's claim. In second appeal by the plaintiff it is contended by his learned advocate that the ownership of the property purchased at an auction sale vests in the purchaser on the date of that sale, and that being the case, the pre-emptor is entitled to succeed. In support of this contention reliance is placed on the following ruling namely, second Appeal No. 194 of 1908, decided by a single Judge of this Court on the 6th of April, 1909, which in [46] very clear terms lays down that the ownership of a property sold by auction passes to the vendee on the date of the auction sale. In addition to that ruling the learned advocate relies on Jagannath v. Baldeo (1), Chiddo v. Piare Lal (2), Bhyrub Chunder Bundopadhya v. Soudamani Dubee, (3), Chatraput Singh v. Girindra Chunder Roy (4), Durga Narain Sen v. Baney Madhub Mazoomdar (5), Dagdu v. Panchamsing Gangaram (6) and Musammat Buhuns Kowur v. Lalla Buhooree Lall (7). The learned vakil for the respondents on the other hand contends that under section 316 of the old Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 the property vests in the auction purchaser on the date of the confirmation of the sale and not before. In support of this contention he relies on Amir Kazim v. Darbari Mal (8) which fully supports him. In addition to that he also relies on Sheo Narain v. Hira (9), Gobind Ram v. Tulsi Ram (10) and Prem Chand Pal v. Purnima Dasi (11). He further says that the rulings in Naigar Timapa v. Bhaskar Parmaya (12), Banke Lal v. Jagat Narain (13), Karuna Moyi Banerjee v. Surendra Nath Mukerjee (14) and Harkisandas Narandas v. Bai Ichha (15) help him in a way. Personally I am of opinion that the date of the passing of ownership to an auction purchaser ought to be the date of the auction sale, inasmuch as all the ingredients necessary to complete the sale come into existence on that date. But as there is a conflict of authority in this Court on this point, which will appear from comparing second Appeal No. 194 of 1908, decided on the 6th of April, 1909, with the case reported in I. L. R. 24 All 475, I deem it desirable that this point be considered by a Bench of two Judges. I order accordingly."

The case then came up for hearing before STANLEY, C. J., and KNOX, J.

Mr. Abdul Raoof for the appellant cited, Dagdu v. Pancham Singh Gangaram (6) and Chiddo v. Piari Lal (2).

Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq, for the respondent, relied on Amir Kazim v. Darbari Mal (8) and Sham Lal v. Nathi Lal (16).

STANLEY, C. J., and KNOX, J.—For the purposes of this second appeal it is necessary to note that the appellant, Hasan Ali, purchased a share in a certain mahal at an auction sale on the 20th of June, 1907. The sale did not become absolute until the 24th of July, 1907. On the 23rd of July, 1907 one Mianjan Khan, a share-holder in the same mahal, sold his share by private [47] sale to one Muhammad Taqi. The present appellant has brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, to enforce under the wajib-ul-arz his right to pre-empt the share sold by Mianjan Khan to Muhammad Taqi. Both the Courts below dismissed the claim, on the ground that the plaintiff was not a share-holder in the property, in respect of which he claims the right to pre-empt, at the time when the share was sold, namely, the 23rd of July, 1907.

In appeal to this Court it was contended that the appellant acquired his title from the date of sale and not from the date of confirmation of the sale. Looking to the terms of section 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure, of 1882, which was the law governing the matter at the time the suit was brought, we have no doubt that the view taken by the Courts below was the right view. The plaintiff did not become hissedar of the mahal until the date when the sale became absolute, and his right to pre-emption could not arise until the sale had been confirmed in his favour. We may point out that by the present Code of Civil Procedure, section 65, the law has been altered in this respect. Some misapprehension appears to us to prevail as to the meaning of the words used in section 316, viz., "So far as regards the parties claiming through or under them." In Dagdu v. Pancham Singh Gangaram (1), TELANG, J., treats these words as though they meant that the Court purported to convey an absolute title to the purchaser. But a court acting under section 316 does not guarantee title; all that it does is to convey the right, title and interest in the property of the parties to the suit before it. So far as these parties are concerned it guarantees that the judgment-debtor shall not recover back the property sold, and that from the date entered in the certificate the purchaser becomes entitled to whatever interest the judgment-debtor was possessed of on the date when the sale was held. We think that the words mentioned above were used to preclude any suggestion that the interests of third parties were affected by the certificate that the title to the property sold has vested in the purchaser. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

THE applicants in this case were, with others, convicted of the offences of rioting and causing grievous hurt and sentenced by a magistrate of the second class to six months, rigorous imprisonment under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code, and to 3 months under section 325 read with section 149 of the Code. They appealed to the District Magistrate, who dismissed their appeals, and, acting under section 106 (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, ordered the applicants to find security to keep the peace. The applicants came in revision to the High Court, contending, first, that the order for security was bad, inasmuch as the Court which originally tried them had no power to make any such order under section 106 (1) of the Code, and, secondly, that separate sentences for offences under sections 147 and 325 of the Indian Penal Code, committed in the Course of the same transaction were illegal.

Babu Durga Charan Singh, for the applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate (Mr. R. Malcomson) for the Crown.

TUDBALL, J.—The facts of the case out of which this application for revision has arisen may briefly be stated as follows:—

[49] Two parties claimed title to certain mahua trees. One party apparently was in possession and peaceably engaged in gathering the fruit when the opposite party arrived armed with lathis, drove them away, and took possession. In the course of the riot grievous hurt was inflicted by some member or members of the applicants, (the aggressive) party. The two present applicants have been convicted by a Magistrate of the second class and have been sentenced for the offence of riot under section 147, I. P. C., to six months' rigorous imprisonment each, and for the offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt under section 325, I. P. C., read with section 149. I. P. C., to three months' rigorous imprisonment each, i. e., a total of nine months' rigorous imprisonment each. The applicants appealed to the District Magistrate, who dismissed their appeal, confirmed the convictions and sentences, and acting under section 106, clause (3), of the Criminal Procedure Code, ordered the present applicants to furnish security to keep the peace.

Two points are raised in this Court by the applicants. The first is that the order of the District Magistrate purporting to have been passed under section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was without jurisdiction in that the Magistrate who originally tried the case had no power to pass an order under section 106, clause (1). The second point is that the sentences passed by the Magistrate are illegal. The applicants base their first contention upon a ruling of the Madras High Court in Muthiah Chetti v. Emperor (2). In that case a Bench of that Court held that "the power given to an appellate court to make an order under this section is not an unlimited power to make such an order in any circumstances, but is to be taken as giving the appellate court power to do only that which the lower court could and should have done, and therefore that the power of the court to pass such an order is confined to cases where the conviction has been by a court named in the section and in circumstances required by the section." The learned Judges gave no reason for their opinion. This was followed in another case, Paramasiva Pillai v. Emperor (1). In the case of Dorasami Naidu v. Emperor (2), though this ruling was followed, its correctness was clearly [50] doubted. The Judges who constituted that Bench remarked as follows :—" Although we are not prepared to dissent from the construction which has been placed upon clause (3) of the section, having regard to the language used, yet we think it may well be doubted whether the Legislature intended that the power of the appellate court and of the High Court when exercising its powers of revision should be confined to such narrow limits." They then proceed to give what in my opinion are very good reasons for holding that the section places no limit on the power of the appellate court. Clause (3) of the section distinctly says that an order under this section may "also" be made by an appellate court. There is nothing in the language of the section which in my opinion limits the power of an appellate court. This point was also considered in Emperor v. Momin Malita (3), where the ruling in 29 Madras, 190, was followed, but no reason was given. It was also considered by the Bombay High Court in Emperor v. Bhausingh Dhumalsingh (4). The Madras cases were quoted before the court. The judgement runs as follows :—" We are not prepared to accept the construction placed upon section 106 in those cases. We think that the clause (3) makes it clear that the order for security may be made in appeal whether the original court has jurisdiction to pass such an order or not. The clause runs 'An order under this section may also be made by an appellate court or by the High Court when exercising its powers of revision ; the word 'also' plainly implying that it may be independently made by those courts as well as by the original courts specified in the first ; and it is neither suggested nor implied that powers of the original court should in any way control or limit those of the appellate or revisional authority." The learned judges then refer to the case of Dorasami Naidu v. Emperor mentioned above, and, agree with the arguments of the learned judges therein, throwing doubt on the correctness of the decision in Muthiah Chetti v. Emperor (5). I fully agree with the opinion expressed by the Bombay High Court. In my judgement the power of an appellate court under clause (3) of the section is not limited in any way by the powers of original court which tried the case.

[51] In regard to the second point, the argument on behalf of the applicants is, that section 71 of the Indian Penal Code, applies to the circumstances of this case; and that under that section the maximum sentence which a Magistrate of the second class could pass was six month's rigorous imprisonment, and that therefore the total sentence of 9 month's imprisonment is illegal. The question whether section 71 applies to the facts of the present case is covered by authority. It was fully discussed in Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar (6). The circumstances of that case were similar to those of the present case. It was therein held that section 71 did not apply, and the Magistrate was empowered to pass separate sentences for each of the offences under sections 147 and 325, Indian Penal Code, to the full extent of his powers. That ruling has not, so far as we know, been differed from in this Court, but has been regularly followed, and I see no reason whatsoever to differ from it. I would therefore reject the application for revision.

CHAMIER, J :—On the first question, I entirely agree with what my learned brother has said and have nothing to add.

On the second question I consider I am bound by the previous decision of this Court to which he has referred, and which has, I understand, been consistently followed in this Court. I agree in the order proposed.

BY THE COURT.—Order of the Court is that the application for revision is rejected.

Application rejected.

ZAHARIA (Plaintiff) v. DEBIA AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

[9th July, 1910.]

Code of Civil Procedure (1908), section 11—Res-judicata—Two suits—One judgment, but two decrees—Appeal against one decree, before the decision of which the other decree becomes final.

M and Z each filed a suit for pre-emption in respect of the same sale, each claiming a right of pre-emption preferential to that of the other. Each plaintiff was made a party defendant to the suit brought by the other. A judgment was [52] delivered in the suit of M and a copy thereof was placed on the record as the judgement in the suit of Z; but a separate decree was framed in each suit. The suit of M was decreed, that of Z dismissed. Z appealed from the decree in his own suit, but not from the decree in the suit brought by M, which became final before Z's appeal was decided.

Held that the doctrine of res judicata applied and Z's appeal was barred. Chajju v. Sheo Sahai (1), Bal Kishen v. Kishen Lal (2), Ram Lal v. Chhab Nath (3), Mangli v. Narain (4), Kesho Tiwari v Sarju Kunwar (5), Abdul Basit v. Asfaq Husain (6) and other (unreported) cases of the Allahabad High Court approved and followed. Damodar Das v. Sheo Ram Das (7) overruled. Abdul Majid v. Jew Narain Mahto (8), Mariammissa Bibi v. Joynab Bibi (9) and Panchanada Velan v. Vaithianatha Sastrial (10) dissented from. Gururajammah v. Venkatakrishnama Chetti (11), referred to.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

Deba, Kesar and Jawitri sold some zamindari property to respondents 4 to 6 under a sale deed on the 9th August, 1907. Two suits were instituted in the court of the Munsif of Ghaziabad for pre-emption, with respect to the property sold. The first one was by Manphul and was registered as suit No. 1404 of 1908. The other was by Zaharia, the appellant in the present case, and was numbered 1405 of 1908. Each party claimed preferential rights of pre-emption to the other. The Munsif ordered that the plaintiff in the first case should be made defendant in the second and the plaintiff in the second, defendant in the first. He then tried both the suits together, and in a judgement delivered on the 15th December, 1908, decreed Manphul's suit and dismissed that of Zaharia, in spite of the fact that although some issues were common to the two cases, some were not. One judgement was delivered, in suit No. 1404, a copy thereof being placed upon the record of the suit No. 1405, but two decrees were prepared. Zaharia appealed from the decree of the Munsif in suit No. 1405. No appeal was filed from the decree in suit No. 1404. When the appeal came on for hearing before the District Judge of Meerut, the period for appeal from the decree in suit No. 1404 had expired. A Preliminary objection was taken by the respondents before the District Judge that as the decree in the connected suit 1404, [53] had not been appealed against and had become final, it operated as res-judicata in the appeal before him. The District Judge upheld the objection and dismissed the appellant's suit. The plaintiff appealed.

Babu Surendra Nath Sen, for the appellant :—

There was no warrant in the Civil Procedure Code for disposing of two suits by one judgement. There was one judgement in the two cases and practically one decree; its being written out, in duplicate made no difference. Section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure was an exhaustive statement of the doctrine of res judicata; Gokul Mandar v. Pudmanund Singh (1). The essentials of res judicata were that there should be a former adjudication which had to be final. There was no judgment which could be said to be anterior to the other, inasmuch as only one judgment was delivered.

A judgment could not be regarded as final when it was under appeal. He cited Mariamnissa Bibi v. Joynab Bibi (2), Panchanada Velan v. Vaithinatha Sastrial (3), Damodar Das v. Sheo Ram Das (4), Abdul Basit v. Ashfaq Husain (5), Gajadhar Parshad v. Musammat Lachmin (6), Baldeo Singh v. Dharam Kunwar (7), and Chunder Koomar v. Bakur Ali (8).

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the respondents :—

If issues are common to two suits, then in a case like the present the decree not appealed against and allowed to be final, would operate as res judicata in an appeal in the other suit. An appeal was filed against a decree and not against a judgment, as the decree was the only operative part. He cited Chajju v. Sheo Sahai (9), Bal Kishan v. Kishan Lal (10), Ram Lal v. Chhab Nath (11), Mangli v. Narain Das (12), Abdul Basit v. Ashfaq Husain (5), Gururajammah v. Venkatakrishnama Chetti (13), and Mariamnissa Bibi v. Joynab Bibi (2).

[54] The provisions of section 13 were not exhaustive; Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (14) and Mangal Pershad Dichit v. Girja Kant Lahiri (15).

Babu Surendra Nath Sen was heard in reply.

STANLEY, C. J.:—The question for our determination in this appeal is one of the application of the rule of res judicata. The appeal has been laid before a Bench of three judges owing to the recent decision in Damodar Das v. Sheo Ram Das (4), which is in conflict with the earlier decisions of this Court.

The appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The defendants, Deba, Musammat Kesar and Musammat Jawitri, on the 9th of August, 1907, sold certain zamindari property in the village of Newari to Bhuri Singh and two others. Thereupon two rival suits for pre-emption were instituted in the Court of the Munsif of Ghaziabad—one by Manphul, which was No. 1404 of 1908, and the other by the appellant, Zaharia, which was No. 1405 of 1908. By order of the Court Zaharia was made a defendant in suit No. 1404 and Manphul was made a defendant in suit No. 1405 with the object of having their respective rights determined. For convenience sake both suits were tried together without objection by the parties. Issues were knit, and amongst others the following :—

"Has Zaharia, rival pre-emptor, a preferential right against the plaintiff (i.e. Manphul) ; and if not, have both rival pre-emptors equal rights."

One judgment was delivered in the two suits, which was placed on the record of suit No. 1404, a copy being placed on the record of suit No. 1405. By this judgment the suit of Zaharia was dismissed and the suit of Manphul was decreed. A decree in each suit was passed. Zaharia filed an appeal in suit No. 1405, but did not appeal against the decree passed in suit No. 1404. When his appeal came on for hearing the time for appeal against the decree in suit No. 1404 had expired and a preliminary objection was raised to the hearing of the appeal, namely, that it was barred by the decree passed in suit No. 1404. It will be observed that it was necessary for the determination of [55] suit No. 1404, that the court should find whether or not Zaharia had a preferential right, or any right to pre-empt as against Manphul. The lower appellate court allowed the preliminary objection and dismissed the appeal. The learned District Judge in his judgment observes :—"It is obvious that even under the provisions of rule 33, order XLI, I could not set aside the decree in Manphul's favour to which Zaharia was a party. Thus if Zaharia's appeal were decreed, there would be in existence two contradictory decrees. Manphul has, I have ascertained, already paid in the money and secured the right of pre-emption over the property. If Zaharia's appeal were decreed, to which of the two, Manphul or Zaharia, should a court award the property ?" Against the decree this second appeal has been preferred.

In the case of Chajju v. Sheo Sahai (1), which is a case on all fours with the present, the question before us was considered. In that case two rival suits for pre-emption were instituted, in each of which each pre-emptor was made a defendant in the other suit. The suits were tried together upon the same evidence and were disposed of by a single judgment, but by separate decrees. In one of the suits the pre-emptor obtained a decree in the terms of section 214 of the former Code of Civil Procedure. In the other the pre-emptor obtained a decree subject to the condition that in the event of the first pre-emptor failing to execute his decree, the second pre-emptor should be entitled to execute it. There was no appeal against the decree in the first suit. The second pre-emptor appealed from the decree in his own suit upon certain grounds. It was decided in that case by STRAIGHT and BRODHURST, JJ., that the appellant, if he wished to get rid of the decision regarding the first pre-emptor's preferential right, should have appealed against the first pre-emptor's decree, and that, that decree having become final, the questions between the two pre-emptor's could not be re-opened on appeal from the second pre-emptor's decree. This decision was followed without, so far as I am aware, a note of dissent in a number of cases up to the time of the ruling in Damodar Das v. Sheo Ram Das.

[56] In the case of Bal Kishan v. Kishan Lal (1), the same qustion was considered by a Full Bench consisting of EDGE, C. J., STRAIGHT and MAHMOOD, JJ. It was held that the rule of res judicata contained in section 13 of the Code applies equally to appeals and miscellaneous proceedings as to original suits ; that having regard to its main object, so far as it relates to the retrial of an issue, it refers, not to the date of the commencement of the litigation, but to the date when the Judge is called upon to decide the issue, and that where after the commencement of the trial of an issue a final judgment upon the same issue in another case is pronounced by a competent court (the identity of parties and other conditions of section 13 being fulfilled), such judgment operates as res judicata upon the decision, original or appellate, of the issue in the later litigation.

In Ram Lal v. Chhab Nath (2) Sir JOHN EDGE, C. J., and BRODHURST, J , in a case in which the plaintiff and defendant in a suit each appealed separately, and the defendant's appeal first came on for hearing and an issue as to whether the plaintiff or the defendant had title to certain lands in dispute was decided on the facts by the appellate court adversely to the defendant, held that the plaintiff's appeal involving the same issue which came on for hearing before the same court was barred by the principle of res judicata. The Subordinate Judge treated the finding in the first appeal as operating as res judicata and the learned Judges in their judgment approve of his ruling, saying that although section 13 (of the former Code of Civil Procedure) would not apply, still the principle of res judicata applied, and that section 13 of the Code is not exhaustive, as was pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (3).

The rule laid down in Chajju v. Sheo Sahai was followed in Mangli v. Narain (4), Kesho Tiwari v. Sarju Kunwar (5), Munna v. Nisar Ali (6), Ajab Ali Khan v. Musammat [57] Ashraf Jahan Begam (7), Musammat Aziman v. Abdullah (8) and Abdul Basit v. Ashfaq Husain (9).

The only conflicting authority in our Court, so far as I am aware, is that of Damodar Das v. Sheo Ram Das. In that case none of the authorities of the Court appear to have been cited, and no reference whatever is made to any such, but reliance is placed upon two decisions of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts respectively.

I shall now refer to these cases, but first I would refer to the case of Abdul Majid v. Jew Narain Mahto (10). In that case MITTER and MACPHERSON, JJ., held that the decision of an issue in one of two suits tried together, which is not appealed against cannot be treated as res judicata so far as the same issue was concerned in an appeal against the decision in the other suit.

In Mariamnissa Bibi v. Joynab Bibi (11) the facts were these :—Two Muhammadan co-widows—Mariamnissa Bibi and Joynab Bibi—brought two separate suits for the recovery of their dowers from the estate of their deceased husband. A question was raised in these suits whether two houses belonged to the estate of the husband. By consent of the parties the Subordinate Judge tried both of the suits together and disposed of them in one judgement, it being found that the two houses belonged to Mariamnissa as her separate property. Two separate decrees were drawn up in accordance with that judgement. The other widow, Joynab, preferred an appeal against the decree in her own suit mainly on the ground that the conclusion arrived at by the Subordinate Judge in the suit of Mariamnissa Bibi respecting the title to the two houses was erroneous, but no appeal was preferred in Mariamnissa's suit. At the hearing of the appeal a question was raised on behalf of Mariamnissa that the judgement in her suit not having been appealed against operated as res judicata. It was held by GHOSE, C. J., and HARINGTON, J. (RAMPINI, J., dissenting) that there was no bar of res judicata. [58] RAMPINI, J., in his judgement referring to section 13 of the former Code observes, at p. 1107 of the Report:— "It has also been said that the words 'former suit' in section 13 cannot relate to Mariamnissa Bibi's suit, as both suits were tried simultaneously and disposed of by one judgement. But there were two distinct suits, two sets of pleadings and issues, and though the two suits were disposed of by one judgement, this is an irregular procedure sanctioned only by consent but not expressly allowed by any section of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the eye of the law there were two judgements, one in each suit, though the Subordinate Judge may have delivered the same judgement in both suits. Hence there were necessarily two appeals. Mariamnissa Bibi's suit was certainly the one first instituted, but, be that as it may, as laid down in Gururajammah v. Venkatakrishnama Chetti (1), it is the date of the decision which is the "former" and which is the "second" suit, and Mariam Bibi's suit was certainly finally decided on the 30th of November, 1903. while Joynab's suit is still pending final decision in this appeal I therefore consider that Abdul Majid v. Jew Narain Mahto was wrongly decided, and I would accordingly refer the question of the correctness of the decision in it to a Full Bench." I agree in this view. GHOSE, C. J., in his judgement refers approvingly to the decision in Bal Kishan v. Kishan Lal. He remarks at page 1116: "It may be accepted as correct that the expression 'former suit,' as occurring in that section, as the Allahabad High Court has held in the case of Bal Kishan v. Kishan Lal, and which has been approvingly quoted by the Madras High Court in the case of Gururajammah v. Venkatakrishnama Chetti (1), does not relate to the date of commencement of the litigation, but to the time when the Judge is called upon to decide the issue, and 'that the rule contained in section 13 is not limited to the Courts of first instance, and that it equally applies to the procedure of the first and second appellate Courts by reason of sections 582 and 587 respectively, but still the question here is which is the judgement that operates as a bar in this case?'" The learned Chief Justice seems to have based his decision entirely upon section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. At page 1114 he says: [59]— "section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon which the decision of the question referred to rests."

In Gururajammah v. Venkatakrishnama (1) the decision in Bal Kishan v. Kishan Lal was approved of and followed by SIR ARNOLD WHITE, C. J., and DAVIES, J.

In the later case, however, of Panchanada Velan v. Vaithinatha Sastrial (1) a different view was taken. In that case cross suits between the same parties on the same facts were tried together and judgement was given on the same day, but separate decrees were passed, and an appeal was preferred against one of the decrees alone. It was held by Sir ARNOLD WHITE, C. J., and SUBRAMANIA AYYAR and DAVIES, JJ., that the decree unappealed did not operate as a bar under section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, so as to preclude the appellate Court from dealing with the decree appealed against. We find no reference in the judgement to the earlier decision of the Court in Gururajammah v. Venkatakrishnama Chetti (2). The judgment is very short. The learned Judges observe that technically no doubt the appeal ought to have been in both suits, but no weight is given to the technicality. The learned Judges say :—" We do not think that, either under section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure or on general principles, the doctrine of res judicata has any application to the facts of this case. The doctrine does not apply when, as here, the very object of the appeal, in substance if not in form, is to get rid of the adjudication which is said to render the question which the appellate Court is asked to decide res judicata." Later on they observe :—" It would lead to startling results if we were to hold that an appellate tribunal is precluded from dealing with the question which comes before it on appeal because an inferior court, upon the same facts, but in a case other than the case under appeal had given a decision which had not been appealed against, at the same time as the decision in the case under appeal." The learned Judges do not point out what would be the startling results to which they apprehended a contrary conclusion would lead. An appellate court is bound to apply the rule of res judicata even though the decision is [60] the decision of an inferior Court, provided that that Court was competent to decide the case.

I am of opinion after careful consideration of the arguments which have been addressed to us by the learned vakil and advocate for the respective parties that the case of Chajju v. Sheo Sahai (3) and the subsequent decisions of this Court which followed it were rightly decided. The decree obtained by Manphul stands unreversed and is binding upon the appellant. The time for impeaching it has expired, and I am not aware of any procedure by which this decree can now be rendered nugatory. It was suggested during the argument that if the appeal of Zaharia be heard and a decision be obtained in his favour, the appellate decree in his favour will have the effect of superseding the former decree, but this cannot be. A decree, unless it be a decree which is a nullity by reason of, for example, fraud, cannot be superseded except it be upon appeal in the regular course. This being so, if we acceded to the argument addressed to us, we should have two inconsistent decrees on the files of the Court. This would be a most serious anomaly, and in execution proceedings would cause a complete impasse. I would therefore dismiss the appeal.

TUDBALL, J.—I concur.

CHAMIER, J.—I concur. The Court of first instance wrote only one judgement, but a copy of that judgement was placed upon the record of the second suit. The case must be treated in my opinion as if two separate judgements had been prepared. There were, of course, two separate decrees. The Code of Civil Procedure requires a separate judgement and decree for each suit or appeal and two or more decrees cannot be challenged by one appeal. In the absence of a provision enabling the Court to consolidate suits and appeals and pass one judgement and one decree instead of as many judgements and decrees as there are suits or appeals, I see no escape from the conclusion that in a case like the one before us or in a case like that of Abdul Basit v. Ashfaq Husain (1) the appellant must file two appeals if he wishes to avoid the bar of res-judicata.

SHEO DIHAL SINGH (Plaintiff) v. BADRI NARAIN SINGH AND OTHERS (defendants).*

Act (Local) No. II of 1901 (Agra Tenancy Act), sections 102 and 198—Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent—Jus tertii—Intervenor to whom tenant has not actually paid rent.

Held that section 198 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, does not apply to the case of an intervenor, whose jus tertii the tenant defendant in a suit for rent has set up, and who has been made a party to the suit, but to whom the tenant has not actually and in good faith paid rent.

THIS was a suit for rent under section 102 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, to recover arrears amounting to Re. 1, as. 11. The principal defendant, Ram Das, admitted that the arrears were due, but pleaded that one Badri Narain Singh, who was no party to the suit, had purchased the share of the property in respect of which the arrears had accrued and had prohibited him from making any payment of rent. At his own instance Badri Narain Singh was made a party to the suit. The court of first instance (Assistant Collector of the first class of Benares) decreed the claim. From this decision Badri Narain Singh appealed, and the District Judge modified the decree, awarding to Sheo Dihal Singh 1 anna, 10 pies, out of the rent claimed and to Raj Narain who was a co-plaintiff, 9 annas 3 pies. Sheo Dihal Singh appealed to the High Court, and his principal contention was that the intervenor Badri Narain Singh had no right of appeal and therefore the appeal to the lower appellate court should not have been entertained.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal (for whom Mr. M. L. Agarwala), for the respondents.

[62] STANLEY, C. J., and BUBKITT J.:—The sum involved in this appeal is 9 annas, 3 pies, but the learned vakil on behalf of the appellant stated to us that there was an important question of principle involved in the appeal, and we have heard the arguments at very considerable length. The suit was brought under section 102 of Act No. II of 1901 to recover arrears of rent amounting to Re. 1-11. The principal defendant Ram Das admitted that the arrears were due, but he pleaded that one Badri Narain Singh, who was no party to the suit, had purchased the share of the property in respect of which the arrears had accrued and that Badri Narain Singh had prohibited him from making any payment of rent. The meaning of the defence of Ram Das is that he was quite willing to pay his rent, but that he really did not know to whom he should pay it and therefore had not paid it. At his own instance Badri Narain was made a party to the suit. The court of first instance decreed the claim and from this decision Badri Narain appealed, the result of the appeal being that the learned District Judge modified the decree and awarded to Sheo Dihal, the plaintiff before the Court, 1 anna, 10 pies, out of the rent claimed, and to Raj Narain, who was a co-plaintiff, 9 annas, 3 pies. From this appellate decree the present appeal has been preferred by the plaintiff Sheo Dihal Singh.

The important question of principle which we are told is involved in this appeal is that the person who preferred the appeal to the lower appellate court is Badri Narain, who was not a party to the original proceedings, but had been placed in the array of parties by the court at his own instance. It is contended that an intervenor, such as he, under the circumstances has no right to appeal and that therefore the appeal ought not to have been entertained. For this contention reliance is placed upon section 198 of the Agra Tenancy Act, Act No. II of 1901, it being contended that the only remedy which was open to Badri Narain was to institute a suit in the civil court to have his rights established. That section applies to a case where a tenant who has been impleaded by a landlord, and who has actually and in good faith paid the rent of his holding to some third person, pleads such payment. The court in such case is bound to entertain the question of the alleged payment and to enquire into it, [63] and if the question is decided in favour of the defendant, dismiss the suit. That section has no application to the present case, for the simple reason that the defendant Ram Das did not in this case plead that the relation of landlord and tenant did not subsist between the plaintiff and himself; and he has not paid to any body any portion of the rent of the holding which is the subject matter of the suit. It appears to us therefore that there is no substance in the question of principle which has been raised and that the appeal in this respect has no force. As regards the important question of fact as to whether or not the plaintiff is entitled to the few annas which is claimed in the appeal, we have read with very great care the judgements of the lower court and having given our best consideration to those judgements we see no reason to differ from the conclusion at which the learned District Judge arrived. We therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (1882), section 316—Execution of decree—Purchase at auction sale—Date of accrual of auction-purchaser's title.

Held that under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, the title of a purchaser of immovable property at a sale in execution of a decree to mesne profits arising therefrom does not accrue until the date of the confirmation of such sale. Amir Kazim v. Darbari Mal (1) and Prem Chand Paul v. Purnima Dasi (2) followed.

[Dist. 1915 M. W. N. 15=26 I. C. 353=28 M. L. J. 666.]

CERTAIN shops and premises of the firm of Thakur Das Dhani Ram were sold on the 29th June, 1907, in execution of a decree. The sale was confirmed on the 22nd August, 1908. A sum of Rs. 700 alleged to be due by way of arrears of rent was sold in execution of another decree against Thakur Das Dhani Ram and purchased by the plaintiff Nathe Lal on the 18th December, 1908. The plaintiff sued to recover arrears of rent from the tenants, but was met by the defence that the person entitled was the purchaser at the sale held on the 29th of June, 1907, and not the plaintiff.

[64] The court below decided that the purchaser of the premises had no interest till confirmation of sale and gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants appealed.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the appellants :—

The question would not arise under the present Code of Civil Procedure. Section 65 would meet the requirements of the case. But the new Code had not come into operation at the time. Section 316 of the old Code declared that title did not vest in purchaser until date of confirmation of sale. But even if the property did not vest in the first purchaser, he would still have an inchoate title to it.

Munshi Gulzari Lal, for the respondents relied on Amir Kazim v. Darbari Mal (1) and section 36 of the Transfer of Property Act.

STANLEY, C. J. and GRIFFIN, J.:—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of arrears of rent. A shop and premises belonged to the firm of Thakur Das and Dhani Ram. This shop and premises were sold by the Court in execution of a decree on the 29th of June, 1907, and purchased by Jaggi Lal. The sale was not confirmed until the 22nd of August, 1908, Prior to the 22nd of August, 1908, rents of tenants fell into arrear and in the aggregate a sum of Rs. 700 was due for such arrears on that date. In execution of a decree obtained against Thakur Das and Dhani Ram these arrears were sold on the 18th of December, 1908, and were purchased by the plaintiff. He instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for recovery of these arrears. The defence set up by defendants was that the plaintiff was not entitled to them, but that the purchaser under the purchase of the 29th of June, 1907, was so entitled.

Both the courts below gave a decree to the plaintiff.

This second appeal was then preferred, and the contention of the learned counsel for the appellants is that Jaggi Lal by virtue of his purchase became entitled to the rent as from the 29th of June, 1907, the date of his purchase, notwithstanding that the sale to him was not confirmed until the 22nd of August, 1908. We are unable to accede to this contention. The question is disposed of by section 316 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, [65] which was in force at the time of the sale. That section provides for the granting by the court of a sale certificate, and declares that, so far as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them, the title to the property sold shall vest in the purchaser from the date of such certificate, and not before. We may here point out that the law has been modified by the present Code of Civil Procedure. Section 65 of the present Code provides that where immoveable property is sold in execution of a decree and such sale has become absolute, the property shall be deemed to have vested in the purchaser from the time when the property was sold and not from the time when the sale becomes absolute. In view of the provisions of the former Code, to which we have referred, it appears to us that this appeal must fail. In the case of Amir Kazim v. Darbari Dal, (1) it was decided by a Bench of this Court of which one of us was a member, that when immoveable property in sold in execution of a decree the title of the auction-purchaser to mense profits or to possession does not accrue until the sale has been confirmed. In that case the court followed the authority of several other cases; in one of which, Prem Chand Paul v. Purnima Dasi (2), the contention was raised that though under section 316 property does not vest in the purchaser until the date of the confirmation of the sale, yet this only applies as between the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them and does not apply to other parties. This contention was in that case repelled, and, we think, rightly so. For these reasons the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

After the death of the testator Musammat Tulsha sued for a declaration that she was entitled to the profits of her late husband's shares in these shamilat pattis also. On appeal the District Judge reversed the decree of the court below and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Munshi Govind Prasad, for the appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, for the respondents.

STANLEY, C. J and GRIFFIN, J.:—We are of opinion that the construction put upon the will of Chhote Puri by the learned [67] District Judge is correct. By his will the testator gave to the appellant 3 biswas 13 biswansis, 1 nanvansi, 14½ anwansis of zamindari property comprised in certain parties in the village of Hariha, the numbers of which are stated in the plaint. These pattis are described as being in the separate possession of the testator. In addition to the property so described the testator was entitled to property in other villages and also to shamilat pattis in the village of Hariha. These shamilat pattis in the khewats have numbers assigned to them, different and distinct from the numbers of the pattis specifically given to the appellant. The pattis given by the testator by his will are asli pattis and they alone are assessed to revenue. The shamilat pattis are owned in shares by proprietors of asli pattis in common, and are not assessed to revenue. The Court of first instance held that under the bequest in the will the testator's interest in the shamilat pattis which belonged to him passed to the donee. But upon appeal the learned District Judge reversed this decision and held in view of the specific and clear language of the will that only the asli pattis deseribed therein passed to the appellant.

We have carefully considered the language of the will, and there is nothing to lead us to think that the testator intended to dispose of the shamilat pattis in which he was a co-sharer with others .The asli pattis described therein are given in specific terms and there are no general words such as " with the appurtenances " or "land appertaining thereto " to justify us in holding that the testator intended to dispose of his shares in the shamilat pattis or any land outside the asli pattis. It is a well settled canon of construction that where a given subject is devised and there are found two species of property, the one precisely corresponding to the description in the devise and the other not completely answering thereto, the latter will be excluded. Here the asli pattis precisely correspond with the description in the gift and the shamilat pattis in no way answer to that description and a fortiori the shamilat pattis are excluded. The presumption which arises in favour of testacy has no application in this case, because the testator had property in other villages, and as to that property he certainly intended to die intestate as there is no [68] reference in his will

BADRI PRASAD (Auction-purchaser) v. TEJ SINGH (Objector.)*

Civil Procedure Code (1882), section 170—Appeal—Contempt of court—Property of person in contempt sold to realize a fine, but sale afterwards set aside on the submission of the person in contempt.

No appeal lies from an order refusing to confirm a sale held by the Court to realize a fine imposed by it for contempt under section 170 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882.

The Court has power to refuse to confirm such a sale if the fine and costs are paid in by the person guilty of contempt, and the Court considers that the contempt is purged.

The facts of this case were as follows:—

Tej Singh and Baldeo Das were summoned as witnesses in a case. They failed to comply with the summons and warrants were issued against them. The warrants could not be served. Thereupon a proclamation was made against them under section 168 of the former Code of Civil Procedure They failed to appear on the date fixed by the proclamation, and were fined Rs. 100 each in realization whereof their zamindari property was put up to sale, under section 170 of the Code and sold in one lot to the appellant. On the date of the sale Tej Singh proposed to pay up the fine and costs due from him, but the amin refused to accept it because he had been directed to sell both persons' properties in one lot for the aggregate sum of Rs. 200. After the sale, Tej Singh made an application, purporting to be under section 311 of the Code, to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularities; and the sale was set aside by the Subordinate Judge. The auction-purchaser appealed.

Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri (with him Munshi Gulzari Lal), for the respondents, took a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal:—There is no appeal from an order setting aside a sale held under section 170. Section 588, clause (16), provides an appeal from an order setting aside or refusing to set [69] aside sales held under certain specified sections. Section 170 is not included among them. Section 311 speaks of sales held "under this chapter." It is clearly not applicable to the sale held in this case. The order of the Subordinate Judge was not, therefore, one under section 311. He expressly acted under section 151 of the new Code. The sale had not yet passed a title to, or conferred a right upon, the purchaser; before that, it had to be confirmed, and a certificate had to be obtained; and the Court, acting under section 151, set it aside. Neither the old nor the new Code gives a right of appeal from such an order. By order XVI, rule 13, what is made applicable is the procedure which relates to attachment in execution of decree, up to sale, and confirmation of sale. All that the new Code has done is to assimilate the procedures in the two cases. But it does not confer a right of appeal, which has to be given specifically by the Legislature; section 647 of the old Code cannot be called in aid for such a purpose; Ghasiti Bibi v. Abdul Samad (1).

Mr. G. W. Dillon (with him Munshi Govind Prasad), for the appellant:—

A sale held under section 170 does not require confirmation or a sale certificate. It is only sales in execution of decrees that do so (vide section 316). The purchaser at once got an absolute title; and section 151 (new Code) was misapplied. The Court had no jurisdiction to deal with the application. The application to set aside the sale was in terms one under section 311. It was only under that section that the Court could listen to him; he was a person in contempt and the court could not listen to him at all otherwise. In disposing of the application the Court treated the matter exactly as if it were an application under section 311 and went into exactly the same questions which would have to be decided in a case under section 311. An order passed on an application under, and purporting to be under, section 311 is appealable. It is doubtful if the lower court acted at all under section 151 (new Code). The order is really one made under order XXI, rule 92: in effect it is so; it is therefore appealable. He then addressed the Court on the merits of the case.

[70] Babu Jogindra Nath Chaudhri was not heard in reply.

KNOX and GRIFFIN, JJ.:—Tej Singh and Baldeo Das were summoned as witnesses in a civil suit. It appears that they did not attend in answer to the summons, with the result that first a warrant of arrest was issued to enforce their attendance, and, when that did not suffice, a fine was imposed upon them in their absence, their property was attached and an order was passed to sell the same for the purpose of satisfying the fine imposed and the costs incurred in consequence of the attachment. Although the Court ordered the attachment of both the immovable and movable property, only immovable property was attached. The amount of immovable property attached was far in excess of the fine imposed and the costs incurred. The property was put up to sale and purchased by the appellant for Rs. 250. There is no dispute that the property attached is of far greater value than the amount paid by the appellant at the sale. The learned counsel, who appears for the appellant, boldly and frankly allowed that his client was in the position of a fortunate purchaser who has at an auction sale purchased property at a price much below its real value. The fact that the property attached consists of 599 bighas, 6 biswas of land, bearing a jama of Rs. 597-12-10, is quite enough to show that Rs. 250 was an absurdly low price. The court before which the sale officer submitted his report, refused to accept the sale as a sale. In a very careful judgment, that court has given good reasons for the position it took. It ordered Tej Singh to pay in Rs. 100 the fine imposed, and all the costs of the attachment and sale within 15 days from the date of its order. That sum was duly paid in and the court considered that, as far as Tej Singh was concerned, he had purged himself of any contempt in which he may have stood. In appeal before us it is urged that the Court had no jurisdiction to set aside the sale which according to the law had become final. The contention is that neither section 311 of the old Code, nor order XXI, rule 90, of the new Code applied to this case. We think that there is considerable force in this contention. The result then is that the Code of Civil Procedure, previous to the present Code, appears to have intended that any order passed under section 170 of that Code should not be open to appeal. That section contains a [71] special provision that if a person whose attendance was required pays into court the fine and costs, then the Court shall order the property to be released from attachment. The very existence of this provision shows that the Court may, before the sale becomes final, accept from the person guilty of contempt the costs and fine and release the property intended for sale from attachment. It may be said that it is somewhat straining the language of the section to hold that if a sale officer has put up the property for sale and a purchaser has come forward, still the Court is empowered to order the release of property from attachment. We do not think there is much force in this contention. It appears to us to be a novel idea that the action of a ministerial officer should have such finality. It is for the Court to say whether the action of its ministerial officer amounts to a sale by putting its confirmation upon that act. That stage was never reached in the present case. The order passed by the Court below was an order under section 170 of the Code of 1882 which governs the procedure in the present case and no appeal is provided from that order. We therefore hold that no appeal lies, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

THE facts which gave rise to this appeal were as follows :—

One Bhuabal Bhagat and his descendants, who were joint in every respect, carried on an ancestral business in saji, sugar and groceries under the style of Bhuabal Bhagat Bhoj Ram. They also did a little money lending and owned some zamindari property. After the death of Bhuabal Bhagat and five of his sons, the management of the family business and property came into the hands of Hira Ram and Dhondhi Ram, respectively, son and grandson of Bhuabal Bhagat. On the 4th July, 1894, the two last named advanced money belonging to the family upon a mortgage of some villages already mortgaged to one Jaddo Kunwar, and on the 26th July, 1894, they purchased with family funds another village which also had been previously mortgaged to Jaddo Kunwar. Both transactions were only in their own names. In 1895 Jaddo Kunwar sued upon her mortgages and obtained two decrees, one for sale and the other for foreclosure. Both decrees were made absolute, and in execution of the decree for sale Jaddo Kunwar purchased the property covered by that decree. Hira Ram and Dhondi Ram were parties to the suits brought by Jaddo Kunwar, but not the other members of the family. The present suit was brought by the surviving members of the family who were not parties to the previous suits of Jaddo Kunwar, and they sought redemption of the property to which the mortgage deed of the 4th July, 1894, and the sale-deed of the 26th July, 1894 related. The court of first instance (Subordinate Judge of Ghazipur) gave the plaintiffs a decree. The Defendant Jaddo Kunwar appealed to the High Court.

upon a mortgage of some villages, already mortgaged to the appellant, and on July 26th, 1894, they purchased with family funds another village which also had been previously mortgaged to the appellant. In 1895, the appellant sued upon her mortgages and obtained two decrees, one for sale and the other for foreclosure. Both decrees were made absolute, and in execution of the decree for sale the appellant purchased the property covered by that decree. Hira Ram and Dhondhi Ram were parties to the suits brought by the appellant, but the plaintiffs were not made parties. In the present suit they claimed a decree for redemption of all the property mortgaged to the appellant, on the ground that they ought to have been made parties to the suits for sale and foreclosure and not having been made parties are not bound by the decrees which were passed. The court below has given them a decree for redemption of so much of the property as is covered by the mortgage-deed of July 4th, [74] 1894, and the sale-deed of July 26th, 1894. Jaddo Kunwar has appealed on the ground that the entire suit should have been dismissed. The plaintiffs have filed cross-objections on the question of costs.

The court below has found, and the finding has not been challenged before us, that Hira Ram and Dhondhi Ram were the managers of the family property and business, that when the appellant brought her suits she was not aware of the existence of the plaintiff; that Hira Ram and Dhondhi Ram defended the suits by authority of the adult members of the family, who were aware of what was being done in them, as all expenses incurred were entered in the family accounts, and that the plaintiff Bishnath Ram had not been born when the appellant brought her suits. To this finding it may be added that the plaintiffs, Mathura Ram, Dwarka Ram and Sheo Prasad Ram, were minors when those suits were brought.

As purchasers and mortgagees of the properties already mortgaged to the appellant, the family of the plaintiffs were obviously bound by the mortgages held by the appellant. Dhondhi Ram in his evidence says that they decided not to redeem the appellant's mortgages because they anticipated that a suit would be brought by the minor son of Radha Kishan, a member of the mortgagor's family, to challenge the sale and the mortgages. He says that he did not consult the plaintiff, Sheo Shankar Ram, but it is difficult to believe this. It is quite clear that the adult members of the family other than Hira Ram and Dhondhi Ram, acquiesced in, if they did not take part in the decision of the managers not to redeem the appellant's mortgages. The sole ground upon which the plaintiff's claim to be entitled to redeem the property is that they were not parties to the suits brought by the appellant. The plaintiff, Bishnath Ram, may be disregarded as he was not in existence when the previous suits were brought. The case of the plaintiffs Dwarka Ram and Sheo Prasad seems to be covered by our decision in Balwant Singh v. Aman Singh (1), which is based upon several decisions of this Court, including that of the Full Bench in Debi Singh v. Jia Ram (2). Indeed the position of the plaintiffs Dwarka Ram and Sheo Prasad Ram is much [75] weaker than that of the plaintiff in the case first mentioned, for in the present case there cannot at any time have been any doubt that the plaintiffs were bound to pay the sum due to the appellant if they wished to retain the properties sold and mortgaged to their family. Pandit Sundar Lal, on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents, relied upon the case of Sundar Lal v. Chhitar

Mal (1), in which it was held that sons in a Hindu family could maintain a suit for redemption of their shares in the family property, although a previous suit by their father for redemption of the whole property had been dismissed on his failing to pay the amount found to be due on the mortgage. The decision in that case would probably have been the other way if the previous suit for redemption had resulted, as apparently it ought to have resulted, in a foreclosure or an order for a sale followed by a sale. For when property mortgaged by a father in a Hindu joint family has passed away from the family either by means of a foreclosure against the father or by means of a sale in execution of a decree against him upon a mortgage, it cannot signify whether the suit which resulted in the foreclosure or sale was instituted by the mortgagor or by the mortgagee. In neither case, consistently with the principle upon which the case of Debi Singh v. Jia Ram was decided, can the sons recover the family property or their interests in it merely because they were not parties to the suit brought by or against their father. So far then as the plaintiffs Dwarka Ram and Sheo Prasad Ram are concerned, I think it is clear that the suit should have been dismissed.

There remains the case of the plaintiffs Sheo Shankar Ram and his son Mathura Ram. The principle upon which the case of Debi Singh v. Jia Ram rests does not apply to them but I am nevertheless of opinion that their claim also should have been dismissed. It was contended on their behalf that the provisions of section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act were imperative and that they were in the position of ordinary puisne mortgagees who had not been made parties to a suit by a prior mortgagee and who therefore must be given an opportunity of redeeming the prior mortgage. Section 85 does not in terms apply to the case, for the appellant was not aware of the existence of the [76] plaintiffs when she brought her suits. But a person may be a necessary party to a suit upon a mortgage, although the plaintiff is not aware of his existence, in the sense that if he is not impleaded he cannot be concluded or his rights affected by the decree passed in the suit. Prima facie all persons interested in the right to redeem must be made parties to a suit by a mortgagee but the rule is not inflexible, for example, it is settled law that in certain circumstances a son in a joint family is bound by a decree upon a mortgage obtained against his father, and it would no doubt be held that an adopted son was sufficiently represented by his adoptive mother in a suit upon a mortgage in circumstances similar to those found in the cases of Dhurm Das Pandey v. Mussumat Soondri Dibiah (2) and Hari Saran Moitra v. Bhubaneswari Debi (3). In the present case there can be no doubt that Sheo Shankar Ram and his son Mathura Ram were in fact represented by the managers of the family property in the suits brought by the appellants. With the consent express or implied, of Sheo Shankar Ram and other adult members of the family the mortgage deed of July 4th, 1894, and the sale deed of July 26th, 1894, had been executed in favour of the managers alone and they alone were recorded as mortgagees and proprietors. With the same consent the managers had defended the suits and abstained from redeeming the appellant's mortgages. In somewhat similar circumstances the Bombay High Court held that all the members of a joint family were bound by a decree obtained against the karta of the family see Narayan Gop Hatbu v. Pandurang Ganu (4). In that case the defendant had obtained a decree for possession of land against one Anant, who was at the time the karta of a joint family consisting of his two nephews and himself. It was found that the uncle and nephews had been living together when the suit was brought and that the nephews had assisted their uncle to defend the suit. In the circumstances the High Court held that the nephews had been effectively represented in the suit by their uncle and a suit by the nephews for recovery of their shares in the property was held not to be maintainable. WESTROPP, C. J., referred to and relied upon [77] the following passage in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jogendro Deb Roy Kut v. Funindro Deb Roy Kut (1):—" Their Lordships think that this case cannot be likened to those which sometimes occur in India wherein, the interest of a joint and undivided family being in issue, one member of that family has prosecuted a suit or has defended a suit, and a decree has been made in that suit which may afterwards be considered as binding upon all the members of the family, their interest being taken to have been sufficiently represented by the party in the original suit." In Bissessur Lall Sahoo v. Maharajah Luchmessur Singh (2) the facts were as follows:—One Nath Das died in 1853, leaving a son, Ram Nath Das, who died in 1855. Ram Nath Das left two sons, Mosahib and Chooman Nath Das. Ram Nath Das had taken a lease of a village called Rudarpur. The landlord brought a suit for the rent against the widows of Nath Das and Ram Nath Das as guardians of Mosahib and Chooman. A second suit was brought against Mosahib for the rent of a village called Ramnagar, the lease of which stood in the name of Nath Das. A third suit was brought against the widow of Ram Nath Das as guardian of Mosahib. In execution of the decrees in the three suits a village called Madanpur was put up for sale and brought by the plaintiff in those suits. Madanpur had been acquired in the name of Ram Nath Das for the benefit of the family. A suit having been brought by the assignee of the rights of Mosahib and Chooman, their Lordships held on an examination of the proceedings that as all three decrees were in respect of a joint debt of the family and had been passed against a representative of the family property, they had properly been executed against the joint family property, and they concluded their judgement with a reference to two cases, the effect of which is that in dealing with execution proceedings the Court should look at the substance of the transaction and should not set aside an execution upon mere technical grounds when the Court found that it was substantially right. In the case before them they came to the conclusion that the circumstances warranted the assumption that the defendant or defendants in [78] each of the previous suits had been sued as representing the family and, as the claim in each suit had been for money due from the family, joint property of the family had rightly been taken in execution. These cases show, I think, that where a joint family has been effectively represented in a suit and substantial justice has been done, the Court is not always bound to set aside the execution proceedings merely because every member of the family was not formally made a party. A loose interpretation of this rule might easily lead to disastrous results and cause great confusion; but in the case before us, I think, we are justified in holding that the plaintiff, Sheo Shankar Ram, was effectively represented in the suits brought by the appellant and should not be permitted to reopen the foreclosure or have the sale set aside.

The learned counsel for the appellant referred us to the recent decision of the Bombay High Court in Ramakrishna Narayan v. Vinayak Narayan (1), in which it was held that the defendant-appellant had been effectively represented by his undivided uncles, who were managers of the family property, in a suit brought upon a mortgage made by several members of the family. CHANDAVARKAR, J., said:—"The present appellant was no doubt omitted from the suit, but the adult members of the family represented him. They were the managing members of the family; therefore, according to Hindu law, we must hold, in the absence of any other circumstance, that the present appellant had been substantially represented upon the record and was virtually a party to the suit." As the remainder of the judgement shows, these remarks went beyond what was necessary for the decision of the appeal and there were other grounds upon which the same conclusion might have been arrived at. In former days, when the same strictness of procedure did not prevail as now, it was a common practice for the manager of joint family to sue and be sued on behalf of the family, see Gan Savant Bal Savant v. Narayan Dhond Savant (2), where West, J., discussed the state of the law as it was in 1853, but it is generally recognized now that the manager is not, as a rule, entitled to sue or liable to be sued on behalf of the family, see Padmakar Vinayak Joshi v. Mahadev [79] Krishna Joshi (3) and Kashinath Chimnaji v. Chimnaji Sadashiv (4). Nevertheless, it seems that in certain circumstances the whole family may be held bound by the result of suits brought by or against the manager. In the particular circumstances of the present case, I think that we may properly hold that the plaintiff Sheo Shankar Ram, is bound by the proceedings taken against the managing member of the family by the appellant. If Sheo Shankar is bound, so also is his son, Mathura Ram. I would allow the appeal, dismiss the cross-objections with costs and dismiss the suit with costs in both courts.

TUDBALL, J.—I concur.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is allowed, the cross-objections are dismissed with costs, and the suit stands dismissed with costs in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

claimed to be his was in danger of being sold in execution of a decree against another person or even against himself. In the matter of the petition of Chando Bibi (1) and Meghraj Singh v. Lala Mal (2) overruled. Brojendra Kumar Rai Chowdhuri v. Rup Lal Doss (3) Ganga Nand v. Balgobind Das (4) and Kirpa Dayal v. Rani Kishori (5) followed.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

The defendant, Banke Lal, got a decree against the defendant, Sheo Narain, on the 8th June, 1907. In execution of the decree [80] he attached certain property, which he alleged belonged to his judgement-debtor, on the 17th July, 1907. The same day the plaintiff, Abdullah Khan, obtained a sale-deed of the property from Sheo Narain. He preferred objections to the attachment under section 278 of Act XIV of 1882. His objections were rejected on the 1st August, 1908. He then brought the present suit to establish his title to the property purchased from Sheo Narain. The suit was dismissed on the 16th August 1909. The defendant appealed, and during the pendency of the appeal applied for an injunction to stay the sale of the property in dispute under order XXXIX, rule 1, of Act No. V of 1908. The application came on for hearing before STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J., who referred it to a larger bench. The order of reference was as follows :—

"This is an application for a temporary injunction to restrain the sale of certain immoveable property under order XXXIX, rule 1, which corresponds substantially with section 492 of Act XIV of 1882. This last mentioned section provides that if in any suit it is proved by affidavit or otherwise that any property in dispute in a suit is in danger of being wrongfully sold in execution of a decree, the court may grant a temporary injunction to restrain such sale. It is contended on behalf of the opposite party that such an injunction cannot be granted in view of the decisions of this court, first, in In the matter of the petition of Chando Bibi (1) and next in the case of Meghraj Singh v. Lala Mal (2). In the first mentioned case our brothers KNOX and AIKMAN, adopting the view expressed by Justice Sir WILLIAM BURKITT in an unreported case, held that "in a case like the present it is impossible to say that the property mentioned is in danger of being wrongfully sold in execution of the decree held by the opposite party." Our brothers then say that "section 492 requires that it must be proved that the property in dispute is in danger of being wrongfully sold. To hold in an application like the present that this was proved would be to decide the appeal, which is not before us. "We are disposed to think that the interpretation put upon section 492 in this case is not strictly accurate. The Legislature as it appears to us contemplated that a temporary injunction might be granted in a case in which a party alleged and satisfied the Court by affidavit or otherwise that the property in dispute was in danger of being wrongfully sold in execution of a decree. The word "proved" does not apparently mean conclusive proof, but such proof as is referred to in the Evidence Act, which is in pari materia with the Civil Procedure Code. In section 3 of that Act, "proved" is defined as follows :—"A fact is said to be proved when considering the matters before it the court either believes it to exist, or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought under the circumstances of the particular case to act under the supposition that it exist." In this view [81] we have some doubt as to the propriety of the decision in In the matter of the petition of Chando Bibi, and think that this application ought to be referred to a larger Bench. We therefore refer the case to the Chief Justice with a view to the selection of a larger Bench to determine the case."

The matter then came up for hearing before STANLEY, C. J., BANERJI, J., and TUDBALL, J.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the respondents, showed cause against the application. He submitted that an application under order XXXIX, rule 1, of Act No. V of 1908, lay only in cases where there was danger of property being wrongfully sold in execution of a decree. Where property was being sold under the orders of a competent court, how could it be said that there was an apprehension of a 'wrongful' sale? He relied on In the matter of the petition of Chando Bibi (1), Kirpa Dayal v. Rani Kishori (2) and Ganga Nand v. Balgobind Das (3).

The current of opinion at one time was in favour of granting an injunction. But since 1903 the current of opinion has been the other way. He then argued upon the affidavits filed by the parties that no sufficient grounds were established for the issue of an injunction.

Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba (for Mr. Abdul Raoof), for the applicant, was not heard.

BANERJI J.—This is an application under order XXXIX, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure for an injunction restraining the respondent from proceeding with the sale of certain property which he has caused to be attached in execution of a decree. The decree was obtained by him against one Sheo Narain, and in execution of it he caused certain immoveable property to be attached. The plaintiffs applicants preferred an objection to the attachment on the allegation that the property had been sold to them by the judgment-debtor Sheo Narain and that it was not liable to sale in execution of the decree obtained by the respondent. Their objection having been overruled, they instituted a suit under section 283 of Act No. XIV of 1882 for a declaration of their title to the property. The suit was dismissed by the court of first instance, and from the decree of [82] that court a first appeal has been preferred to this Court, which is now pending.

The applicants have presented this application for an ad interim injunction for stay of the sale of the property in suit pending the decision of the appeal.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji in showing cause against the application contended that the application was not maintainable under order XXXIX, rule 1, inasmuch as property which is about to be sold in execution of a decree cannot be said to be in danger of "being wrongfully sold in execution of a decree" within the meaning of the rule. In support of his contention he relied on the decision of this Court in In the matter of the petition of Chando Bibi (1), which was followed in Meghraj Singh v. Lala Mal (4). As the Bench before which the application came for hearing had doubts as to the correctness of the view taken in those cases, the application has been referred for disposal to this Bench. With great respect to the learned Judges who decided the cases referred to, I am of opinion that the application is maintainable under order XXXIX, rule 1, which corresponds to section 492 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. That section provides that where in any suit it is proved by affidavit or otherwise that any property in dispute in a suit is in danger of being wasted, damaged,or alienated by any party to the suit, or wrongfully sold in execution of a decree the Court may by order grant a temporary injunction to restrain such act. It is clear from the language of the section that the Legislature contemplated that property might be in danger of being wrongfully sold in execution of a decree. The words "wrongfully sold in execution of a decree" were added in the Code of Civil Procedure of 1877 (Act X of 1877). They did not exist in section 93 of Act VIII of 1859, and it is manifest that when the words "wrongfully sold in execution of a decree" were added by the Legislature, it was clearly intended that an injunction might be granted when property, which the claimant claimed to be his, was in danger of being sold in execution of a decree against another person or even against himself. In certain circumstances it might be in danger of being wrongfully sold in [83] execution of a decree against the plaintiff himself. For instance, if the plaintiff has instituted a suit for a declaration that the decree obtained against him was obtained by fraud, the property would be in danger of being wrongfully sold in execution of such a decree. Other instances are given in Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji's elaborate work on Specific Relief, at page 741. The view I have expressed above is supported by the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Brojendra Kumar Rai Chowdhuri v. Rup Lall Doss (1), and also by the decision of OLDFIELD, J., in Ganga Nand v. Balgobind Das (2), which was followed in Kirpa Dayal v. Rani Kishori(3).

As regards the merits of the case, I am of opinion that the case is one in which a temporary injunction ought to be granted, as the question whether the property was under attachment at the date of the sale in favour of the applicants is one which should be determined in the appeal now pending. I would therefore allow the application as prayed.

STANLEY, C. J.—I concur in the judgment which has been pronounced by my brother BANERJI. In an earlier case I was a member of a Bench which expressed approval of the decision In the matter of the petition of Chando Bibi, namely, in the case of Meghraj Singh v. Lala Mal (4). At that time I was not aware of the amendment of the law by Act X of 1877. As has been pointed out, under section 92 of Act VIII of 1859, the words "or wrongfully sold in execution of a decree" did not exist in the earlier statute. These words, it appears to me, were obviously added to meet a case such as the present, and in view of this it appears to me that the words "in danger of being wrongfully sold" were not correctly interpreted in the case of Chando Bibi. After reconsideration of the matter I am of opinion that in the judgment which has just been pronounced, the section has been rightly interpreted. I would therefore allow the application.

TUDBALL, J.—I fully concur and have nothing to add.

[84] BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that a temporary injunction be issued for the stay of the sale ordered in the execution proceedings, pending the disposal of the appeal in this Court.

Let the hearing of the appeal be expedited.

Application allowed.

IN this case one Muhammad Alam, a petty zamindar in the Kanauj tahsil was convicted by the Joint Magistrate of Farrukhabad of an offence under section 2 of Regulation No. VI of 1825, and was sentenced to a fine of Rs. 50. He applied in revision to the Sessions Judge, who referred the case to the High Court, being of opinion that the Joint Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case.

Babu Piari Lal Banerji (with him Babu Satya Chandra Mukerji and Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq), for the applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate (Mr. R. Malcomson), for the Crown.

CHAMIER, J.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Farrukhabad in which he recommends that an order of the Joint Magistrate of Farrukhabad ordering one Muhammad Alam to pay a fine of Rs. 50 under section 2 of Bengal Regulation No. VI of 1825 be set aside. The case was taken up at the instance of the Sub-Divisional Officer, on whose report the District Magistrate directed that Muhammad Alam should be prosecuted under the section of the Regulation mentioned above. The case was made over to the Joint Magistrate, by the District Magistrate, who was also of [85] course the Collector of the district. According to section 2 of the Regulation it is only the Collector or other officer acting in that capacity that can impose a fine under that section. Section 4 provides for the levying of fine by the Collector as if it were arrears of public revenue, and section 5 of the Regulation gives a right of appeal to the Board of Revenue. It seems to be quite clear that proceedings cannot be taken under the Regulation by a Magistrate as such. The Joint-Magistrate was not a Collector or other officer acting in that capacity within the meaning of the Regulation, and therefore had no jurisdiction under that section. But as he dealt with the case as a Magistrate. the Sessions Judge was entitled to deal with the case under section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and this Court has power to set aside the order of the Joint-Magistrate. The order of the Joint-Magistrate is therefore set aside as having been passed without jurisdiction. The fine, if realized, will be refunded.

Order set aside.

Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-arz—Construction of document—Contract or custom—Presumption in absence of evidence that the record is one of custom.

Where it is not apparent, either from the language of the wajib-ul-arz itself or from other evidence, that the pre-emption clause of a wajib-ul-arz is merely the record of a new contract between the co-sharers, the presumption is that it is the record of a pre-existing custom. Majidan Bibi v. Sheikh Hayatan (1) followed.

The pre-emptive clause of a wajib-ul-arz was headed, "Relating to the right of pre-emption" and ran as follows :—"If a co-sharer has to sell and mortgage his haqiat—then at the time of transfer it will be incumbent that he should, after giving information, sell and mortgage for a proper price, &c., &c." Held that this, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, indicated a pre-existing custom of pre-emption rather than a contract.

[86] THIS was a suit for pre-emption based on the wajib-ul-arz. The question was whether the record in the wajib-ul-arz was one of custom or contract. The clause of the wajib-ul-arz relating to pre-emption was worded as follows :—

Dafa chahardahum—dar-bab haq shafa:—Agar kisi hissedar-ko haqiat apni bai wa rahn aur murtahin (ko) haq murtahni rahn dar rahn karni ho to barwaqt intiqal-ke lazim hoga ke pahle apne hissedar garib-ko aur darsurat inkar uske dusre hissedar deh-ko khabar dekar ba-qimat wajib bai wa rahn kare ; agar woh na lewe ya qimat wajib na de to usko ikhtiar hoga ke jiske hath chahe mutaqqil kare :—Section fourteenth —relating to the right of pre-emption. If a co-sharer has to sell and mortgage his haqiat and a mortgagee (has to) sub-mortgage, then at the time of transfer (it) will be incumbent that (he) should after giving information sell and mortgage for proper price (qimat) first to his near co-sharer and in his case of his refusal, to another co-sharer of the village (deh) ; should he not take it or not give the proper price then he (the vendor) will have the power to transfer (it) to whomsoever he likes."

Both the courts below construed this as the record of a contract for pre-emption and accordingly dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Munshi Govind Prasad, for the appellant, contended that the wajib-ul-arz recorded a custom and cited Majidan Bibi v. Sheikh Hayatan (1), Faizullah Khan v. Lok Nath (2), Manu Singh v. Hira Lal (3), Moti Ram v. Balwant Singh (4) and Ali Nasir Khan v. Manik Chand (5).

Babu Durga Charan Banerji (for Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru), for the respondent :—There was nothing to show that a right of pre-emption had existed before. On the contrary there was an indication of the record being that of a contract. In the heading the words are "relating to the right of pre-emption," which indicate a contract rather than a custom. Then if the record in the wajib-ul-arz were looked to, it would show that throughout the future tense was used, which again indicated that the practice was being introduced for the first time.

STANLEY, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a pre-emption suit. The court of first instance dismissed the plaintiffs' claim on the ground that the right set up by them was a right existing by [87] contract and not by custom, and that the period for which the contract was entered into having expired, the right came to an end. The same view was taken by the learned District Judge upon appeal to him. Hence this appeal to the High Court.

In consequence of a conflict in the decisions of the Court in regard to the construction of wajib-ul-arzes in the district of Shahjahanpur, corresponding to the wajib-ul-arz before us in this case, the appeal was sent to a larger Bench, so that there might be a binding decision of the Court upon the true meaning of the pre-emption clause in the wajib-ul-arz before us and similar clauses in other wajib-ul-arzes in regard to the right of pre-emption. The wajib-ul-arz runs thus:—"If a co-sharer has to sell and mortgage his haqiat and a mortgagee has to sub-mortgage, then at the time of transfer it will be incumbent that he should, after giving information, sell and mortgage for a proper price, first, to a near co-sharer, and in case of his refusal to another co-sharer in the village: should he not take it, or not give a proper price, then he (the vendor) will have power to transfer it to whomsoever he likes." This translation is admitted by the parties to be an accurate translation of the wajib-ul-arz in regard to pre-emption. The paragraph in which this right is set forth is headed "Relating to the right of pre-emption" (dar-bab haq shafa). It has been suggested that this heading indicates that the right was not one existing by custom, but arising out of contract, as the word "custom" is not used in the heading. I am not disposed to attach any importance to the omission of the word "custom" in the heading of paragraph 14. It appears to me that the words "relating to the right of pre-emption" would apply equally well to a right of pre-emption existing by custom as to a right of pre-emption arising out of contract. In the Full Bench case of Majidan Bibi v. Sheikh Hayatan (1) it was laid down that "if a wajib-ul-arz did not itself show, or if it was not otherwise proved that the pre-emption clause was merely the embodiment of a new contract as to pre-emption, the reasonable and proper construction of such a document would be that the pre-emption clause was merely the recital of a pre-existing custom in force in the village; and in such a case it would be for the [88] defendant in a suit for pre-emption to prove by clear evidence that no such custom had existed in the village, and that the vendor and the plaintiff had not agreed to be bound by the recital."

This rule I fully approve of. It has been followed in a number of cases [see Baldeo Sahai v. Nagai Ahir (2), also Sewak Singh v. Girja Pande (3)].

From the language of the wajib-ul-arz before us there is nothing to indicate that the pre-emption clause is merely the embodiment of a new contract. On the contrary, the language in which the paragraph is couched is equally applicable to a right of pre-emption existing by custom as it is to a right of pre-emption existing by contract. Applying, therefore, the rule that the presumption is in favour of custom, as there is nothing in the wajib-ul-arz to indicate that the right recorded therein is one arising from the contract of the parties, the words used in this wajib-ul-arz should be interpreted as recording a right existing by custom.

As regards the decisions of this Court, we find that in Faizullah Khan v. Lok Nath (4) (not reported), it was held that the right of pre-emption embodied in a wajib-ul-arz, of property in the Shahjahanpur district, similar to the record before us, was a right arising from contract. We have examined the judgment in that case, and we find in it that reliance was placed on the fact that nowhere in the plaint was custom set up. The learned Judges seem to have based their decision to some extent at all events upon this omission in the plaint.

In the case of Manu Singh v. Hira Lal (5) (not reported), the question before us was not raised. The learned Judges in their judgment point to the fact that it was not disputed by the parties that the right recorded in the wajib-ul-arz then before the Court, was a right existing by contract. This therefore may be treated as a decision of no account.

In three later unreported cases, namely, Moti Ram v. Balwant Singh (1), Mohan Lal v. Bhola Nath (2) and Gopal Singh v. Dwarka Prasad (3), it was held that language in the wajib-ul-arzes [89] in those cases similar to the language in the wajib-ul-arz before us should be interpreted as the record of a custom and not the record of a contract. I think these three last mentioned cases were rightly decided, and in the present case I would hold that the right recorded in the wajib-ul-arz is a right existing by custom.

I would therefore set aside the decrees of both the lower courts and remand the case to the court of first instance through the lower appellate court for decision upon the merits.

BANERJI, J.—I am of the same opinion. The rule as to the construction of documents of this nature was laid down in the case of Majidan Bibi v. Sheikh Hayatan (4). According to that rule a record in the wajib-ul-arz must be deemed to be the record of a custom unless the document itself indicates, or it is otherwise proved, that the pre-emption clause was the embodiment of a new contract. The rule has been adopted and followed in many subsequent cases. The wajib-ul-arz in the present case does not clearly show that it is the record of a contract relating to pre-emption. It must therefore be deemed to be the record of an existing custom.

As to the rulings in which a contrary view was held in regard to wajib-ul-arzes the terms of which are similar to those of the wajib-ul-arz in this case, I was a party to one of them, namely, Second Appeal No. 822 of 1908. As pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, it was not disputed in that case that the right recorded in the wajib-ul-arz was a right arising by contract. The lower court held that the wajib-ul-arz contained the record of a contract and this view of the lower Court was not questioned in second appeal. Therefore it was not necessary in that appeal to consider whether the wajib-ul-arz contained the record of a contract or of a custom. That case is therefore no authority as to the interpretation to be put on the wajib-ul-arz in question. I agree in the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

CHAMIER, J.—There is nothing in the extract from the wajib-ul-arz before us which indicates that it was intended to record a contract. It is therefore presumably the record of a custom. I agree in the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

[90] BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal be allowed, the decision of the lower court set aside, and the case remanded to the court of first instance through the lower appellate court, with directions that it be reinstated in the file of pending suits in its proper number and be disposed of on the merits, regard being had to the observations made by us in our judgements this day delivered. Costs here and hitherto will abide the event.

Marriage—Muhammadan law—Conversion of wife to Christianity—Dissolution of marriage—Suit for restitution of conjugal rights.

Under the Muhammadan Law a wife's conversion from Islam to Christianity effects a complate dissolution of marriage with her Muhammadan husband. The fact of such a conversion is therefore a bar to a suit by the husband for restitution of conjugal rights. Zuburdust Khan v. His wife (1) and Imamdin v. Hasan Bibi (2) followed.

[Rel: 71 I. C. 830 ;]

THE plaintiff and defendant in this case had been Muhammadans married to each other according to the Muhammadan law. The wife became a convert to Christianity and left her husband. Thereafter the husband brought a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. Both the courts below dismissed the suit as unmaintainable.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Ishaq Khan, for the appellant, contended that under the Muhammadan law a wife who abandoned Islam should be forced to embrace it. This was, however, not possible now. If she was converted to Christianity, the previous relation did not come to an end, since there was no bar to a Muhammadan marrying a Christian lady. He relied on Ameer Ali's Mahomedan Law, 3rd edn., p. 432.

[91] If the marriage were taken to be dissolved it would open a very wide door to wives who would desire to renounce Islam and the whole Muhammadan community would be seriously affected. The mere fact that there was a conversion could not dissolve a Muhammadan marriage.

Maulvi M. Shafi-uz-zaman, for the respondent, cited Zuburdust Khan v. His wife (1); Baillie's Digest, p. 182; Wilson's Anglo-Mahomedan Law, pp. 159 and 179; Ameer Ali's Mahomedan Law, 2nd edn., Volume II, p. 343; Hamilton's Heday, p. 66; Khan Bibi v. Pir Shah (3), Nowroz Ali v. Aziz Bibi (4), Allah Bakhsh v. Amir Begum (5) and Imamdin v. Hasan Bibi (6).

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The plaintiff and the defendant both being Muhammadans were married a number of years ago. The defendant Musammat Saman has apostatized from Islam and become a Christian and has since left the protection of her husband. He now sues for restitution of conjugal rights and the defence is that by the fact of her apostacy the marriage tie became dissolved and a decree cannot be passed for restitution of such rights. Both the lower courts have held that the suit cannot be maintained in view of the authorities upon the subject.

We have heard the argument of the learned counsel for the plaintiff appellant, which was based on a passage to be found in the third edition of

*Second Appeal No. 1260 of 1909 from a decree of Banke Behari Lal, Additional Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, dated the 9th of October, 1909, confirming a decree of Kunwar Sen, Munsif of Bulandshahr, dated the 9th of August, 1909.

Mr. Ameer Ali's work on Muhammadan Law. Mr. Ishaq Khan admits that there is no authority to be found in support of his contention outside the writings of the jurists of Balkh and Samarkhand, and this apparently is so. In the second edition of Mr. Ameer Ali's work it is definitely stated that " under the Muhammadan Law if a Moslem husband or a Moslem wife apostatize from Islam, the apostacy has the effect of dissolving the marriage tie between the parties." Baillie in his digest of Muhammadan Law at page 182 also states that " apostacy from Islam by one of a married pair is a cancellation of their marriage." In Hamilton's translation of the Hedaya at page 66 [92] is the passage:—"If either husband or wife apostatize from the faith a separation takes place without divorce according to Haneefa and Aboo Yoosuf." Sir Roland Wilson in his work on Anglo-Mahomedan Law, at page 156, writes as follows :—" It seems that the effect of either or both of the parties to a Mahomedan marriage renouncing the Mahomedan religion is to dissolve the marriage ipso facto, so far as the British Courts are concerned, leaving it open to the parties to solemnize a fresh marriage under the Christian Marriage Act, XV of 1872, according to circumstances. In the case of Zuburdust Khan v. His wife (1) TURNER, officiating C. J., and TURNBULL, J., expressed the opinion that the effect of the apostacy of a Muhammadan wife was to dissolve the marriage contract and that according to the Muhammadan Law if either party to a marriage becomes a convert to Christianity, a claim for restitution of conjugal rights cannot be supported. In addition to these authorities, we have the ruling in the case of Imam Din v. Hasan Bibi (2). In that case it was also held that according to the Muhammadan Law a wife's conversion from Islam to Christianity effects a complete dissolution of her marriage with her Muhammadan husband. There is thus a great mass of authority in support of the view taken by the courts below. The only ground, as we have said, upon which the learned counsel for the appellant supports his argument is the statement of Mr. Ameer Ali in the third edition of his work at page 432. The learned author directs attention to the divergence of opinion as to the effect of the wife's abjuration of Islam on the status of marriage, and points out that the lawyers of Bokhara have always taken a narrow view of the law but that the law of the jurists of Balkh and Samarkhand "laid down that when a woman abjures Islam for a scriptural or revealed religion like Judaism or Christianity, her renunciation of the faith does not dissolve the marriage." Then the learned author refers to the arguments in support of their contention and to the decision which we have just cited from the Punjab Chief Court Records and submits that "the British Indian Courts are by their constitution bound to follow the more reasonable enunciations of the jurists of Balkh and Samarkhand." We find ourselves unable to [93] disregard the authorities in support of the view taken by the courts below and depart from the course of decision hitherto prevailing. However weighty be the view expressed by Mr. Ameer Ali, we do not think that we should be justified in doing so. We therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

A Civil Court acting under section 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, set aside a sale on an application made about 14 months after the sale. The auction-purchaser more than a year after this order sued for possession of the property and for a declaration that the order under section 310A was passed without jurisdiction. Held that the order whether passed rightly or wrongly was not a nullity, and that the order having been passed in a proceeding other than a suit, article 13 of the second schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, barred the present suit, inasmuch as the plaintiff could not obtain a decree for possession without first having the order set aside.

[Dis: 69 I. C. 326=41 M. L. J. 334=14 L. W. 334=1921 M. W. N. 775=45 Mad. 70.]

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of KARAMAT HUSAIN, J. The facts of the case are stated in the judgment under appeal, which was as follows :—

"The facts necessary for the disposal of this appeal are briefly these :—The suit under appeal was brought for the possession of the property bought in execution of a decree on the 20th September, 1901, and the sale of that property was set aside by the learned Munsif on the 26th of September, 1901. On appeal the order of the learned Munsif setting aside the sale was reversed by the lower appellate court on the 16th of January, 1902. That order of the lower appellate court was upheld by the High Court on the 4th of December, 1902. The judgment-debtor again on the 23rd of December, 1902, applied under section 310A to have the sale set aside. The learned Munsif on the 20th of April, 1903, allowed the application and set aside the sale. On appeal to the lower appellate court the order of the Munsif setting aside the sale was again reversed on the 17th of July, 1903. On second appeal to the High Court it was held that no appeal lay to the lower appellate court. After the above-mentioned proceedings a fresh suit was instituted by the plaintiff for possession of the property sold. The result of the above proceedings, it is to be noticed, was, that the property sold on the 20th of September, 1901, passed to the possession of the judgment-debtor. The decree-holder therefore brought the suit under appeal for the recovery of [94] possession on the allegation that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to set aside the sale of the property by his order, dated the 28th of April, 1903. The court of first instance dismissed the claim on the ground that it had jurisdiction, and the decree of that court was affirmed by the lower appellate court. That court (the lower appellate court) in its judgment remarks :—'The word jurisdiction is not defined by the legislature, and it is used in different senses. In my opinion the Munsif had jurisdiction to entertain the application, dated the 23rd of December, 1902, in the sense that it was the proper court where it could lie, but it was barred by limitation [vide Chowdhry Kesri Sahay v. Giani Roy (1)] and he had no lawful authority to grant it, hence he may be said to have had no jurisdiction to grant it. But the question is, whether a separate suit like the present is maintainable under the circumstances ?' He, however, came to the conclusion that the suit was barred by limitation. He relied on Malkarjun v. Narhari, (2) and on Raghunath Prasad v. Kaniz Rasul, (3) and held that the learned Munsif had jurisdiction to pass the order which he passed on the 28th of April, 1903, and the suit ought to have been brought within one year from that date. The plaintiffs come here in second appeal, and it is argued by the learned vakil for the appellant that the suit is not barred by limitation. In my opinion the view taken by the lower appellate court is right. The learned Munsif had jurisdiction to pass the order dated the 28th of April, 1903, and that order was not a nullity. The suit on the authority of the rulings mentioned above is barred. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.'

A. L. J. 937.

Munshi Gulzari Lal, for the appellants, submitted that article 14, of the second schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, had no application, as the order complained of was not merely an "order of an officer of Government in his official capacity," but an order passed by a Civil Court. Article 13 was also not applicable as an order under section 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, was an order passed in the suit. He relied on Shankar Sarup v. Mejo Mal (1) and Govinda Bala v. Ganu Abaji (2). The suit would be governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Act.

Mr. G. W. Dillon, for the respondent, contended that the case in 10 Bombay Law Reporter, 749, was opposed to the ruling in Raghunath Prasad v. Kaniz Rasul (3) and that section 3 of the Limitation Act clearly laid down that a 'suit' did not include an 'application,' and therefore an order under section 310A which was passed on an application would be covered by Article 13 of the Limitation Act.

[95] Munshi Gulzari Lal was heard in reply.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—The facts of this case are these:—The suit is one for the recovery of property which was bought by the plaintiffs at a sale in execution of a decree on the 20th of September, 1901. This sale was set aside by the Munsif on the 26th of September, 1901. On appeal the order of the Munsif setting aside the sale was reversed by the lower appellate court on the 16th of January, 1902, and this order was upheld by the High Court on the 4th of December, 1902. Then the judgment-debtor, on the 23rd of December, 1902, applied to the Munsif under section 310A of Act XIV of 1882 to have the sale set aside, and his application was granted on the 28th of April 1903, and the sale was set aside. An appeal was preferred, and the order of the Munsif setting aside the sale was reversed on the 17th of July, 1903, but on second appeal to the High Court, it was held that no appeal lay to the lower appellate court and the decision of that court was reversed. The order of the Munsif of the 28th of April, 1903, accordingly stood affirmed.

The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was then preferred by the plaintiffs on the 6th of August, 1907. They claimed possession of the property which had been sold to them, alleging that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to set aside the sale to them by the order of the 28th of April, 1903.

The learned Judge of this Court, from whose decision this appeal has been preferred, agreeing with the lower courts, dismissed the plaintiffs' claim, holding that the Munsif had jurisdiction to pass the order of the 28th of April, 1903, and that the plaintiffs' suit was barred by limitation, it not having been brought within one year from the date of that order.

We are of opinion that the decision of the learned Judge of this Court is correct, and that Article 13 of Schedule 11 of the Limitation Act is applicable to this case. It is obvious that the plaintiffs cannot obtain a decree for possession without first having the order of the Munsif of the 28th of April, 1903, set aside. This order, whether it was passed rightly or wrongly, cannot be treated as a nullity. We have then to see what period of limitation is prescribed for a suit to have such an order set aside. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that a period [96] of limitation is not expressly provided in the schedule to the Limitation Act, and that Article 120 which allows a period of six years within which to bring a suit is applicable. We are of opinion that the article which is applicable is article 13. Article 12 provides a period of one year's limitation for a suit to set aside, amongst others, a sale in execution of a decree of a Civil Court. Article 13 provides the same period of limitation for a suit to alter or set aside a decision or order of a Civil Court in any proceeding other than a suit. "Suit" is defined in section 3 of the Act as not including an appeal or an application. "Suit" therefore in the article does not include an application in a suit. The article applies to an order in any proceeding other than a suit, and as an application is excluded from a 'suit,' it applies to an order in a proceeding on an application. If after the words "other than a suit" the words "or application in a suit" had been added to the article, it would be different. Now the order of the Munsif setting aside the sale was an order in a proceeding other than a suit and article 13 is in our opinion applicable. If this were not so, we should have a period of one year allowed for the institution of a suit to have a sale in execution of a decree of a Civil Court set aside, while for a suit to have an order setting aside a sale cancelled, the period would be six years. This was clearly, we think, never intended. This is unlike the case of Shankar Sarup v. Mejo Mal (1). In that case the suit was brought under the provisions of section 295 of the Code of 1882, and it was not therefore necessary to set aside the order for distribution passed under that section.

We think that the decision of the learned Judge of this Court, which is in agreement with the decisions of the courts below, is correct and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Held that the word "redeemed" as used in section 10 of Regulation XV of 1793, was not used in the sense that the mortgage had been redeemed in the full sense of that word, that is, satisfied and possession given to the mortgagor. So long, therefore, as the property remains in the hands of the mortgagee, the mortgagor can bring a suit for redemption even if the mortgage had been satisfied over 12 years before suit.

Held also that where a suit as filed is within the pecuniary jurisdiction of a court, the jurisdiction of the court is not ousted by the subsequent discovery that a sum is in fact due to the plaintiff exceeding the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction. Madho Das v. Ramji Patak (2) followed. Golap Singh v. Indra Coomar Hazra (3) dissented from.

THE plaintiffs in this case sued to redeem a usufructuary mortgage of the 7th June, 1847. The principal sum secured was 100 rupees, and the plaintiffs stated that the mortgage had been satisfied out of the profits of the property and that probably about another 100 rupees would be found due to them on taking an account, but if more was due they were ready to pay court fees on the amount. The suit was brought in the Court of a Munsif, who gave the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 4,267-12-2. This decree was affirmed on appeal by the Second Additional Judge of Aligarh. The defendants thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Mr. W. Wallach (with him Babu Satya Chandra Mukerji and Babu Piari Lal Banerji), for the appellant.

Munshi Govind Prasad, for the respondents.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.:—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage of the 7th June, 1847. The mortgage is a usufructuary mortgage, and the principal sum secured by it is only 100 rupees. The court of first instance [98] gave a decree to the plaintiffs for redemption and awarded them a sum of Rs. 4,267-12-2 as representing rents and profits which came into the hands of the mortgagee during his possession of the mortgaged property, over and above the interest chargeable on the mortgage Upon appeal this decree was affirmed. This second appeal has been preferred and two points have been argued before us by Mr. Wallach, the learned counsel for the appellant. The first of these is based on the provisions of section 10 of Regulation XV of 1793. This section provides for the interest which is to be allowed on mortgage securities executed subsequent to the 28th March, 1780, and prescribes that "all such mortgages are to be considered as virtually and in effect cancelled and redeemed, whenever the principal sum with simple interest due upon it, shall have been realized from the usufruct of the mortgaged property etc., etc." The court of first instance found that the mortgage debt in this case was satisfied in the year 1856 and the contention on behalf of the appellant is that from that date the mortgage must be deemed to have been satisfied and cancelled and thereafter the mortgagee must be deemed to have remained in adverse possession of the mortgaged property, and any claim now for the recovery of that property is barred by limitation. This point does not appear to have been brought, definitely at least, to the notice of the lower courts, but it is said that a question of limitation is one which an appellate court is bound to entertain even though it was not raised in the lower courts. This is no doubt so. We have considered the provisions of section 10 of the Regulation relied on and we are of opinion that it lends no support to the argument addressed to us. The section which is relied on simply means that once a mortgage debt has been satisfied by receipt of rents and profits, the mortgage is to be considered as satisfied and discharged. The word "redeemed" as used in the section was clearly not used in the sense that the mortgage had been redeemed in the full sense of that word, that is, satisfied and possession given to the mortgagor. So long as the property remains in the hands of the mortgagee it cannot be said that the mortgage has been redeemed. A right to redeem is a right to pay or tender the mortgage money, and where the mortgagee is in possession, to obtain from him delivery [99] of possession. See as to this section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is therefore no force in this contention.

A. L. J. 963.

The next point raised is that the jurisdiction of the Munsif only extended to a pecuniary limit of Rs. 1,000. The plaintiffs were unable accurately to estimate the amount which should be found to be recoverable by them in respect of surplus rents and profits. They fixed the amount at Rs. 100, but stated that if a larger amount was awarded to them, they would pay any additional court fee which might be payable. The learned Munsif found that a sum of Rs. 4,267-12-2 was the amount of rents and profits received by the defendant appellant after satisfaction of the mortgage debt. It is now contended that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to pass a decree for this amount, and that the plaint ought to have been returned to the plaintiffs for presentation to the court having jurisdiction to award that amount. This argument is largely based upon the ruling of a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Golap Singh v. Indar Coomar Hazra (1). In that case a suit for accounts and the recovery of certain papers was brought in the court of a Munsif, who had jurisdiction to try suits up to Rs. 1,000 in value. The suit was valued at less than Rs. 1,000. It was found by the Munsif that the amount due to the plaintiff was Rs. 8,424. It was held that the plaintiff could not obtain a decree for a sum above Rs. 1,000 and must relinquish the excess, that is, that the plaintiff could not obtain a decree for a sum beyond the pecuniary limit of the jurisdiction of the Munsif. This decision is opposed to a ruling of this Court, to which one of us was a party, in the case of Madho Das v. Ramji Patak (2). In that case it was held that the pecuniary jurisdiction of a Civil Court on its original or appellate side is, ordinarily speaking, governed by the value stated by the plaintiff in his plaint, and if a suit having regard to the valuation in the plaint is within the jurisdiction, such jurisdiction is not ousted by the court finding that a decree for a sum exceeding the limits of its pecuniary jurisdiction should be given to the plaintiff. The ruling in this case has not been the subject of any hostile criticism in this Court, so far as we are aware. On the contrary, it has been quoted [100] without disapproval in the Full Bench ruling in Zair Husain Khan v. Khurshed Jan (3). That was a suit for restitution of conjugal rights and it was argued in it that the suit was of necessity excluded from the jurisdiction of the Munsif as the suit could not be adequately valued. It was held by a Bench, of which one of us was a member, that a suit for restitution of conjugal rights is not a suit which is of necessity excluded from the jurisdiction of a Munsif ; that the value of such a suit as a rule, is the value which the plaintiff chooses to put upon it, provided that the suit be not unwarrantably undervalued or overvalued from improper motives. The same view was taken in the Madras High Court in the case of Arogya Udayan v. Appachi Rowthan (4). In that case the suit was for an account and the usual valuation for purposes of court fees was made in the plaint, which was filed and received in the Munsif's Court. The Munsif appointed a commissioner to take an account and the result was that the plaintiff was found by the commissioner to be entitled to a much larger sum than that at which the suit was valued. The plaintiff then applied for leave to amend the plaint, which was granted, and the valuation of the suit was accordingly increased. As the amount claimed in the amended plaint was greater then that over which the court of a Munsif ordinarily has jurisdiction, the Munsif ordered the plaint to be returned for presentation to the proper court. It was held by BENSON and BHASHYAM AYYANGAR, JJ., that the Munsif had acted with material irregularity in permitting the valuation of the suit to be revised and that he ought to have tried the case. In their judgement the learned Judges observe : —" This is a suit for an account, and in such a suit the valuation for purposes of court fees and jurisdiction does not disentitle the plaintiff to recover in the suit such higher amount as the evidence may show he is entitled to. The only restriction is that he cannot execute the decree without paying such additional court fee as may be due on the amount decreed. The valuation of the suit in the present case was made by the plaintiff in the bona fide belief that his valuation was correct, and, [101] in law, that valuation determined the grade of Court which had jurisdiction to entertain and try the suit." We are unable to agree with the decision in Golap Singh v. Indra Coomar Hazra.

These were the only two points which were argued before us by the learned counsel for the appellant. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

The property in dispute was mortgaged on the 19th January, 1886, to one Chet Ram, who was alleged to be a benamidar for the plaintiff's vendors. It had also been mortgaged on 21st June, 1881, to one Kadheri Mal. A part of the mortgaged property was sold by the heirs of the mortgagors to one Wilayati Begam on the 13th July, 1886, In the sale-deed it was provided that the consideration for the sale was to be left with the vendee for the discharge of the two mortgages of 1881 and 1886. Wilayati Begam made a gift of the property purchased to the defendant. The defendant discharged the mortgage of 1881 in favour of Kadheri Mal, but did not discharge that of 19th January, 1886, in favour of Chet Ram, the predecessor in title [102] of the plaintiff. The plaintiff brought this suit for sale upon his mortgage. The defendant appellant resisted it on the ground that he having paid off a prior mortgage was in the position of the prior mortgagee. The suit was decreed by the courts below which held that in paying off the prior mortgage, the defendant had acted as an agent of the mortgagors and could not therefore claim the benefit of the payment as against the plaintiff. The defendant appealed.

Moulvi Muhammad Ishaq, for the appellant, relied on Matiullah Khan v. Banwari Lal (1), Dinobundhu Shaw Chowdhry v. Jogmaya Dasi (2) and Gokal Das Gopaldas v. Puran Mal Premsukhdas (3). The defendant was in the position of a prior mortgagee. The fact that money was left with the defendant did not alter his position. He meant the prior mortgage to be kept alive in his favour.

Maulvi Shafi-uz-zaman, for the respondent, was not called upon.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI and CHAMIER, JJ.—This appeal arises out of a suit for sale upon a mortgage, dated the 19th of January, 1886, executed in favour of one Chet Ram. It has been found that Chet Ram was only benamidar for the vendors of the plaintiff and that those persons were the real mortgagees. On the 13th of July, 1886, the heir of the mortgagors sold a portion of the mortgaged property to Wilayati Begam, the mother of the appellant, Muhammad Sadiq. The consideration for the sale was Rs. 875, and it was stated in the sale-deed that the vendors had received the whole of the amount of the consideration in cash, but had left it with the vendee to pay off debts due to Chet Ram and Kadheri Mal, and that the vendee was to pay those debts and obtain receipts from the creditors. One of the debts which the vendee undertook to discharge was the debt due under the mortgage deed of the 19th of January, 1886, of which Chet Ram was the nominal mortgagee. Wilayati Begam made a gift of the property to the appellant Muhammad Sadiq. His contention is that the mortgage in favour of Kadheri Mal was discharged by Wilayati Begam, and [103] that as the said mortgage was dated the 21st of June, 1881, and was thus of a date prior to the date of the mortgage on foot of which the plaintiff has brought this suit, he (the appellant) has priority over the plaintiff to the extent of the amount which was paid to Kadheri Mal and can hold up the mortgage so discharged as a shield against the claim of the plaintiff. In the court of first instance no such plea was put forward in the written statement, nor was any issue joined on the point, but in the lower appellate court, the plea was advanced. That court overruled it on the ground that the appellant or his predecessor in title had acted in the matter of the payment of Kadheri Mal's mortgage as the agent of the mortgagors and could not therefore claim the benefit of the payment as against the plaintiff. The correctness of this view of the learned Judge is questioned in this appeal.

In all cases where a subsequent purchaser claims priority over a puisne mortgagee by reason of his having discharged a prior mortgage, the question is always one of intention, that is, whether it was the intention to keep the prior mortgage alive as against the puisne mortgagee. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gokal Das v. Puran Mal (4), the first question is, is there express evidence of the intention, and if there is no such evidence what intention should be ascribed to the person who makes the payment? In this case it seems to us that, having regard to the circumstances, the intention clearly was, at the time when the sale in favour of Wilayati Begam was executed, that the prior mortgages in favour of Kadheri Mal and Chet Ram should be extinguished by payment out of the consideration for the sale in the hands of the purchaser. The purchaser, as has been said above, undertook to discharge not only the debt due to Kadheri Mal but also the debt due under the mortgage upon which the present suit is based. He paid Kadheri Mal, but he did not pay Chet Ram, and he kept in his own pocket the portion of the consideration which should have been appropriated to the discharge of the mortgage debt in favour of Chet Ram. Not having paid that debt, he seeks to hold up as a shield against the claim made for the recovery of the debt, which he was also bound to pay, the payment of the prior debt. [104] We are of opinion that he cannot do so. It was clearly the intention at the time when the sale was effected that the prior mortgage in favour of Kadheri Mal would be extinguished and not kept alive. Now what was the intention at the time when that mortgage was discharged? We think that the evidence of the intention of the parties, as afforded by the sale-deed of the 13th of July, 1866, at the time of that sale, negatives the idea that at the time when the prior mortgage was discharged, it was intended to keep it alive for the benefit of the subsequent purchaser. This is further manifest from the fact that when the defendant appellant filed his written statement, he did not assert that he had priority over the plaintiff by reason of his having discharged the earlier mortgage. This was clearly an afterthought. Under the circumstances we are of opinion that the appellant cannot hold up as a shield the mortgage which he has paid off against the debt which he undertook to pay but which he did not discharge. In this view the plea of the appellant is untenable and we disallow it, though not on the ground set forth in the judgement of the court below. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

&c." The transaction sought to be pre-empted was a perpetual lease with a substantial [105] premium but a nominal rent It was in fact apparently a sale under the guise of a lease, this device having been adopted in the hope of evading pre-emption. The Court of first instance decreed the claim, but upon appeal this decree was reversed by the District Judge, who considered that the transaction in question was not an "intiqal" within the meaning of the wajib-ul-arz. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the appellants.

Munshi Gobind Prasad, for the respondents.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a pre-emption suit. The defendant Hazari executed in favour of the defendant Jaggu a perpetual lease, which purports to be a lease of a share in Mauza Bichhanpur, district Ghazipur, at a yearly rent of Rs. 5-14-6 on payment of a fine of Rs. 1,436. The plaintiffs, who are shareholders in the village claim the right to pre-empt this transaction, relying on a custom prevailing in the village and recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of the village. The custom is that " whenever any co-sharer transfers (intiqal) his share (haqiat) in any mahal, he shall transfer it first to a near co-sharer and after that to a remote co-sharer in his patti, etc." The plaintiffs claim the right to pre-empt the transfer made to the defendant Jaggu on the allegation that it is a transfer within the meaning of the wajib-ul-arz. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiffs' claim, but upon appeal the learned District Judge reversed the decision of the court below on the ground that the transaction carried out by the document of the 14th May, 1909, was not a transfer within the meaning of the word 'transfer' as used in the wajib-ul-arz. In his judgment he says the oral evidence shows, " that they (i.e., the parties) intended to effect a sale, but for fear of pre-emption they changed their minds and effected the transfer by a lease. This is not sufficient to change what is a lease into a sale," and, later on : —" They, the parties, were within their rights, if they adopted this device to defeat the claim of the pre-emptor." The decision of the learned District Judge is impugned in this second appeal, and we have to determine whether or not the so called lease of 14th May, 1909, is a transfer (intiqal) by the defendant Hazari of his interest in the village to the defendant Jaggu. The word intiqal is, it is to be noted, a word of very wide signification [106] and covers all kinds of transfers. See Jagdam Sahai v. Mahabir Prasad (1). The lease purports to create a perpetual interest, reserving merely a nominal rent, and was granted by Hazari in consideration of the payment of the substantial fine of Rs. 1,436. There can be little doubt that this transaction was entered into with a view to defeat the rights of pre-emptors and that the transaction was in reality a sale. A similar question came up for decision before a Bench of this Court in the case of Ahmed Ali Khan v. Ahmed (2). That was also a suit for pre-emption. A usufructuary lease was executed by co-sharers in a village for a term of 8 years with a provision that the lessees should remain in possession during its term and on its expiration should surrender the lands making no demand for the money advanced by them to the lessors, etc. The plaintiffs claimed a right to pre-empt this transaction relying upon the provision of the wajib-ul-arz of the village to the effect that in all cases of transfer by sale, etc., the co-sharers would have a preferential right to the same. It was held by SPANKIE and TURNBULL, JJ. that the co-sharers were entitled by right of pre-emption to take over the usufructuary lease. In the course of their judgment the learned Judges observe:—"We do not think it necessary to determine here whether this transaction be strictly speaking a mortgage or not. The terms of the administration paper are that in cases of transfer by sale, &c., a preferential claim may be raised," and later on they observe:—"In our opinion we should rather regard the object, for which prohibitions against transfer are made in the administration papers of village communities. The object clearly is to keep out strangers and to retain the property in the hands of the brotherhood: a transfer of proprietary right for a term of 8 years to a stranger may be as mischievous to the brotherhood as a mortgage for the same or a longer term. In this point of view an usufructuary lease for 8 years is as much a transfer, as a mortgage for the same term; and if the condition of the administration paper includes all transfers, permanent and temporary, which we hold it to do, then co-sharers have a preferential right over a stranger." The principle of this ruling applies to this case. In fact the case before us is a stronger case, inasmuch as here the [107] possession of the property is given over to a stranger in perpetuity subject to the payment of a merely nominal rent. For these reasons we are of opinion that the court of first instance was right in the conclusion at which it arrived. We therefore set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and restore the decree of the court of first instance with costs of this appeal and also the costs of the lower appellate court. We extend the time for payment of the price for three months from this date.

Appeal decreed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

I. C. 570=7
A. L. J. 1087.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the redemption of two mortgages dated respectively the 13th of December, 1870, and the 24th of June, 1871, made by one Ganjan Ram. The first mortgage secured a sum of Rs. 1,600 and in it a four biswa share was mortgaged. Under the second mortgage Rs. 400 was borrowed and an additional one biswa share was mortgaged. The plaintiff has acquired the mortgagor's [108] rights in a portion of the mortgaged property and he brought the suit which has given rise to this appeal to redeem the two mortgages offering to pay the principal amounts secured thereby. The mortgagees claimed a further sum of Rs. 14,867-10-9 on account of deficiency of interest.

The first mortgage deed provides that the mortgagees should take possession of the mortgaged property and out of the rents and profits pay the Government revenue and appropriate Rs. 132 per annum on account of interest at the rate of 11 annas per cent. per mensem. It further provides that should the amount of profits, calculated on the basis of the patwari's accounts, be found to be insufficient to cover the whole amount payable for interest, the deficiency would be made good by the mortgagor together with interest at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem. There is a similar clause in the second mortgage deed also. The defendants alleged that the rents and profits of the mortgaged property were insufficient for the realization of the full amount of interest at the stipulated rate of 11 annas per cent. per mensem and that under the terms of the mortgage deeds, a large amount was due to them on account of deficiency of interest. The court of first instance found in their favour and made a decree for redemption upon payment of Rs. 14,634-2-3. The plaintiff appealed against this decree to the lower appellate court. The learned Judge of that court was of opinion that for the amount of deficiency in interest there was no charge on the mortgaged property; that the mortgagors undertook only a personal liability for the payment thereof and that the defendants were only entitled to get the amount of deficiency due for the six years preceding the date of the suit. The learned Judge accordingly made a decree for redemption upon payment of the principal amounts of the mortgages and of the amount which he found to be due on account of deficiency in interest for six years preceding the date of the suit. If the view taken by the learned Judge, namely, that there was no charge on the mortgaged property for deficiency of interest, is correct, the decree made by him for payment of the deficiency which arose during the six years preceding the date of the suit is clearly erroneous. It was the mortgagor who according to the learned Judge incurred a personal liability [109] for the payment of the amount of deficiency. If it was not a charge on the property the plaintiff, who is the purchaser of the property, could not be saddled with the payment of that amount and such payment could not be declared to be a condition precedent to the redemption of the property. We are of opinion that the learned Judge is in error in holding that the mortgaged property was not security for deficiency of interest. The mortgage deeds provide for payment of interest at the rate of 11 annas per cent. per mensem. The mortgaged property therefore was security not only for the principal amounts of the mortgages but also for the interest stipulated to be paid. The whole amount of stipulated interest being thus chargeable on the mortgaged property that property was security for any portion of such interest which remained unrealized out of the rents and profits. It is thus manifest that the mortgaged property was security for the amount of deficiency. It is deficiency in the stipulated amount of interest which was recoverable by the mortgagee, under the terms of the mortgage, in the event of the rents and profits being found to be insufficient to cover the whole amount of interest. It is true that the mortgagor undertook a personal liability also for the amount of deficiency, but this he did not only for the amount of deficiency but also for interest thereon at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem. The fact of his undertaking a personal liability for the stipulated interest did not relieve the mortgage property from liability to satisfy the deficiency. This amount of deficiency the mortgagees are in our opinion entitled to get for the whole period of the mortgage and not for six years only. This case cannot be distinguished in principle from that of Muhammad Husain v. Sheodarshan Das (1). In that case the mortgagor was entitled to a malikana allowance from the mortgagee. This allowance was not paid and it was held that the amount of the malikana allowance should be deducted from the mortgage money for the full period of the mortgage, although the mortgagor might have sued and recovered the arrears of malikana separately. The principle of this case clearly applies to the present case and the mortgagees are entitled to obtain the deficiency of interest for the [110] full period during which the mortgage money remained unsatisfied. The case of Ganga Sahai v. Lochan Singh (2) relied upon by the learned Judge is not in point. There it was held that additional interest was not payable as the mortgagee waived his right to it, but the mortgagor was declared to be liable for the interest originally agreed to be paid. As to the additional interest claimed in the present case at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem on the amount of deficiency, it is not according to the terms of the mortgages a charge on the mortgaged property. Therefore the defendants, in our opinion, are not entitled to obtain further interest on the amount of deficiency in interest. It is stated by the defendants that the amount of deficiency in interest for 39 years during which the mortgage remained undischarged is Rs. 2,100-7-9. They have claimed further interest on that amount but in view of the opinion expressed above they are not entitled to it. As to Rs. 2,100-7-9 the accounts produced by them was found by the Court of first instance to be in accordance with the patwari's account and the learned Judge accepted this finding and held the accounts to be correct. There can be no objection, therefore, to the correctness of the principal amount claimed as deficiency in interest. This amount we hold the defendants are entitled to get from the plaintiff in addition to the principal amounts of the two mortgages: that is to say, the plaintiff can obtain redemption upon payment of Rs. 4,100-7-9. The result is that we allow the appeal, vary the decree of the Courts below and make a decree for redemption upon payment within six months from this date, of Rs 2,000 for principal and Rs. 2,100-7-9 for deficiency of interest, in all Rs 4,100-7-9, together with interest, at the rate of 11 annas per cent. per mensem on Rs. 2,000, the principal amount secured by the mortgage, from the date of the suit, to the date fixed for payment and further interest on the amount decreed at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from such date to the date of actual payment; as also, of the costs of the suit as hereinafter provided. The respective parties will pay costs in all courts in proportion to failure and success. The objections taken by the respondent under order XLIV, [111] rule 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure, fail and are dismissed with costs.

Act No. IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property Act), section 91—Redemption—Mortgage of fixed-rate tenancy by tenant—Death of tenant without heirs—Right of zamindar to redeem—Escheat to Crown—Act (Local) No. II of 1901 (Agra Tenancy Act), sections 5, 18, 20 57.

Held that on the death of a fixed-rate tenant without heirs his tenancy does not escheat to the Crown but reverts to the zamindar. Ram Dihal Rai v. The Maharaja of Vizianagaram (1) overruled. Rance Sonet Kowar v. Mirza Himmut Bahadoor (2) distinguished.

[Fol : 22 I. C. 891; 75 I. C. 621.]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

On Ram Dhian Koeri was a fixed-rate tenant of the holding in dispute. In 1870 he usufructuarily mortgaged the holding to the respondents, Gurdial Singh and others. Ram Dhian disappeared and was not heard of for more than seven years. The zamindars of the village, thereupon, brought this suit for redemption on the ground that Ram Dhian having died heirless, the tenancy lapsed to them. Among other defences, it was pleaded that on the death of Ram Dhian, the tenancy went to the Crown and not to the zamindar, and the zamindar consequently had no interest to redeem the mortgage. This plea found favour with both the courts below and they dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court. At the hearing of the appeal before the Single Bench the correctness of the ruling in Ram Dihal Rai v. The Maharaja of Vizianagram (1) was not discussed, the learned Judge having stated that he considered himself bound by that ruling. It was, however, contended that as there was no finding by the lower Appellate Court that the tenant was in fact dead, the ruling could not apply. This contention was met [112] by the argument that, as it was the plaintiff's case that the tenant was dead, no specific finding was necessary. It was further contended that the case fell under section 87 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901.

The following judgment was delivered by ALSTON, J. :—

" In my opinion the suit out of which this appeal arises was rightly dismissed. A zamindar claimed the right to redeem a usufructuary mortgage which had been executed by a tenant at fixed rates. The lower appellate court dealt very shortly indeed with the appeal, holding that the case was covered by the ruling of Ram Dihal Rai v. The Maharaja of Vizianagram (1). It has been contended here by the learned counsel for the appellant that the ruling has no application, because it was based on the fact that the fixed rate tenant had died without heirs, and that in consequence the rights which he possessed in the land had become vested in the Crown. Whether that circumstance did or did not lie at the foundation of the ruling, I need not decide, for it was the appellant plaintiff's case that the tenant, not having been heard of for a long time must be presumed to be dead. That view was pleaded in the third paragraph of the plaint. It was repeated in the prayer for relief. It was reiterated in the first ground of appeal to the lower appellate court. There is nothing in the plaint to suggest as it is now argued that the zamindar's case was that there had been an abandonment of the land within the meaning of section 87 of the Tenancy Act. Moreover, having regard to the fact that the zamindar had himself admitted the existence of a usufructuary mortgagee in possession, and to the further fact that he made no attempt to show that the tenant had " left the neighbourhood, without arranging for the payment of his rent as it fell due and giving notice to the landholder of such arrangement," he had not even laid the foundation for the case of abandonment which is now set up. The first Court found that the tenant was still alive, but the lower appellate court said nothing on this point. It is in my opinion, however, unnecessary to remand the case for a finding on the point ; for upon any view of the case set up by the plaintiff in his plaint the suit must fail. The appeal is dismissed with costs."

The plaintiffs appealed under section 10 of the Letters Patent.

The appeal came on for hearing before the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice BANERJI who referred the case to a Full Bench.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the appellants :—

On the death of a fixed rate tenant, the tenancy lapsed to the zamindar and not to the Crown. The ruling in Ram Dihal Rai v. The Maharaja of Vizianagram (1) did not lay down the correct law. It purported to follow the precedent of Ranee Sonet Kowar v. Mirza Himmut Bahadoor (2), but that dealt with a case different from that of a fixed [113] rate tenancy. There the question was in respect of a mukarrari tenure which was a lease in perpetuity, the grantor reserving no right of re-entry in himself. Whereas in the case of a fixed rate tenure, the zamindar had such right. He could eject the tenant if he failed to pay the rent or was guilty of any other breach of contract. It was only freehold that went to the Crown ; Attorney General v. Sir George Sands (3), Walker v. Denne (4) and Downe v. Morris (5).

Munshi Govind Prasad for the respondents :—

Section 20 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, laid down that the interest of a fixed rate tenant was both heritable and transferable. It contemplated that the tenant had absolute interest in the tenancy. Fixed rate tenure was of the nature of mukarrari tenure. The ruling in 1 Cal. 391 did apply to the case.

STANLEY, C. J. :—The plaintiffs are zamindars of the village of Karmanpur in the district of Ballia. There is a small cultivatory holding which was held from the plaintiffs by one Ram Dhian as a tenant at fixed rates. In the year 1870 he executed a usufructuary mortgage of this holding in favour of the respondents, which contained a provision for redemption in any Jeth. Ram Dhian is said to have disappeared a number of years ago, and according to the plaintiffs he has not been heard of for more than seven years and must be presumed to have died. It is also alleged that he died without heirs. The plaintiffs instituted the suit for redemption of the usufructuary mortgage, out of which this appeal has arisen. The right of the plaintiffs to redeem is contested and the defendants further allege that Ram Dhian is alive. The lower appellate court held, relying upon the decision of a Bench of this Court in the case of Ram Dihal Rai v. The Maharaja of Vizianagram (1), that the plaintiffs had no interest in the equity of redemption of the property and could not maintain a suit for redemption. A second appeal was preferred to this Court and the learned Judge, before whom it came for disposal, dismissed it. An appeal under the Letters Patent was then preferred, and the correctness of the decision in Ram Dihal Rai v. The Maharaja of Vizianagram is challenged. whom the appeal came for hearing, were of opinion that the question raised was one of importance and should be decided by a larger Bench. Accordingly the appeal has come before us.

The sole question for determination is whether or not the lower appellate court and the learned Judge of this Court were right in holding that the plaintiffs had no such interest in the mortgaged property as entitled them to maintain a suit for redemption of the defendants' mortgage. The contention on behalf of the appellants is that Ram Dhian died without heirs and that thereupon his tenancy became extinguished and that the plaintiffs are entitled to possession of the holding, or at least to possession of it on redemption of the mortgage of 1870.

In Ram Dihal v. The Maharaja of Vizianagram the facts were these :—A zamindar brought a suit to redeem a mortgage made by a fixed rate tenant alleging that the fixed rate tenant had died without heirs and that his interest had thereby lapsed to him. The court of first instance held that, in the event of the tenant having died childless, his interest went to the Crown and not to the plaintiff, and dismissed the suit. His decision was reversed by the lower appellate court and a second appeal was preferred to the High Court. The learned Judges before whom it came for disposal held that the tenancy did not lapse upon the death of the tenant without heirs, but that the tenancy became vested in the Crown. They relied on the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ranee Sonet Kowar v. Mirza Himmut Bahadoor (1). They further held that in order to redeem, the person seeking redemption must have an interest "in the mortgaged property," that the mortgaged property in that case was the interest of a fixed rate tenant, and that the mere fact that the zamindar has a proprietary interest in the land out of which this interest is carved, does not give him an interest within the meaning of section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Let us see what was decided in Ranee Sonet Kowar v. Mirza Himmut Bahadoor. In that case the grantee from a Hindu zamindar of an ordinary mokurraree istimrarce tenure died without heirs and it was held that the Crown by the general [115] prerogative was entitled to the lease ; that the mokurraree, though carved out of zamindari, being an absolute alienable interest therein, could not have reverted to the grantor and that there was no authority upon which the power of taking by escheat can be attributed to the grantor. In that case it will be observed that the mokurraree was an absolute and alienable interest. It could not have been forfeited for the non-payment of rent. The zamindar could only in the case of non-payment of rent have caused it to be seized, put up for sale and sold to the highest bidder. It was therefore property which might have passed to any purchaser, and having so passed the estate would not have determined upon the death of the grantee without heirs if it had been sold in her life-time. The language of their Lordships is as follows :—" The mokurraree was clearly an absolute interest. It was also an alienable interest. It might have been seized and sold, as Mr. Doyne has shown, under Act X of 1859, even in a suit for rent. It could not have been forfeited for the non-payment of rent ; for in such a case the zamindar could only have caused it to be seized, put up for sale, and sold to the highest bidder. It is therefore property which, like that in the case above cited, might have passed to any purchaser, whatever his nationality, or by whatever law he was to be governed. It cannot, their Lordships think, be successfully argued that having so passed the estate would have determined upon the death of Sharfun-nissa (supposing it had been sold in her life-time) without heirs, for the grant contains no provision for the lease of the estate created in such event."

The grant in this case was, it will be observed, that of an absolute interest and altogether unlike the interest of a fixed rate tenant. Let us see what is the nature of the interest of a fixed rate tenant.

Section 5 of the Agra Tenancy Act, I of 1901, prescribes that when any land in a district which is permanently settled, has been held by a tenant and his predecessor in title from the time of the permanent settlement at the same rate of rent, "such tenant shall have a right of occupancy at that rate." A fixed rate tenant therefore is a tenant who has a right of occupancy at a fixed rate. Section 18 prescribes that a right of occupancy shall be extinguished [116] when, amongst other cases, a tenant dies leaving no heir entitled under the Act to inherit the right of occupancy. A fixed rate tenant is liable to ejectment for non-payment of rent or breach of conditions (section 57). It appears to me, therefore, that a fixed rate tenancy is but a limited interest, which cannot be the subject of escheat to the Crown. In fact, the Act provides that on the death of the tenant without heirs the interest of such a tenant, described in the Act as a right of occupancy, shall be extinguished. With all deference to the learned Judges who decided the case of Ram Dihal Rai v. The Maharaja of Vizianagram, I am of opinon that that case was wrongly decided. If then it be the case that Ram Dhian is dead without leaving an heir as defined in section 22 of the Act, the plaintiffs are clearly entitled to redeem the mortgage held by the respondents, if they are not entitled to possession of the holding without redemption. The question whether the plaintiffs are bound to discharge the mortgage debt does not arise because they are willing and have offered to do so. The first court found that Ram Dhian was still alive. If this be so, the plaintiffs' suit must fail. The lower appellate court, however, dismissed the appeal to it on the sole ground that the plaintiffs could not be regarded as having any interest in the equity of redemption of the holding, and this is the view which seems to have commended itself to the learned Judge of this Court. I would allow the appeal and set aside the decree of the learned Judge of this Court, and as the lower appellate court, decided the appeal on a preliminary point, I would remand the appeal to that court with directions that that court determine the appeal on the merits.

KNOX, J :—I have nothing to add to the judgment of the learned Chief Justice. I fully agree with the view taken by him.

BANERJI, J.:—I also concur with the learned Chief Justice. The view taken in Ram Dihal Rai v. The Maharaja of Vizianagram (1) was never adopted as far as I am aware, in any other case and seems to me to be inconsistent with the nature of a tenancy at fixed rates. Such a tenancy is carved out of the landholder's interest in the land to which it ralates and a fixed [117] rate tenant has no absolute interest in it. If the tenancy comes to an end it necessarily goes back to the estate which it was carved out of and lapses to the landholder. It is true that a fixed rate tenant has a heritable and transferable interest in his holding under s. 20 of the Agra Tenancy Act, but if he does not transfer the holding and dies leaving no heirs entitled to inherit it, the tenancy becomes extinct and reverts to the landlord who created it. The landlord has in certain cases a right to determine the tenancy, eject the tenant and re-enter into possession. For example, under section 57 of the Act, a tenant, not being a permanent tenure-holder, may be ejected for any of the reasons mentioned in the several clauses of the section, and as a fixed rate tenant is not a permanent tenure-holder, he may be ejected for any of those reasons. His interest in his holding is thus of a limited character and differs in material respects from an absolute hereditary mokurrari tenure which formed the subject of consideration by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ranee Sonet Kowar v. Mirza Himmut Bahadoor (1). As pointed out by their Lordships, such mokurrari is an absolute interest and could not have been forfeited to the zamindar. Such is not the case with a fixed-rate tenancy. The ruling of their Lordships therefore does not support the decision in the case of Ram Dihal Rai v. The Maharaja of Vizianagram. Having regard to the incidents of a fixed rate tenancy I am unable, with great respect, to agree with that decision and to hold that a tenancy in these provinces escheats to the Crown.

BY THE COURT:—The order of the court is that the appeal be allowed and the decrees of the learned Judge of this court and of the lower appellate court be set aside and, as the case was decided by the lower appellate court on a preliminary point and we have overruled the court on that point, we remand the case under order XLI, rule 23, to the lower appellate court with directions to readmit the appeal under its original number in the register of civil appeals and proceed to determine the appeal.

Appeal decreed. Cause remanded.

which she alleged she had inherited from her son Gur Dayal. She was the widow of Tiwari Jwala Prasad, who died in 1869, leaving him surviving his widow Duni Kunwar, two sons, Kalka Prasad and Gur Dayal, and a daughter Laraiti Kunwar, who is one of the appellants in the connected appeal No. 231. Jwala Prasad was one of the three sons of Kushal Singh, the other sons being Daryao Singh and Umrao Singh. Daryao Singh had a son Jaswant Singh, but with his branch of the family we are not concerned in this appeal. Umrao Singh's son was Gandharap Singh, and it is asserted by the appellant Jwala Prasad that he was adopted to Gandharap Singh. In first appeal No. 173 of 1908, decided on the 15th of December, 1909, we held for the reasons stated in the judgement in the case, that Jwala Prasad was validly adopted. For the same reasons we hold in this case that he was so adopted and must be treated as the adopted son of Gandharap Singh. Of the sons of Tiwari Jwala Prasad, Kalka Prasad died on 23rd of April, 1893, leaving a widow Janki Kunwar, who is the principal [119] defendant in this case. Gur Dayal Singh died about 4 months afterwards, that is, on the 7th of August, 1893, his widow Musammat Raniji died in 1899. The pedigree of the family is thus set forth in the judgement of the court bolow: —

"The suit which has given rise to this and the connected appeal was brought by Duni Kunwar on the allegation that the two brothers Kalka Prasad and Gur Dayal Singh were members of a joint family; that upon Kalka Prasad's death Gur Dayal by right of survivorship succeeded to the whole of the property; that after his death his widow inherited it, and upon the widow's death she, Duni Kunwar, as his mother inherited it. She asserts that Janki Kunwar had no interest in the said property, and that she is in unlawful possession of a half share. Duni Kunwar accordingly prayed for a declaration that Gur Dayal and Kalka Prasad were members of a joint family and that she is by right of inheritance to her son Gur Dayal the owner of that property, and she claimed possession of a half share of the property now in the possession of Janki Kunwar. The plaint contains an allegation to the effect that if it was found that a partition had taken place between the brothers, she as the mother of the two brothers obtained a third share under the partition and was therefore entitled to recover from the defendant Janki Kunwar, a sixth share of the property, being the difference between a third share and a fourth share, of which she, Duni Kunwar, was in possession. Accordingly in the alternative she claimed possession of a sixth share. There were other prayers in the plaint to which we need not refer for the purposes of these appeals.

"The court below held that the two brothers Kalka Prasad and Gur Dayal were separate; that Janki Kunwar inherited a half share of the property being share of her husband, that Duni Kunwar got no share under partition, and that her claim to a third share is not maintainable and is also barred by limitation. That court [120] accordingly dismissed the suit on the 7th of February, 1906. Duni Kunwari having died after the decision of the suit, that is, on the 18th of April, 1906, this appeal No. 73 of 1910 has been preferred by the minor Jwala Prasad, and he claims as the adopted son of Gandharap Singh to be the next reversioner to the estate after Duni Kunwar's death. The connected appeal No. 231 of 1906 has been preferred by Musammat Laraiti Kunwar, the daughter of Duni Kunwar, and her sons on the allegation that Duni Kunwar obtained a share in the property under a partition between her sons ; that the property so acquired was her stridhan and that it passed on her death to her (Lairati Kunwar)."

Mr. M. L. Agarwala (with him Mr. W. Wallach), for the appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal (with him Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri), and Munshi Gokul Prasad for the respondents.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—The facts of this case are stated in the judgement just now delivered in F. A. No. 73 of 1910. The contention on behalf of the appellant is, that as there was a partition between the sons of Duni Kunwar she as their mother acquired a third share in the property, that such share was, in accordance with rulings of this Court, her stridhan and passed on her death to her personal heir, namely, the appellant Laraiti Kunwar and that the appellant is entitled to a decree for a one sixth share claimed in the alternative by Duni Kunwar in the second prayer of her plaint. In our opinion this contention is without force. As we have stated in our judgement in First Appeal No. 73 of 1910, there was no actuul partition between the sons of Duni Kunwar, although by reason of the arrangement under which they held the property after Gur Dayal Singh had come of age, there was a disruption of the joint family within the meaning of the rulings of their Lordships of the Privy Council. Indeed it was never asserted that a third share was assigned to Duni Kunwar at any such partition. On the contrary, under an agreement dated the 8th of September, 1893, entered into between Duni Kunwar and the two widows of her sons, the name of Janki Kunwar was to be recorded in respect of a half share, that of Raniji in respect of one fourth, and that of Duni Kunwar in regard to the remaining one fourth. This agreement [121] negatives the allegation that Duni Kunwar obtained a third share by partition. No doubt under the Mitakshara upon a partition being made by sons after the death of their father the mother is entitled to a share equal to that of a son. But we are of opinion that she would obtain such share only if an actual partition took place between the sons. The text of Yajnavalkya on this point is this :—" Of heirs dividing after the death of the father, let the mother also take an equal share (Mitakshara, chapter I, section 7, para. 1)." This in our opinion implies an actual division of the family property, that is, a completed partition under which there is a division of interest as well as separate possession. We do not think that a mere severance of interest where no actual division of the property takes place confers on the mother a right to a share equal to that of each of her sons. It has been held that a mother has no right to compel a partition. See Bilaso v. Dina Nath (1). It is only when the sons actually divide the property and effect a complete partition that the mother can get a share. There is nothing in the Mitakshara from which we may infer that upon a mere severance of the joint status of a Hindu family a mother can claim a share. As there was no such partition in the present case, Duni Kunwar never obtained a share. It is true that her name was recorded in regard to a fourth share after the death of her sons but that was with the consent of the son's widows and not by reason of her having obtained a share upon a partition between her sons. Further, even if it be assumed that she became entitled to a third share when her two sons agreed to hold the property in defined shares, as this severance of interest took place some time prior to 1892, that is more than 12 years before the institution of the suit, her right to the share has clearly become extinct by the operation of limitation. The learned counsel for the appellants has relied upon the decision of the Privy Council in Ganesh Dutt Thakur v. Jewach Thakurain (1). That case has in our opinion no bearing on the present question. In that case when a suit was brought for partition of the share of a son it was held that at such a partition the mother would get a share, and her share was assigned to her although she had not obtained it before. That [122] case therefore does not help the appellants. Moreover, under the agreement of the 8th of September, 1893, referred to above, Duni Kunwar acquiesced in the arrangement by which a fourth share was assigned to her and as she was admittedly in possession of a fourth share at the date of the suit she had no cause of auction. For these reasons we hold that the suit brought by her was bound to fail and has been rightly dismissed by the court below. We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs. Janki Kunwar and Shiam Bihari respondents will get separate sets of costs.

Appeal dismissed.

WAJID ALI KHAN (Plaintiff) v. SHAFAKAT HUSSAIN (Defendant).*

Construction of document—Sale subject to agreement executed on the same day reserving right to vendor to repurchase—Documents to be read together—Mortgage.

Two documents were executed by the same parties on the same day. The first purported to be an out and out sale of certain property, but was expressed to be "subject to the terms of the deed of agreement executed by the vendee." The agreement referred to was an agreement under certain conditions to reconvey the property purchased. Held that in the circumstances the two documents must be read together as constituting a mortgage by conditional sale. Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (2) distinguished.

THIS was a suit for redemption of a mortgage constituted, as alleged by the plaintiff, by two documents of even date, the first being a sale deed, the second an agreement for the repurchase of the property under certain conditions by the vendor.

The court of first instance decreed the suit. The lower appellate court reversed the decree. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The material portions of the documents upon the construction of which the case turns are set forth in the judgment of the court. The question was whether the two documents were to be read together as constituting a mortgage by conditional sale.

Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba, for the appellant.

Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq, for the respondent.

[123] STANLEY, C. J., and GRIFFIN, J. :—The question in this appeal is whether two documents both dated the 30th April, 1897, are to be read together, and, if so read, constitute a transaction amounting to a mortgage. The lower appellate court has read them separtely and has treated the transaction as an out and out sale with an agreement to repurchase within a limited period. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought for redemption of the property. The court of first instance decreed the claim, but upon appeal the lower appellate court reversed the decision of the court of first instance and dismissed the plaintiff's claim holding that the two documents in question were not to be read together, but separately, and so read constituted a sale and independent agreement for repurchase. We are of opinion that the lower appellate court was wrong in the construction which it placed on the documents. The first of the two documents purports to be an out and out sale, but at the end of the instrument the vendor declares that he has executed "this sale-deed subject to the terms of the deed of agreement executed by the vendee on the 30th April, 1897." This incorporates by reference the document of even date. By that document the vendee declares that the property was sold to him upon the condition that after the expiration of a period of six years from 1311 Fasli to 1315 Fasli whenever the consideration is repaid to him or his representative or tendered to him or deposited in his favour by the vendor or his representative with a view to take back the property sold, he (the vendee) shall without hesitation reconvey the property sold and execute a sale-deed in favour of the vendor or his representative and have it completed.

Further, in this document, the vendee undertakes that' whenever during the period from 1311 to 1315 Fasli the vendor or his representative pays or tenders to or deposits for him or his reprersentative a lump sum of Rs. 635 the remaining amount of consideration money, he shall without hesitation convey back the property. We have no doubt in view of the language of these two documents that they must be read together as constituting a mortgage by way of conditional sale. The case is unlike that which is relied on by the learned vakil for the respondent, namely, [124] Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1). In that case it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that a document purporting to be one of sale, though it was accompanied by a contract reserving to the vendor a right to property sold, or repayment of the purchase money within a certain time, was not on that account to be construed as if it were a mortgage. In that case the document first executed was in terms an out and out sale. The document which was afterwards executed though of the same date was not executed in pursuance of any agreement entered into between the parties, but, on the contrary, was executed by the vendee "as a matter of favour, mercy, kindness and indulgence." Sir BARNES PEACOCK in delivering the judgment of their Lordships observed that it seemed clear from the decision of Lord Chancellor CRANWORTH in the case of Alderson v. White (2) that it was not a mortgage. He quoted the following words of the Lord Chancellor :—" These deeds taken together do not on the face of them constitute a mortgage, and the only question is whether, assuming the transaction to be a legal one, it has been shown to be in truth such as in the view of a court of equity ought to be treated as a mortgage transaction. The rule of law on this subject is one dictated by common sense that prima facie an absolute conveyance containing nothing to show that the relation of debtor and creditor is to exist between the parties does not cease to be an absolute conveyance and become a mortgage merely because the vendor stipulates that he shall have a right to repurchase." Then his Lordship proceeds :—" In this case the vendors did not stipulate that they should have a right to repurchase." It will be at once observed how different are the facts of that case from the case which is before us. Here the deed which is alleged to be a deed of sale is made expressly subject to the condition mentioned in the contemporaneous document and the contemporaneous document is an agreement on the part of the vendee to reconvey the property to the vendor upon repayment of the purchase money.

We are of opinion that the view of the learned Additional Judge is erroneous, and as he decided the appeal before him upon this point and we have over-ruled him in regard to it, we set aside [125] the decree of the lower appellate court and remand the case to it under the provisions of order XLI, rule 23, with directions that it be re-admitted under its original number in the register and determined according to law. Costs here and hitherto will abide the event.

Appeal decreed. Cause remanded.

MUHAMMAD BAKAR AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. MUHAMMAD BAKAR ALI KHAN AND ANOTHER (Defendants).*

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, at Lucknow.]

Settlement of Oudh—Taluqdar settled with on terms as to which no evidence could be given—Second summary settlement—Villages included in taluqdar's estate and not recovered by payment of money due on account of them—Trustee or lien-holder—Redemption barred by Act No. I of 1869, section 6—Adverse possession.

This appeal related to certain villages in Oudh which belonged prior to the annexation of that Province to the widow of the predecessor in title of the appellants, and were, under some arrangement of the exact nature of which there was no evidence, included in the estate of the ancestor of the respondent, a taluqdar, in whose possession they were found at the settlement in 1859. The widow at that time applied as owner for the settlement of the villages. Her claim was resisted by the agent of the taluqdar on the ground that he was entitled to possession until sums paid by him on account of the villages were paid off : and the settlement was made "in accordance with possession," the widow being directed by the settlement officer to proceed by separate application to get the villages released by payment of the money due by her; but she took no steps to get the property released; and when in 1867 she applied for regular settlement of the villages her claim was dismissed on 31st October 1868, on the ground that they were included in the sanad granted by Government to the taluqdar. In a suit brought in 1905 by representatives of the widow for possession of a share of the property on the ground that the settlement proceedings in 1859 constituted the taluqdar either a mortgagee or a trustee on behalf of the widow it was admitted that the claim for redemption was barred by section 6 of Act No. I of 1869.

Held (upholding the decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, that there was no warrant for the contention that the correlative obligation that lay on the taluqdar to release the villages on payment of the money due on account of them created a trust or constituted him a trustee for the widow, who took no steps to comply with the directions of the settlement officer, and allowed [126] the taluqdar to remain in possession and set up a distinctly adverse title in 1867, when she applied for regular settlement.

Hasan Jafar v. Muhammad Askari (1) distinguished. From the date of the dismissal of her application in 1868, possession was adverse to her, and the suit, not having been brought until 1905, was clearly barred by lapse of time.

APPEAL from a judgement and decree (22nd July, 1907) of the court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which reversed a decree (29th August, 1905) of the Subordinate Judge of tahsil Biswan in the district of Sitapur, and dismissed the appellants' suit with costs.

The suit was brought against the first respondent and another defendant for possession of a half share in six villages in Oudh, and the main question for decision in this appeal was whether the British Government at the re-settlement of the Province of Oudh, after the confiscation of all proprietary rights in 1858, had made a settlement with Nawab Munauwar-ud-daula, the grandfather of the first respondent, and conferred upon him the proprietary title in respect of the villages in suit as a trustee for Musammat Wazir-un-nissa the widow of one Qazi Muhammad Azhar the predecessor in title of the appellants.

The appellants' case was that in 1849, Wazir-un-nissa was proprietor of the six villages, and in that year they were at her instance included in the kabuliat of Nawab Munauwar-ud-daula, an arrangement under which the Nawab paid the Government revenue to the King of Oudh, leaving the title and possession of Wazir-un-nissa as zamindar of the villages unaffected.

In 1856 the first summary settlement was made with the Nawab. In 1858 at the second summary settlement various claims were put forward to settlement of the villages in suit, and Wazir-un-nissa lodged her petition for settlement basing her claim on her rights as proprietor. In the course of the proceedings the statement of her agent Husain Khan was recorded, and also the statements of Syed Ali Husain the Nawab's agent, and of the kanungo of the pargana. The kanungo proved Wazir-un-nissa's proprietary title, and Syed Ali Husain asserted that the villages had been included in the Nawab's ilaqa since 1849, and that they had been settled with the Nawab in 1856 with the consent of the original zamindar. He asked for settlement on the ground that [127] eight years' arrears were due to the Nawab, and stated that whenever the original zamindar paid off what was due the villages would be released.

On the 19th February, 1859, the extra Assistant Commissioner of Sitapur made the following order on the claims:—

"The objection of the agent of Nawab Munauwar-ud-daula is that she at her own instance got the villages included into his taluqa, hence she can get the villages released on payment of the arrears and takavi. As the facts of the case have been recorded in detail, therefore it is ordered that the kabuliat shall remain as usual in accordance with possession in the name of the agent of Nawab Munauwar-ud-daula. The claim of the Thakurs, who have been out of possession for 100 years, is dismissed.

The zamindari right of the wife of Qazi Muhammad Azhar appears to be correct. She should file a separate application to have the money due to the agent to Nawab Munauwar-ud-daula settled by arbitration and have her villages released. Whenever the villages, on payment of the money due to Nawab Munauwar-ud-daula, are released the mortgagees shall be at liberty to put forward their claim."

And on the 24th February, 1859, that order was confirmed by the settlement officer.

At the regular settlement in 1867, Wazir-un-nissa and her daughter again put forward a claim to the villages in suit, which was rejected on the 31st October, 1868, on the ground that they were included in the sanad granted to the Nawab. In 1870 they made a claim to a sub-settlement, under Act XXVI of 1866, but on the 15th March, 1871, the settlement officer refused to decree to the claimants an under-proprietary right in the villages, but on the 31st August, 1871, Wazir-un-nissa was granted a decree for under-proprietary rights in them of a limited character.

On the death of Wazir-un-nissa her daughter's sons, the second respondent and his brother Muhammad Taki, became her heirs. Muhammad Taki died in March, 1902, and the appellants, who are his son and daughter succeeded as heirs, and, on the 3rd March, 1905, they instituted the present suit, claiming, as against the heirs of the Nawab Munauwar-ud-daula, that the settlement proceedings of 1859 had constituted their ancestor either a trustee or a mortgagee in respect of the villages of which Wazir-un-nissa had been the owner, and that the plaintiffs were entitled in the alternative either to redemption or cancellation of the trust, and possession consequent thereon.

[128] The first defendant alone defended the suit. In his written statement he denied the existence of any trust or mortgage as alleged; and stated that on the 9th January, 1873, Wazir-un-nissa and her daughter executed a deed of gift of the villages in suit in favour of Muhammad Raza, the second defendant, whereby they divested themselves of all rights in the villages; and that in 1898, Muhammad Raza instituted a suit, (127 of 1898) of a nature exactly similar to the present suit in which he claimed possession of the villages in suit against this defendant, and in that suit Muhammad Taki, father of the plaintiffs, was also a defendant; that that suit was dismissed on the 7th February, 1901; that Muhammad Raza appealed against that decree, but the case was compromised by this defendant and Muhammad Raza, and a decree in terms of the compromise was made on the 4th November, 1902, in pursuance of which some of the villages in suit had been given to Muhammad Raza who was still in possession of them. The first defendant's pleas now material were that the suit was barred by lapse of time, and also by sections 13 and 43 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882; that the effect of the settlement proceedings was to confer a proprietary title on the predecessors in title of this defendant, and on this defendant; and that the predecessors of the plaintiffs had all along admitted the title of this defendant and his predecessors and were now estopped from disputing it.

The issue so far as they are now material were :—

(1) Was the properietary right in the villages in suit conferred on Wazir-un-nissa, after the confiscation of the proprietary rights in land, as stated in paragraphs 9 and 10 of the plaint. [As to the settlement proceedings in 1859, and the orders of the Assistant Commissioner, &c.]?

(3) Is the status of Munauwar-ud-daula that of a lien-holder or mortgagee in respect of the villages in suit?

(6) Has the first defendant been in adverse possession of the villages in suit for more than 12 years before suit ?
(7) Is the suit barred by limitation ?
[129] (8) Is the suit barred by section 13 or 43 of the Civil Procedure Code ?

In the course of the trial before the Subordinate Judge, the plaintiffs abandoned their allegation of a trust and relied on their claim to redemption as from a mortgagee.

On the above issues the Subordinate Judge held (1) that the proprietary title to the villages in dispute was conferred upon Wazir-un-nissa, and the settlement was made with the Nawab as a mortgagee or lien-holder ; (3) that the Nawab was a lien-holder ; (6) that the first defendant had not been in adverse possession of the villages for more than 12 years ; (7) that the suit was not barred by limitation ; (8) nor by section 13 and 43 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession of the property in suit on payment of Rs. 1,651 within a certain time.

From that decision the first defendant appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, and a Divisional Bench of that Court (Mr. E CHAMIER, Judicial Commissioner and Mr. J. SANDERS, First Additional Judicial Commissioner) decided that the proprietary interest in the villages in suit was in the Nawab and that nothing in the settlement or otherwise imposed on him any obligation to restore possession of them to the appellants, and reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge (1).

The judgment of the Judicial Commissioner after stating that "In this Court the plaintiffs abandoned the claim to redeem, admitting that it was barred by section 6 of Act No. I of 1869, and pressed the claim as one for recovery of property from a trustee."

And after stating the facts continued :—

"The question then is whether the plaintiffs have proved that the settlement was made with the Nawab as a trustee. If they have proved this, then, subject to the other defences raised by the defendant, they may recover their shares in it, notwithstanding that it was included in the taluqdari sanad granted to the Nawab and he and his son Amjad Ali Khan after him were declared by the letter of 10th October, 1859, and by Act I of 1869 to be proprietors of the same."

Then after stating the settlement proceedings in 1859 and the decision of the claims by the order of the Extra Assistant [130] Commissioner and confirmed by that of the Deputy Commissioner the judgement proceeded :—

"On this evidence it appears to me absurd to suggest that the Government settled with the Nawab as trustee for Wazir-un-nissa or that he undertook to hold the property for her as a trustee. He claimed a lien or charge. His position was closely analogous to that of a mortgagee and it will be convenient to refer here to the orders of Government both before and after the settlement of 1859 regarding villages settled with taluqdars as mortgagees."

After referring to those orders of Government, ending with the letter of Government of the 10th October, 1859 ; the Circular No. $\frac{119}{2917}$ of the Chief Commissioner, dated the 13th August, 1860, and paragraph 21 of the Circular No. 1123, dated the 16th April, 1862, the judgment continued :—

"Subsequently Government came to the conclusion that injustice had been done to proprietors whose villages had under the orders of 1858-9 been settled with taluqdars on the strength of mortgages set up by them, and the taluqdars were induced to agree to a relaxation of the orders giving finality to the settlement of 1859. The official papers suggest that one of the objects of Act XIII of 1866 was to permit the redemption of mortgages in taluqas made after the 13th February, 1844, but if so the Act was very badly designed, for it merely extended the period of limitation and provided for a re-hearing of claims which had been rejected on the ground of limitation. Nothing effectual was done till 1869, when section 6, Act I of that year relaxed the rules of 1859 as regards certain instruments of mortgage. It is conceded by the plaintiffs that this enactment does not help them. The circular orders, which I have quoted, show that the Government were perfectly well aware that many taluqdars had on various grounds been allowed to engage in 1859 for villages to which they had no right whatever, but they deliberately decided to adhere to their promises regarding the settlement of 1859 except in so far as the taluqdars themselves consented to give up their rights.

"None of the well-known cases in which trusts have been enforced against taluqdars, notwithstanding the orders of 1859, have gone the length of holding that taluqdars who were settled with in 1859 as mortgagees or charge-holders should be regarded as trustees. The only case which bears any resemblance at all to the present case is that of Hasan Jafar v. Muhammad Askari (1), but when that case is examined it will be found that it is clearly distinguishable from the present case. In that case it was held that Hakim Hasan Ali was trustee for his co-sharers, because the Chief Commissioner settled with him on the footing that he would give his co-sharers their shares if they re-appeared. In the present case neither the Government nor the officers charged with making the settlement made any such stipulation. They simply settled with the Nawab, because he was in possession and left Wazir-un-nissa to redeem her property if she could. She never attempted to do so before the orders of Government rendered redemption impossible and therefore she cannot do so now.

[131] "Any other view of this case would destroy in a great measure the settlement of 1859 and unsettle titles all over the Province.

"Mereover, the Nawab and his successors have long since ceased to be mere lien-holders of the property in suit. In 1867 Wazir-un-nissa and her daughter sued for possession of the property. They might have set up a trust then, but they did not do so, and their suit was dismissed; see Exhibits A1, 2, and 4. In 1870 they sued for sub-settlement of the property. That suit also was dismissed; see Exhibits A10, 11 and 19. In 1871 they claimed under-proprietary rights of various kinds, and ultimately got a decree for a substantial nankar, for sir and other rights, see Exhibits A29 and 21. The position of the parties under this decree is inconsistent with the continuance of the relation of trustee and cestui-que trust if any such relation ever existed. The possession of the defendant and his predecessor has been adverse to the plaintiffs and their predecessors for at last 30 years past as regards the proprietary title to the villages. In my opinion the plaintiffs have entirely failed to substantiate any case of trust and their suit is barred by the failure of their predecessors to set up a case of trust in 1867 and 1870 and is also barred by limitation."

On this appeal.

DeGruyther, K. C. and Ross for the appellants contended that the effect of the settlement proceedings subsequent to the confiscation of all titles in Oudh on its annexation by the British Government was not to deprive Wazir-un-nissa, the predecessor in title of the appellants, of all right to the villages in suit, of which she was without doubt the owner previous to the confiscation, and to give the ancestor of the respondent a proprietary title to them. Whatever the arrangement by which, with her acquiescence, they were settled with the Nawab, it must have been one under which she would be able to recover them when she chose to claim them. The possession of the Nawab, either as a trustee or a lien-holder, did not enable him to set up adverse possession against her. It was submitted that that was the construction to be put on the order of the Extra Assistant Commissioner in February, 1859; and it was quite inconsistent with that construction to say that the villages, when she did claim them in 1867, were included in the sanad granted to the Nawab, and on that ground to reject her claim. Compendium of Taluqdari Law, pages 13 and 14, where the orders of Government as to the annexation and subsequent re-settlement of Oudh are set out. The object of that re-settlement was as far as possible to reinstate persons in the estates they [132] held in 1856. The cases of Hurdeo Bux v. Jowahir Singh (1) and Hasan Jafar v. Muhammad Askari (2) were also referred to as laying down principles on which a taluqdar had become a trustee in respect of property settled on him by Government which had previous to the confiscation of titles in Oudh belonged to other persons besides himself; and those cases were relied on to show that the Nawab in 1859 had become a trustee of the villages in suit. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner was therefore in error in holding that having regard to the settlement proceedings the plaintiffs had failed to establish a good title to the villages and to possession of them; and that the suit was barred by limitation. Her suit so far as redemption was concerned was, it was admitted, barred by section 6 of Act No. I of 1869. Reference was made to the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) schedule II, article 144; Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), sections 3, 4, 5 and 6; Sykes' Compendium of Taluqdari Law, page 168; and Papers relating to the Administration of Oudh (Ed. 1865), page 53, sections 17 and 19, and page 55, section 21. 1910, December 2nd :—The judgment of the Lordships was delivered by Mr. AMEER ALI :—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover possession of a half share in certain villages in the district of Sitapur in Oudh. The villages in question belonged originally to one Qazi Muhammad Azhar, but some years prior to the annexation, either for convenience in the payment of Government demands or from motives of greater security, they appear to have been included, with the consent of Muhammad Azhar's widow, Wazir-un-nissa, in the ilaqa or estate of Nawab Munauwar-ud-daula, the ancestor of the principal defendant in this case. Thus in 1859, when the first settlement of the Province was carried out, the villages were found to be in the possession of Munauwar-ud-daula. On that occasion Wazir-un-nissa applied as [133] malik or owner for settlement of the villages. The claim was resisted by the Nawab's agent and was ultimately dismissed. It is upon the orders passed by the extra Assistant Commissioner in the settlement proceedings, coupled with certain statements made by the Nawab's agent, that the present action is based. On the 21st of January, 1859, in answer to a question by the settlement officer as to his ground of objection to Wazir-un-nissa's claim, he stated as follows :—

"A.—This village has been included in our (my client's) ilaqa for the last seven or eight years, it neither being mortgaged nor sold. But the arrears for eight (not clear in the original) years, regarding this village are still due to us (my client). Whenever the original zamindar, i.e., the claimant, will pay off our (my client's) money he will get the village released. There is no other objection."

"Q. - Who mortgaged this village to you (your client)?

"A.—We (my client) got this village from the wife of Qazi Muhammad Azhar. We know nothing about the claim of Karamat-ul-lah."

And on the 19th of February, 1859, the extra Assistant Commissioner made the following order :—

"The objection of the agent of Nawab Munauwar-ud-daula is that she at her own instance got the villages included into his taluqa, hence she can get the villages released on payment of the arrears and takavi. As the facts of the case have been recorded in detail, therefore it is ordered that the kabuliat shall remain as usual in accordance with possession in the name of the agent of Nawab Munauwar-ud-daula. The claim of the thakurs, who have been out of possession for 100 years, is dismissed. The zamindari right of the wife of Qazi Muhammad Azhar appears to be correct. She should file a separate application to have the money due to the agent to Nawab Munauwar-ud-daula settled by arbitration and have her villages released. Whenever the villages, on payment of the money due to Nawab Munauwar-ud-daula, are released, the mortgagees shall be at liberty to put forward their claim. Let the file be submitted to the Deputy Commissioner for perusal and approval."

As the proceedings related to a number of villages, similar orders appear to have been recorded on other dates.

On the 24th of February, 1859, the Deputy Commissioner, to whom the matter was submitted for approval, confirmed the settlement with Munauwar-ud-daula and dismissed Wazir-un-nissa's claim.

For the next eight years no action seems to have been taken in respect of the property in suit, but in 1867 when what is called the regular settlement of the Province was in progress, Wazir-un-nissa, in conjunction with her daughter Kutb-un-nissa, applied that [134] the villages might be settled with her. Her claim was again resisted on the ground that they were included in the sanad granted by Government to the Nawab. Her application for settlement was accordingly dismissed on the 31st October, 1868. Two years later the two ladies applied for sub-settlement in respect of the villages in question, but as they could not prove possession within the period prescribed by law, their application was rejected on the 30th of August, 1871. Their rights, however, to nankar allowance and other dues were admitted and affirmed in proceedings taken about the same time.

In 1873 Wazir-un-nissa and Kutb-un-nissa transferred by a deed of gift their right and interest in the said villages to defendant No. 2, who is the son of another daughter of Muhammad Azhar. In 1898 the defendant No. 2 instituted a suit against the defendant Bakar Ali Khan to recover possession of those villages. His claim was dismissed by the first Court, but was compromised on appeal.

The present action is brought by the son and daughter of a brother of defendant No. 2 who claim to be entitled to a half share in the property in suit. Their contention is that the proceedings in 1859 constituted the ancestor of Bakar Ali Khan either a mortgagee or trustee on behalf of Muhammad Azhar's widow. The latter position was abandoned in the first Court where the case was tried, on the basis that the Nawab was a mortgagee or lien-holder. The Subordinate Judge upheld the plaintiffs' contention, and made a decree in their favour under section 92 of the Indian Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) for "redemption" on payment of a sum specified.

On appeal by the defendant Bakar Ali Khan, the Judicial Commissioners have held the suggestion that Government settled the properties with the Nawab as trustee for Wazir-un-nissa, or that he undertook to hold the same as trustee for her, to be untenable. On the question whether the plaintiffs were entitled to any relief on the hypothesis that he was a mortgagee, they held that section 6 of Act No. I of 1869 was a bar to the action. They accordingly dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs have appealed to His Majesty in Council. It is conceded on their behalf that, having regard to the provisions [135] of section 6 of Act No. I of 1869, their claim for redemption cannot be sustained. But it is contended that, as the settlement with the Nawab was made subject to the rights of Wazir-un-nissa, who was declared entitled to recover possession of the villages on payment of the money due from her, the present suit comes strictly within the principle enunciated by this Board in Hasan Jafar v. Muhammad Askari (1). Their Lordships agree with the Judicial Commissioners in holding that the facts of the two cases are not at all analogous. In Hasan Jafar v. Muhammad Askari the settlement was effected with the person who took it on a distinct understanding which, in their Lordships' judgment, constituted him a trustee for his co-sharers who were not present at the time.

In the present case, the settlement officer's proceedings can bear no such meaning. The Nawab was in possession of the villages by virtue of some arrangement regarding the exact nature of which there is no evidence. At the time of settlement he or his agent opposed the claim of Wazir-un-nissa to have the properties settled with her, on the ground that he was entitled to remain in possession until the moneys he had disbursed on her account were paid off. That objection was upheld, and the settlement was made with the Nawab "in accordance with possession," and the lady was directed to proceed by separate application to get her property released by payment of the money due by her. In their Lordships' judgment there is no warrant for the contention that the correlative obligation that lay on the Nawab to release the property on payment of the money created a trust or constituted him a trustee for Wazir-un-nissa. No step appears to have been taken by her in compliance with the directions of the settlement officer; and the Nawab was allowed to remain in possession of the property without any attempt on her part to get it released. In 1867, when she applied for the regular settlement of the villages, an adverse title was distinctly set up on his behalf. From the date of the dismissal of her application in 1868 on the ground that they were included in his taluqdari sanad the Nawab's possession was adverse to her. The present suit was not instituted until 1905 and is thus clearly barred. The appeal, therefore, fails and must [136] be dismissed with costs. And their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

THIS was a suit for sale upon a mortgage, dated the 26th of September, 1898, executed by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in favour of the plaintiff. The mortgage bond provided for payment of the amount secured by it by instalments covering a period of twelve years. The plaintiff alleged that default had been made in the payment of one of the instalments, and claimed the amount of all the instalments remaining unpaid. He also prayed for the sale of the mortgaged property, which consisted of a grove, admittedly the occupancy holding of the mortgagors, and a dwelling house and inclosure, which they occupied as such occupancy tenants. The court of first instance (Munsif of Bulandshahr) granted the plaintiff a decree for only one of the instalments, in respect of which default had been made, and dismissed the remainder of the claim, including the claim for sale. The lower appellate court (Additional Subordinate Judge of Aligarh) modified the decree of the court of first instance and made a decree for the whole amount claimed. It upheld the first court's finding that the mortgaged grove was not liable to [137] sale, but it was of opinion that the dwelling house could be sold. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for sale brought upon a mortgage, dated the 26th of September, 1898, executed by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in favour of the plaintiff. The mortgage bond provides for payment of the amount secured by it by instalments covering a period of twelve years. The plaintiff alleges that default has been made in the payment of one of the instalments and he claims the amount of all the instalments remaining unpaid. He also prays for the sale of the hypothecated property, which consists of a grove, admittedly the occupancy holding of the mortgagors, and a dwelling house and enclosure in which they reside as such occupancy tenants. The court of first instance granted to the plaintiff a decree for only one of the instalments in respect of which default had been made, but it dismissed the remainder of the claim, including the claim for sale of the mortgaged property. The lower appellate court has modified the decree of the court of first instance and made a decree for the whole of the amount claimed. In its judgment it upheld the first court's finding that the mortgaged grove was not liable to sale, but it was of opinion that the dwelling house could be sold. In the decree which was prepared there is, however, an order for the sale of all the mortgaged property including the grove.

In this appeal the first contention raised on behalf of the appellants is that the plaintiff is not entitled to claim the amounts of unpaid instalments. Having regard to the terms of the mortgage we are unable to accede to this contention. Under the mortgage-deed the mortgagee is given the right to claim all the instalments in the event of default being made in the payment of any one of them. The court below was therefore right in making a decree for the instalments which remained unpaid.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

33 A. 136=8 A. L. J. 190 =9 I. C. 931.

It is next contended that the decree for sale of the dwelling house of the mortgagors is contrary to the provisions of section 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, which exempts the materials of the dwelling house of an agriculturist from attach-[138]ment or sale. Under the Agra Tenancy Act, an occupancy holding of a tenant is not transferable and cannot be sold by auction in execution of a decree. The dwelling house of an agriculturist may be deemed to be an appurtenant to his holding. Further, section 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, which has been re-enacted in section 60 of Act No. V of 1908, prohibits the sale of materials of dwelling houses occupied by agriculturists. The Court therefore has not the power to sell the materials of such a dwelling house, and it necessarily follows that it cannot make a decree for sale of such property. In this view the claim for sale of the dwelling house of the defendants ought not to have been decreed. The order in the decree for sale of the grove was clearly erroneous. The result is that we allow the appeal so far that we dismiss the claim for sale of the hypothecated property and affirm the remainder of the decree of the Court below. We make no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Decree modified.

Before Sir John Stanley, Knight, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Griffin.

GAYA PRASAD and others (Plaintiffs) v. GANGA BISHAN (Defendant).*

Act (Local) No. I of 1903 (Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act), section 13—Sub-mortgage by usufructuary mortgagee—Covenant to indemnify sub-mortgagee if dispossessed—Effect on such covenant of mortgagors taking advantage of the provisions of the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act, 1903.

The mortgagee in possession under a usufructuary mortgage executed a sub-mortgage of his mortgagee rights and covenanted with the sub-mortgagee that if during the period of the mortgage the property mortgaged, in any year, by any reason, should pass out of the possession of the sub-mortgagee, or the mortgage deed for any reason should be declared to be invalid, he, the executant, would be liable to pay the loss sustained by the mortgagee The mortgagors took advantage of the provisions of the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act. The mortgagee took no steps under the Act to realize the amount due to him on his mortgage. The sub-mortgagee did prefer a claim, but it was rejected, and he did not appeal against the special Judge's order rejecting it. The sub-mortgagee was ejected from the mortgaged property, and thereafter his sons sued the mortgagee on his covenant, claiming damages on account of his ejectment. Held that the suit was not barred by reason of anything contained in the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act, 1903.

[139] THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of KARAMAT HUSAIN, J. The facts out of which the appeal arose are fully stated in the judgment under appeal, which was as follows :—

" The facts necessary for the disposal of this appeal are these. Sartan and Achche Lal executed a mortgage with possession in favour of Ganga Bishan on the 26th June, 1885, and put the mortgagee in possession of the property mortgaged to him. On the 7th of November, 1900, Ganga Bishan executed a deed in favour of Basdeo and put Basdeo in possession of the property. The heirs of Sartan and Achche Lal started proceedings under the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act I of 1903. Basdeo advanced his claim under the deed of the 7th of November, 1900, before the Special Judge, but the original mortgagee Ganga Bishan put forward no claim under the mortgage of 1885 before the Special Judge. The Special Judge came to the conclusion that Basdeo was a sub-mortgagee and had therefore no locus standi. Basdeo did not appeal against the decision of the Special Judge. Thereafter by the order of the Special Judge the sub-mortgagee was ejected from the mortgaged land. The result was that the heirs of Sartan and Achche Lal got back the property without paying anything either to Ganga Bishan or to Basdeo. The plaintiffs, who are the heirs of Basdeo, instituted a suit against Ganga Bishan for the recovery of the amount due under the deed of 7th November, 1900, and interest by way of damages. The pleas raised in defence were that Basdeo was a transferee of Ganga Bishan's mortgagee rights; that he was not a sub-mortgagee; that the plaintiffs' father ought to have preferred an appeal from the decision of the Special Judge, that their father was guilty of negligence in not appealing against the decision of the Special Judge and was not therefore entitled to succeed against the defendant Ganga Bishan. The Court of first instance decreed the claim. The defendant appealed to the Lower Appellate Court, and the following pleas, according to the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court, were argued in that court: (1) that the claim was time barred; (2) that the claim was barred by the explanation to section 13 of Act No. I of 1903; (3) that the finding of the lower court that Ganga Bishan, appellant should have appealed against Sartan and others was not correct; (4) that the Lower Court placed a wrong interpretation on the mortgage deed of the 7th of November, 1900; (5) that the plaintiffs suffered no loss by the act of the appellant. On the first point the Lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that the suit was not time-barred. On the second point it came to the conclusion that the claim was not barred by the explanation to section 13 of Act No. I of 1903, inasmuch as the respondents do not seek to enforce the claim as against the heirs of the original mortgagors. On the third point that Court remarks as follows:—"The defendant appellant should have assisted the plaintiffs' ancestor as against the mortgagors. But as a fact he did not. On the contrary, he laid his claim on another mortgage deed and about the same property against the original mortgagors. He should not have done so." The findings on the fourth and fifth points are that the defendant appellant is under the terms of the deed of 7th of November, 1900, bound to pay any damages sustained by the sub-mortgagee or his heirs. On the above findings the Lower Appellate Court confirmed the decree [140] of the first Court. Ganga Bishan defendant has preferred a second appeal to this Court, and the following pleas have been argued by his learned counsel before me. (a) The deed of the 7th of November, 1900, is a transfer of all the mortgagee rights and not a sub-mortgage; (b) the plaintiffs under the terms of the deed of 7th of November, 1900, are not entitled to any claim against the defendant; (c) section 10 (d) of the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act bars the suit; (d) the explanation to section 13 of Act I of 1903 bars the suit; (e) the claim is time barred; (f) the plaintiffs having failed by their own negligence to make good their claim under Act No. I of 1903 cannot claim compensation from the defendant. I have carefully gone through the deed of the 7th of November, 1900, and I have no doubt that it is not a transfer of all the mortgagee rights but is a sub mortgage. The document very distinctly says 'I have sub-mortgaged the mortgagee rights (dar rehan dakhli).' The first ground is therefore untenable. There is no force in the second plea also, because that document in very distinct terms says that if during the period of the mortgage the property mortgaged, in any year by any reason passes out of the possession of Basdeo or the said mortgage deed for any reason is declared to be invalid the executant will be liable to pay the loss sustained by the mortgagee. I am of opinion that section 10 (d) of Act No. I of 1903 has no application to the case before me. The Special Judge on the application of Basdeo ruled that he had no locus standi. In such a case it cannot be said that Basdeo's debt was a debt in respect of which no fresh suit could be instituted. The explanation to section 13 of Act No. I of 1903 does not also cover this case. In the first place there was no determination as to the amount which was justly due to Basdeo and in the second the representatives of the original mortgagor are no parties to the suit. There is no force in the plea of limitation and no fact has been brought to my notice to support that plea. The sole question on which the decision of this appeal turns is whether the plaintiffs as heirs of the sub-mortgagee Basdeo had or had not a locus standi to have their money satisfied out of the property which belonged to Sartan and Achche Lal. A sub-mortgagor has been held in a Full Bench ruling of this Court in Ramshankar Lal v. Ganga Prasad (1) to get a security, that is, an interest in the property mortgaged, and that being his position he undoubtedly has a locus standi and is one of the persons who have a claim against the property of the proprietor. It is, however, contended by the learned vakil for the respondent that sections 6, 7 and 8 of the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act go to show that a special judge has to make an enquiry with reference to those debts only which are the private debts of the proprietor and can take no notice of any other incumbrance created by a mortgagee on the property of the proprietor to which that proprietor is no party. I am unable to accept such an interpretation of those sections. The result of such interpretation will be that the sub-mortgagee from the mortgagee who may have advanced large sums of money on the security of the mortgagee rights will have no remedy at all, and I do not think that the Legislature intended that the mortgagors should get their property free from the security created in favour of the sub-mortgagee without giving him any chance of establishing his claim. Section 9 of Act No. I of 1903 shows that the special judge shall [141] publish in the gazette a notice in the vernacular language of the district calling upon all persons having claims against the person or property of the proprietor by whom or in respect of which an application is made under section 6 of the Act, to present to the special judge within two months of the publication of the notice a written statement of their claims, and I am of opinion that a sub-mortgagee is one of the persons who have a claim on the property of the proprietor. This leads me to discuss whether the plaintiffs were bound to appeal to the Commissioner under the provisions of section 30 of Act No. I of 1903 against the decision of the special judge. I am of opinion that the decision of the special judge that the plaintiffs had no locus standi was wrong, that they ought to have appealed to the Commissioner to have that decision set aside and that their failure to appeal was a negligence which debars them from seeking compensation against the defendants. In this connection I have to remark that the finding of the lower appellate Court on the third point argued before that Court is not a finding on that plea. The plea taken was that the finding of the first court that Ganga Bishan should have appealed against Sartan and others is not correct. The finding of the lower appellate court on that point is neither that the finding of the first court is correct nor that it is incorrect. It only says that the defendant appellant should have assisted Basdeo against the mortgagor. The conclusion at which I arrive is that Basdeo as a sub-mortgagee under the deed of the 7th of November, 1900, had a locus standi, that he ought to have appealed from the judgement of the special judge and that in consequence of his failure to have that decision set aside he lost his remedy against the defendant Ganga Bishan. I therefore allow this appeal, set aside the decrees of the courts below and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs in all courts."

The plaintiffs appealed.

Pandit Baldeo Ram Dave (for Munshi Iswar Saran), for the appellants, relied upon the covenant of indemnity given by Ganga Bishan, the plaintiff's sub-mortgagor, which, he argued, was outside any of the provisions of the Act of which the original mortgagors had taken the benefit.

Mr. A. H. C. Hamilton, for the respondent, urged that the effect of the explanation to section 13 of the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act, 1903, was to extinguish any claim that the plaintiffs may have had under the sub-mortgage in favour of their father.

STANLEY, C. J., and GRIFFIN, J.—The facts of the case are these:—One Achche Lal and another, the owners of property, executed a possessory mortgage of their property in favour of one Ganga Bishan on the 26th of June, 1885. On the 7th of November, 1900, Ganga Bishan sub-mortgaged this property to Basdeo and in that mortgage he entered into the following absolute covenant, namely, that if during the period of the mortgage, [142] the property mortgaged, in any year, by any reason, should pass out of the possession of Basdeo, or the mortgage deed for any reason should be declared to be invalid, he (the executant) would be liable to pay the loss sustained by the mortgagee. The mortgagors took advantage of the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act (Act I of 1903). Notices to claimants were issued in accordance with the provisions of that Act. Ganga Bishan, the mortgagee of the property from the proprietors, took no steps to realize the amount due to him under his mortgage of the 26th of June 1885. Basdeo did prefer a claim, but that claim was rejected on the ground that he was merely a sub-mortgagee and therefore his remedy was against his sub-mortgagor and not against the proprietor. Subsequently Basdeo was ejected from the property. He then preferred the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for recovery of the damages sustained by him by reason of his being dispossessed. Both the lower courts passed a decree in his favour. But upon second appeal the learned Judge of this court from whose decision this appeal under the Letters Patent has been preferred, came to the conclusion that Basdeo was guilty of negligence in not having preferred an appeal against the order of the special Judge rejecting his claim, and that not having done so, he cannot recover against his sub-mortgagor upon the special covenant entered into in his mortgage deed. We are wholly unable to agree with our learned brother in his decision. Ganga Bishan gave an absolute covenant to Basdeo undertaking to compensate him for any loss which he might sustain by reason of his dispossession during the period of the mortgage. He was dispossessed. It was for Ganga Bishan rather than for Basdeo to take the proper steps before the special Judge for enforcement of the mortgage of the 26th of June, 1885. Whether it was open to Basdeo or not to appeal against the order of the special Judge, it was certainly open to Basdeo to rely upon the absolute covenant contained in his mortgage deed and to hold his sub-mortgagor responsible for the loss which he sustained by reason of his dispossession. We accordingly allow the appeal. We set aside the decree of the learned Judge of this court and restore the decree of the lower appellate court. The respondent must pay to the appellant all the costs incurred in the High Court.

Appeal decreed.

Before Sir John Stanley, Knight, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Banerji.

RAGHUNATH KALWAR AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. BALA DIN KALWAR AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

Act No. I of 1872 (Indian Evidence Act), section 44—Res judicata—Fixed rate tenancy —Partition—Power of joint tenants to partition—Suit to recover joint possession.

A certain holding owned jointly by tenants at fixed rates was partitioned by an award. One party sued on the award to recover exclusive possession of certain plots and obtained a decree for possession and mesne profits, which was executed. Subsequently the other party sued to regain joint possession of these plots and pleaded that the former decree was by a court not competent to pass it and therefore not binding on them. There was nothing to show whether the former suit was filed before or after the coming into force of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, or whether the landlord had or had not assented to the partition.

Held that the plaintiffs had failed to show that the former decree was passed by a Court which had not jurisdiction, and that the present suit was barred. Achhey Lal v. Janki Prasad (1) explained.

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgement of TUDBALL, J. The facts of the case are stated in the following judgement of Piggott, J., before whom the case first came in appeal.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

33 A. 143=
7 I. C. 398.

"The plaintiffs in this case sued for a declaratory decree to the effect that they were jointly entitled to possession as co-sharers in certain cultivatory holdings, together with an injunction to restrain certain defendants from interfering with their joint cultivation. In the alternative a decree for joint possession was asked. The question in dispute on second appeal has narrowed itself down and now relates only to certain particular plots, which the courts below describe as those shown in list (B). With respect to these plots the case for the defendants is that the plaintiffs' suit is barred by the principle of res judicata. It has been shown that as recently as June the 21st, 1906, the defendant, Bala Din, obtained as against the present plaintiffs a decree for exclusive possession of these particular plots together with mesne profits. The present suit is clearly intended to annul the effect of that decree so far as these particular plots are concerned In reply to the plea of res judicata, which was accepted by the court of first instance, the plaintiffs pleaded that the decree of the 21st June, 1906, can have no effect as res judicata, because the court which passed it, the learned Munsif of Jaunpur city had no jurisdiction to make any such decree. It is, therefore, contended that under the provisions of section 44 of the Indian Evidence Act the plaintiffs are entitled to show and that they have in fact shown that the judgement and decree pleaded by the defendant, Bala Din, under section 40 of the same Act, was delivered by a court not competent to deliver it. [144] The learned District Judge has held, first, that the decree of the 21st June, 1906, amounts to a division of a tenant-holding and is in contravention of the provisions of section 32 of the Tenancy Act of 1901; secondly that it was, therefore a decree passed without jurisdiction and one which can have no operation as res judicata. I am unable to concur in either of those findings. The plaint in the suit decided on the 21st June, 1906, is not on the record. Like the learned District Judge, I can only refer to the judgment and decree of the Munsif of Jaunpur city in order to ascertain the nature of that suit. It appears from the decree that the relief sought was simply exclusive possession of certain particular plots described as being a fixed rate holding and that the ejectment of the defendants in that suit (present plaintiffs) was sought as in an ordinary action in ejectment against trespassess. The Munsif of Jaunpur was a court of competent jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the ejectment of trespassers in wrongful possession of the fixed rate holding in question, supposing the plaintiff to be able to prove that he was himself the rightful tenant of these fields and entitled to possession of the same. The judgement shows that the case was defended, but no plea of want of jurisdiction on the part of the court by reason of the operation of section 32 of the Tenancy Act was raised It is also clear, however, as remarked by the learned District Judge, that the defendant, Bala Din, relied upon a certain award according to which he claimed that the plots then in suit had been assigned to him while certain other plots had been assigned to the opposite party. From this fact the learned District Judge has presumed that the suitwas in effect one to enforce an agreement under which a certain occupancy holding had been divided and was, therefore, not maintainable in any court by reason of the provisions of section 32 of the Tenancy Act. In support of this view reliance is placed on the decision of this Court in Achhey Lal v. Janki Prasad (1). I may refer also to the later case of Najib-ullah v. Gulsher Khan (2), in which this decision was considered and explained, though it seems to me that the head-note goes somewhat too far in noting it as having been overruled. It seems to me sufficient with regard to the point immediately in issue before me to say that it is really not proved by the evidence on the record that the effect of the award relied on by Bala Din in the suit of 1906 was in fact to split up a particular holding and not, for instance, to apportion different occupancy holdings amongst different members of the same family. I may add that it is also not proved that the landholder concerned was not a consenting party to the arrangement whatever may have been effected under the award relied on by Bala Din in the suit of 1906. Passing on to the second of the points indicated by me above I have to consider what would have been the position of the present plaintiffs if they had resisted the suit of 1906 on the ground that itwas in effect a suit for division of a holding and calculated to defeat the provisions of section 32 of the Tenancy Act. I have shown that if this point had been taken evidence might have been offered by Bala Din to satisfy the court as to the nature of the suit and as to its being distinguishable from the case of Achhey Lal v. Janki Prasad. Suppose now that an issue had been raised on this point and that after [145] considering the pleadings to the parties and the evidence, if any, adduced by them the learned Munsif had come to the conclusion that the suit was not in its nature obnoxious to the provisions of section 32 of the Tenancy Act, would the defendants in that case have been entitled to submit to the decree resulting from such finding, but to treat it hereafter as a nullity on the ground that they would be entitled in any future proceeding to raise again in virtue of the provisions of section 40 of the Indian Evidence Act the very point which had been decided against them ? I concede not, and on this point I am content to refer to the cases of Ketlilamma v. Kelappan (1), Sardarmal Jagonath v Aranvayal Subhapathy Moodliar (2) and the decision of this Court in Nathu Ram v. Kalian Das (3). This being so, I am unable to hold that the present plaintiffs are in any better position because they made no attempt in the suit of 1906 to set up a defence based on the provisions of section 32 of the Tenancy Act, but appear on the contrary to have asked the court to examine carefully the effect of the award relied on by Bala Din and to give judgment in accordance with its terms. For these reasons, I accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and restore that of the court of first intance. The plaintiffs must pay all costs in this and in the lower appellate courts."

As, however, PIGGOTT, J., retired from the court before signing the above judgement, the appeal was reargued before TUDBALL, J., who decreed it by the following judgment :—

" This appeal was argued before Mr. Justice PIGGOTT, who delivered the above judgement, but without signing it, prior to his retirement from this Court. The case has been reargued before me, and I find myself in accord with all that Mr. Justice PIGGOTT has said above. In respect of the lands in list B which alone are in dispute in this appeal, the defendants appellants brought a suit to eject the plaintiffs respondents as trespassers. The lands were held as a fixed rate tenure from the landlord. Admittedly at some time past it belonged to the common ancestor of the parties and the latter separated at the latest in 1899 : after which there was a dispute which was submitted to arbitration, and the arbitrators, in part at least, partitioned the tenure. There is nothing to show whether this occurred prior to the first of January, 1902, when the tenancy Act came into force, or subsequently thereto. There is nothing to show whether or not the consent of the zamindars was obtained to this partition. Be that as it may, in 1906, the defendants appellants came into court alleging that they were the sole owners of the tenure in so far as these plots were concerned. The plaintiffs respondents met them by pleading that some of the plots belonged exclusively to themselves and one was still joint and undivided. The court held as against them that the plots were the exclusive property of the then plaintiffs, the present appellants, and gave them a decree for possession and mesne profits. The decree has been executed. The plaintiffs respondents now come into court alleging that this decree was null and void because the court had no jurisdiction to entertain any such suit. This plea was based upon the provisions of section 32, clause (b) of the Tenancy [146] Act. It is clear that if the decree was made in a suit of such a nature that no court, Civil or Revenue, could entertain it, it would be null and void, and no decision therein could operate as res judicata between the parties. The only materials before the court are the judgement and the decree, and there is nothing on the face of them to show that the suit as brought was one in which the court had no jurisdiction. The partition may have been carried out prior to the first of January, 1902, or may even have been made with the sanction and approval of the zamindars. The burden therefore lay on the plaintiffs to show that that decree was passed without jurisdiction. They have failed to place any materials before the court in order to enable it to arrive at such a conclusion. Presumably the decree was one made with jurisdiction, and it was for the plaintiffs to show the opposite if they wished to treat it as a nullity. Partition of a holding made by the co-sharers thereof with the sanction of the landlord is not an illegal act, and if once made, could be maintained in a suit brought in a civil court for possession, in case of dispossession by either party; and it could not be said that a decree for possession in such a suit would be one made without jurisdiction. There being insufficient materials to enable the Court to hold that the former decree was passed in a suit, the entertainment of which by the court was forbidden by law, the court is bound to hold the former decision operates as res judicata between the parties. I therefore fully agree with the decision arrived at by Mr. Justice PIGGOTT. I accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court, and restore that of the court of first instance. The appellants will have their costs in this and in the lower appellate court."

Munshi Gokul Prasad, for the respondents.

STANLEY, C. J.—I am of opinion that the judgements of the learned Judges of this Court from which this appeal has been preferred are not open to objection. They have very fully dealt with the facts and the law, and it is unnecessary for me to add anything to what they have said, save and except that I desire to make an observation upon the judgement in Achhey Lal v. Janki Prasad (1), to which judgement I was a party. In that case it was held that " neither a Civil or Revenue Court can partition or divide an occupancy holding. Such partition or division can only be effected out of court with the consent of the landholder." If these words are interpreted as meaning that tenants cannot agree to divide a holding amongst themselves without the consent of the landholder, the judgement in my opinion goes too far. There is no objection to joint tenants agreeing among themselves to occupy and cultivate distinct parts [147] of the joint holding, provided that their so doing in no respect prejudices the rights of the landholder. Under such an agreement the tenants continue to be liable to the landlord for the entire rent, and the arrangement between them is not a partition which is enforceable as between them and the landlord. A partition to bind the landlord must be a partition with his consent. I therefore would dismiss this appeal with costs.

BANERJI, J.—I also am of opinion that there is no force in this appeal. The former suit was not one for partition of a holding or the distribution of the rent thereof, but was a suit for exclusive possession of certain plots of land which the then plaintiff claimed to be his separate property. The court which tried that suit had jurisdiction to entertain it and its judgement has the effect of res judicata. I agree in dismissing the appeal.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

known as Hume Ganj. The agreement provided that if the buildings were erected in contravention of the plans, the Municipal Commissioners would be entitled to interfere, and [148] would also be entitled to forbid the making of additions to or changes in the buildings. On the 18th January, 1909, the Municipal Board of Etawah issued a notice to the applicant under sub-section (5) of section 87 of the Municipalities Act, 1900, requiring him to remove a wall on the upper storey of his shop in Hume Ganj on the ground that it had been erected without permission and contrary to the original plans. The applicant failed to comply with this notice and was accordingly prosecuted under section 147 of the Act. He was convicted and fined Rs. 10. The Sessions Judge of Mainpuri refused to interfere, and the applicant thereupon came in revision to the High Court.

Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan, for the applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate (Mr. R. Malcomson), for the Crown.

CHAMIER, J.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by a Magistrate in the Etawah district convicting the applicant of an offence under section 147 of the N. W. P. and Oudh Municipalities Act (I of 1900) and sentencing him to pay a fine of rupees ten. The facts are stated as follows by the Sessions Judge who refused to interfere with the Magistrate's order. In 1865 certain shop-keepers at Etawah entered into an agreement with the Municipal Commissioners of the town for the construction of a ganj, now known as Hume Ganj. The agreement provided that if the buildings were erected in contravention of the plans, the Municipal Commissioners would be entitled to interfere and would also be entitled to forbid the making of additions or changes in the buildings. On January 18th, 1909, the Municipal Board of Etawah issued a notice to the applicant under sub-section (5) of section 87 of the Municipalities Act requiring him to remove a wall on the upper storey of his shop in the ganj on the ground that it had been erected without permission and contrary to the original plans. Similar notices were issued to Daya Ram and Kashi Ram, who are the applicants in Criminal Revisions Nos. 351 and 352. Prosecutions were instituted on the applicants failing to comply with the notices. It has been contended throughout that the Board had no power to issue the notices.

[149] Both the courts below have declined to consider this plea, holding that if the applicants wished to challenge the legality of the notices they should have appealed under section 152 of the Act. That section provides inter alia that any person aggrieved by notice from a Board under sub-section (5) of section 87 or sub-section (2) of section 88 requiring the alteration or demolition of a building may within a certain time appeal to a certain authority and "no such notice shall be liable to be called in question otherwise than by such appeal." In the case of Alopi Din v. The Municipal Board of Allahabad (1), where a Board had by a notice purporting to be issued under section 88 of the Act required a person to remove a wall which the court found did not overhang, project into, or encroach on any street or into on or over any drain, sewer or aqueduct therein, the notice was challenged by suit and the court gave the plaintiff a declaration that the order was not within the competence of the Board and was invalid. Relying partly upon this decision I held in a case that came before me as Judicial Commissioner of Oudh that a conviction under section 147 of the Act for disobeying a notice issued under subsection (2) of section 88 could be challenged in revision on the ground that the notice was ultra vires of the Board.

It appears to me that precisely the same consideration arises in the case of a notice purporting to have been issued under sub-section (5) of section 87 of the Act. If the Board have no power whatever to issue the notice it cannot be considered to be a notice under that section and the provisions of section 152 do not apply. In the case now before me it is abundantly clear that the Board had no power to issue the notices in question. The section applies to new buildings. Sub-section (1) provides that every person who intends to erect or re-erect any building of the kinds specified shall give notice to the Board. Under sub-section (2) the Board may require a person who has given such notice [i.e., notice under sub-section (1)] to submit plans, etc. Sub-section (3) applies only to valid notices given under sub-section (1). Sub-section (4) determines the period for which sanction given by the Board is to remain in force, and lastly sub-section (5) provides that should any such building be begun or erected without [150] sanction or in contravention of the directions of the Board under sub-section (1) or after the sanction has elapsed, the Board may by notice require the building to be altered or demolished. It is quite clear that the words "such building" in sub-section (5) apply only to buildings of the kind referred to in the preceding sub-sections, i.e., new buildings in respect of which notice should have been given under sub-section (1). It has been found that the walls referred to in the notices now in question were built many years ago. It is not suggested that they were built after the passing of the Act of 1900 or at a time when there was any rule or bye-law in force requiring the sanction of the Board to the building of the walls. That the walls were built in contravention of the agreement of 1865 is immaterial, for the Board cannot enforce the agreement by proceedings taken under the Act of 1900. Nor are the persons who built the walls liable to be punished under section 147 of the Act for breaches of that agreement. It seems to me quite clear that section 87 was not intended to empower a Board to require a man to pull down his house, though the house may have been standing for 50 years or more. In this connection I may refer to the case of Hyam v. The Calcutta Corporation (1), in which a similar question arose under the Calcutta Municipal Act. The Magistrate who tried these cases saw the absurdity of applying section 87 to such cases as these, for he declined to order the demolition of the walls, saying that the Board would have to go to the Civil Court to enforce the agreement of 1865. I allow this and the connected applications, set aside the orders of the Magistrate and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Application allowed.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, (with him Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri, The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, Babu Lalit Mohan Banerji and Maulvi Shafi-uz-zaman), for the respondents.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—An objection has been taken on behalf of the respondents to the hearing of this appeal on the ground that the question raised in the appeal has become res judicata in consequence of the plaintiffs not having appealed against the judgment and decree in another suit in which the same issue was determined between these parties adversely to the appellants. The res judicata is alleged to have arisen out of the following facts : One Rahat Husain mortgaged certain property to Gaya Prasad, father of Bhawani Prasad and Raja Ram, defendants, on the 4th of January, 1883. On the 13th of February, 1890, he mortgaged the same property to Bhawani Prasad, Raja Ram and Birj Mohan, the sons of Gaya Prasad. On the 12th of September, 1891, he executed a mortgage in favour of Musammat Nidhoo Kunwar. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the plaintiff to enforce 9 subsequent mortgages, some of which were in favour of the plaintiff Dakhni Din and some in favour of his deceased brother, This suit was No. 13 of 1906 in the court below. Another suit [152] which was No. 12 was brought by the plaintiffs against Hijab-un-nissa, the daughter-in-law of Rahat Husain and transferees from her, and also against Bhawani Prasad and Raja Ram to enforce three other mortgages in which property, other than the property comprised in the 9 mortgages referred to above, was mortgaged. These mortgages, as well as the mortgages on the basis of which suit No. 13 of 1906 was instituted, related to property which was also comprised in the three earlier mortgages. It appears that in 1905 the heirs of Rahat Husain sold some of the mortgaged property to Nidhoo Kunwar and set off against the consideration for the sale the amount of her mortgage and left with her a portion of the consideration for discharge of the mortgages of the 4th of January, 1883 and the 13th of February, 1890. She at first attempted to redeem those mortgages by payment of a proportionate part of the mortgage money, but the mortgagees having refused to allow redemption on those terms she redeemed the mortgages out of the proceeds of a sale executed by her in favour of Bhawani Prasad, defendant, and his brother Raja Ram. Raja Ram, however, repudiated the sale and he asserted that so far as his interest in the mortgages were concerned, the said mortgages were not discharged. The plaintiffs allege that they have paid to Nidhoo Kunwar the rateable share of liability of the property comprised in their mortgages, and they seek to sell the mortgaged property, not only for the amount secured by the mortgages in their favour but also for the amount which they paid to Nidhoo Kunwar. Raja Ram, who was made a defendant to the suit, resisted it on the ground that the earlier mortgages of 1883 and 1890 were not discharged so far as his interests were concerned, inasmuch as payment to Bhawani Prasad of the full amount of the mortgages was not a payment which would have the effect of discharging the share of the mortgage debt due to him. This contention was raised in both the suits to which we have referred. The Court below tried both the suits and disposed of the first suit in which the issue as to the discharge of the earlier mortgages was raised. It recorded its decision on that issue in suit No. 13, and came to the conclusion that the amount payable to Raja Ram under the mortgages of 1883 and 1890 had not been satisfied, and it made a decree on condition that the plaintiffs should pay [153] the said amount to Raja Ram. In the other suit No. 12 it did not record a separate finding on the issue above mentioned, but it referred to its finding on the said issue in suit No. 13 and held in suit No. 12 also that Raja Ram's share in the mortgages of 1883 and 1890 had not been paid off. The plaintiffs have appealed against the decree in suit No. 13, but not in suit No. 12, and the time for preferring an appeal has expired, so that the judgement and decree in suit No. 12 have become final. It is contended that as the issue which arises in this appeal also arose in suit No. 12 between the plaintiffs and Raja Ram and was decided adversely to the plaintiffs, and as the judgement and decree in that case have become final between those parties, the question cannot be re-opened in this appeal. In our judgment this contention is well founded. The matter in issue between the parties was substantially determined in suit No. 12, although the reasons for the Court's determination were given in the judgment in suit No. 13. In view of what the court had held in suit No. 13, it was not necessary to reiterate in the judgment in suit No. 12 the same reasons which were set forth in the judgment in suit No. 13; but the finding in both the suits on the issue was the same. That being so, since no appeal was preferred against the finding and decree in suit No. 12, the matter raised by the issue has become res judicata and cannot be raised again in this appeal. This was so held in the case of Zaharia v. Debia decided by a Bench of three Judges on the 9th of July, 1910, which is yet unreported.* We accordingly allow the objection and dismiss the appeal with costs. We extend the time for payment of the various amounts directed by the decree to be paid, including the amount payable to Raja Ram, for a period of six months from this date.

[15th August, 1910.]

Act No. XV of 1877 (Indian Limitation Act), schedule II, article 180—Execution of decree—Limitation—Terminus a quo—Order of His Majesty in Council dismissing an appeal for want of prosecution an affirmance of the decree appealed from.

An order of His Majesty in the Privy Council dismissing an appeal for whatever cause is in effect an affirmance of the Court below and is the only order in the litigation capable of enforcement.

Where, therefore, an appeal to His Majesty in Council from a decree passed by the High Court for sale on a mortgage was dismissed for want of prosecution, it was held that limitation in respect of an application by the decree-holder for an order absolute for sale was governed by article 180 of the second schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, time running from the date of the order of His Majesty in Council.

[Rev. 36 All. 350.]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

One Thakur Prasad brought a suit for sale upon a mortgage against Chaudhri Abdul Majid and others. The Court passed a decree on 8th May, 1890, against Abdul Majid, ordering him to pay the money within three months, on failure of which the property mortgaged was to be sold. Abdul Majid appealed against the decree to the High Court and the appeal was dismissed on 8th April, 1893. He appealed to His Majesty in Council, and the Judicial Committee dismissed the appeal for failure of prosecution on 13th May, 1901. The decree-holder made the first application for an order absolute for sale on the 14th May, 1904, but the application was rejected by the Court on 1st April, 1905 on the ground that the procedure prescribed by section 610 of Act XIV of 1882 had not been followed. The decree-holder obtained the necessary [155] order from the High Court on 14th June, 1906, and then made a fresh application on 11th June, 1909. On this application the judgment-debtor raised the plea of limitation. The plea was rejected by the lower Court on two grounds, that the application was one falling within article 180 of the Limitation Act of 1877, and that the decree sought to be executed was a Privy Council decree and article 183 of the present Limitation Act applied. The judgment-debtor appealed.

Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri (with him Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji and Babu Lalit Mohan Banerji), for the appellant :—

within article 182 of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908), but under article 181.

[BANERJI, J., referred to the case of Oudh Behari Lal v. Nageshar Lal (1).]

That was a case in which the question of payment of court fee had arisen. Under article 182, the decree must be capable of enforcement, but an order under section 88 of Act No. IV of 1882, (Order XXXIV, rule 4, Act No. V of 1908), only declared the liability of the mortgagor and gave him time to comply with directions of the court, subject to the condition that on his failure to do so the property was to be put up for sale. Another order had yet to be obtained under section 89 of that Act. (Order XXXIV, rule 5, Act No. V of 1908). He cited Ali Ahmad v. Naziran Bibi (2).

In order that article 182 of Act No. IX of 1908 should apply the order must be capable of execution in accordance with law Chhedi v. Lalu (3), Udit Narain v. Jagan Nath (4), Baldeo Prasad v. Ibn Haidar (5), Kedar Nath v. Lalji Sahai (6) and Oudh Behari Lal v. Nageshar Lal (7). The last two cases showed that the stage of execution began after a decree had been passed, not that an application for foreclosure was one to execute a decree. At one time no limitation applied to such applications; Ranbir [156] Singh v. Drigpal (8). Dismissal of an appeal for default could not stand on the same footing as the affirmance of a decree. It did not constitute a decree of the appellate court; Bipro Doss Gossain v. Chunder Seekur Bhuttacharjee (9). It was not a decree of the Privy Council to which 12 years limitation could apply. Article 183 of the present Limitation Act would apply only to orders which could be enforced; the order in the present case had no elements in it capable of execution. It is questionable whether, when an appeal is dismissed for default, the order of dismissal amounts to an affirmance of the lower court's decree; Mansab Ali v. Nihal Chand (10).

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal (with him Maulvi Rahmatullah), for the respondent:—

An order under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act was an order in a suit. Article 181 of the new Limitation Act applied only if no other article applied. Article 183 was clearly applicable here. A decree nisi was given granting three month's time to the judgment-debtor and that time expired on 12th August, 1890. The decree of the final court was the only decree which could be executed; Kristo Kinkur Roy v. Burrodacaunt Roy (11), Muhammad Sulaiman Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (12). The dismissal of the appeal was an affirmance of the decree below. The reason of that dismissal was perfectly immaterial; Luchmun Persad Singh v. Kishan Persad Singh (13). The result is always the same. That is the effect of order XLV, rule 15, (section 610 of Act No. XIV of 1882.)

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, in reply:—

It was held in the case in 7 W. R, 521, that time ran from the date of original decree in cases of dismissal for default. That case was approved of by the Privy Council in Kristo Kinkur Roy v. Burrodacaunt Roy (11).

There was no decree of the appellate court to be executed, as the order of dismissal did not amount to a decree.

STANLEY, C. J.—The facts of this case, so far as it is necessary to state them for the purposes of this appeal are these:—A decree for sale was passed under section 88 of the Transfer of Property [157] Act against several sets of defendants on the 12th of May 1890, by the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Allahabad. According to that decree a sum of Rs. 11,751-15-9 was directed to be paid by the appellant Abdul Majid, one of the judgement-debtors. He appealed from this decree to this Court and his appeal was dismissed on the 8th April, 1893. He applied for and obtained leave to appeal to Her late Majesty in Council. No steps however were taken to prosecute the appeal, and it was dismissed for default of prosecution by the Privy Council on the 13th of May, 1901. The order of dismissal runs in these terms:—"Their Lordships of the Committee in obedience to the said order in Council have proceeded to take into consideration the appeal of Chaudhri Abdul Majid, appellant, and Thakur Prasad, Kanhaiya Lal and Jawahir Lal respondents from a decree of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces, and having called on the appellant to show cause why the said appeal should not be dismissed for non-prosecution, no effectual steps having been taken to set down the same for hearing, their Lordships do this day humbly agree to recommend to Your Majesty the dismissal of this appeal for non-prosecution." An order was subsequently passed in these terms:—"His Majesty having taken the said report into consideration was pleased by and with the advice of His Privy Council to approve thereof and to order, as it is hereby ordered, that the said appeal be, and the same is hereby, dismissed for non-prosecution, whereof the Judges of the High Court of Judicature of the North-Western Provinces at Allahabad for the time being and all other persons whom it may concern are to take notice and govern themselves accordingly." On the 14th of November, 1904, an application was made to the High Court by the decree-holder, Jawahir Lal, for an order absolute against Abdul Majid. An objection was taken to this application by the judgement-debtor on the ground that it was barred by limitation and on the further ground that the procedure enjoined by section 610 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, had not been followed. On the latter ground the objection was allowed. The decree-holder then on the 11th of June, 1906, applied to this Court under section 610, and an order was passed to this effect:—"Let the order be sent down to the court below [158] for necessary execution according to law." The decree-holder then applied for a decree absolute under order 34, rule V of Act No. V of 1908. This application was met by the objection on behalf of the judgement-debtor that the application was barred by limitation; that the only decree which was capable of execution was the decree of the High Court passed on the 8th of April, 1893; that the order of their Lordships of the Privy Council did not affirm that decree, but merely dismissed the appeal for want of prosecution; and that there was no order or decree of the Privy Council which was capable of execution.

If this contention be correct, then the application for execution is barred by article 178 or 179 of the second schedule to Act XV of 1877, corresponding to article 181 or 182 of Act No. IX of 1908. If, on the other hand, the order of the Privy Council is an order which can be executed, the application of the decree-holder is governed by article 180 of Act No. XV of 1877, corresponding to article 183 of Act No. IX of 1908.

This last mentioned article provides a period of 12 years within which an order of His Majesty in Council may be enforced. If the order of His Majesty of the 13th of May, 1901, is treated as an affirmance of the decree of this Court, it seems to me that it is the decree or order of the final Court of Appeal and is an order which can be executed, and as 12 years have not elapsed since the date of that order, the application of the creditor is not barred by limitation.

The question is not without authority. In Pitts v. LaFontaine (1), it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that when a decision of the Judicial Committee has been reported and sanctioned and embodied in an order of Council, it becomes the decree or order of the final Court of Appeal, and it is the duty of every subordinate tribunal to whom the order is addressed to carry it into execution.

In Luchmun Persad Singh v. Kishun Persad Singh (2), it was held by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court, on a reference by MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ., that although an order of Her late Majesty in Council only confirms a decree of the court below, that order is the paramount decision in the suit and any application to enforce it is in point of law an application to [159] execute the order and not the decree which it confirmed. The question before the Court in that case was whether article 179 or article 180 of schedule II of Act No. XV of 1877 governed an application to enforce an order of Her Majesty in Council, affirming a decree of the High Court on its appellate side. GARTH, C. J., who delivered the judgement of the Court observed:—"Although an order of Her Majesty in Council may confirm the decree of the court below, that order is undoubtedly the paramount decision in the suit and any application to enforce it is in point of law an application to execute the order and not the decree which it confirmed." Then he observes that "before the decree-holder can obtain execution he must apply to the High Court under section 610 of the Code to transmit the order of Her Majesty to the Court whose duty it is to issue execution, and it is clear from the language of that section that the court to which the order is transmitted has to execute not its own decree but the order itself. If this were not so, there would seem no necessity for applying to the High Court at all."

In that case, it will be observed, the order of the Privy Council affirmed the decree of the High Court, and it may be said that there was no such affirmance of the decree of the High Court in the present case. This I think is not so. The dismissal of the judgement-debtor's appeal for want of prosecution must, I think, be treated as an affirmance of the decree of the High Court.

The question whether the dismissal of an appeal for want of prosecution is a decree affirming the decision of the court immediately below, within the meaning of section 596 of the former Code of Civil Procedure was considered in the case of Beni Rai v. Ram Lakhan Rai (3). That section falls within chapter XLV which treats of appeals to His Majesty in Council, and it prescribes the requirements for such an appeal, and, amongst others enjoins that where the decree appealed from affirms the decision of the court immediately below the court passing such a decree, the appeal must involve some substantial question of law. My brothers KNOX, and BANERJI, held that a decree dismissing an appeal for want of prosecution was a decree affirming the decision of the court immediately below, within the meaning of section 596. [160] The decision of the Privy Council in Tassaduq Rasul Khan v. Kashi Ram (1), lends support to the view taken in the last mentioned case. In that case a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondents to the hearing of an appeal before their Lordships on the ground that the order giving leave to appeal was not in accordance with the Code of Civil Procedure. The suit in that case was for specific performance of an agreement and the court below had decreed specific performance. On appeal the only order of the appellate court was in these terms:—"It is ordered and decreed that this appeal be dismissed and the respondents' costs of this appeal are to be paid by appellant." It was held that in order to "affirm the decision of the court below" within the meaning of section 596, it is sufficient for the appellate court to affirm the decree. It need not also affirm the grounds of fact on which the judgement was passed, and that where the decree of the appellate court was that the appeal be dismissed, but the reasons given were not the same as those of the lower court in respect of some matters of fact, the appellate court by the dismissal affirmed the decision of the lower court within the meaning of the section. This decision appears to me to lend strong support to the argument addressed to us on behalf of the respondent, that the dismissal of an appeal operates as an affirmance of the decree of the court from which the appeal is preferred, and it is immaterial on what grounds it is dismissed. It seems to me therefore that we ought to treat the order of His Majesty in Council as the final order in the litigation and the order which alone is capable of enforcement.

I would therefore dismiss the appeal.

BANERJI, J.—The question to be determined in this appeal is whether the application of the respondent for an order absolute for sale under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act is barred by limitation, as contended by the appellant.

The decree under section 88 of the Act was passed by the court of first instance on the 12th of May, 1890, and was affirmed by this Court on the 8th of April, 1893. The appellant preferred an appeal to His Majesty in Council, but allowed it to remain pending till the 13th of May, 1901, when it was dismissed for [161] "non-prosecution," no effectual steps having been taken by the appellant for its hearing. After the disposal of the appeal to the Privy Council the respondent applied for an order absolute for sale on the 14th of November, 1904, but it was dismissed on the objection of the appellant on the ground that the provisions of section 610 of Act XIV of 1882, had not been complied with. On the 11th of June, 1909, the application which has given rise to this appeal was presented. It is urged that the application is time-barred under article 178 of schedule II to Act No. XV of 1877.

It was held by a Full Bench of this Court in Oudh Behari Lal v. Nageshar Lal (2) that an application for an order absolute for sale under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act is an application in execution. This will apparently not be so under Act No. V of 1908 (the present Code of Civil Procedure), as order XXXIV, rule 5, declares that what was an order absolute for sale under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act is the final decree in the suit. However, as order XXXIX does not apply to this case, we must, in accordance with the ruling of the Full Bench, hold the present application to be an application in execution, and we must consider what article of schedule II of the Limitation Act applies to it.

Article 178 applies if there is no other article in the schedule which governs the application. It is urged on behalf of the respondent that article 180 of schedule II to Act No. XV of 1877, to which article 183, schedule I to Act No. IX of 1908 corresponds, is applicable. Article 180 provides a limitation of 12 years for an application to enforce, among other orders, etc., "an order of Her Majesty in Council." We have to determine whether the order which the respondent seeks to enforce is an order of His Majesty in Council within the meaning and intention of the article. When a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council "has been reported to his Majesty and has been sanctioned and embodied in an order of His Majesty in Council" it becomes the order of His Majesty and the final order in the case which a court is to carry into effect. This order is not a decree, but it is the order of His Majesty and as such has to be enforced. In this case [162] their Lordships of the Privy Council made a report to His Majesty and recommended "the dismissal of the appeal for non-prosecution." This report was taken into consideration by His Majesty and was approved of, and it was ordered that the "appeal be and the same is hereby dismissed for non-prosecution." This order of His Majesty is the final order in the cause and is the order which must be enforced. The necessary effect of an order dismissing an appeal from the decree of a subordinate court is an affirmance of that decree. Therefore when an appeal to His Majesty in Council is dismissed, the necessary result is that the decree of the court below is affirmed, whatever the reason for the dismissal may be. It was held in Beni Rai v. Ram Lakhan Rai (1) that a decree of the High Court dismissing an appeal for want of prosecution was a decree affirming the decision of the court below. I was a party to this ruling and I see no reason to alter the opinion therein expressed. To the same effect is the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Tassaduq Rasul Khan v. Kashi Ram, referred to in the judgement of the learned Chief Justice. In that case the decree of the appellate court was, as the report of the case shows, "that the appeal should be dismissed with costs." It was held that the appellate court affirmed the decision of the lower court. The principle of these cases applies to the present case, and applying that principle, it cannot but be held that the order of His Majesty dismissing the appellant's appeal affirmed the decree of this Court. The learned advocate for the appellant placed great reliance on certain observations made by SIR BARNES PEACOCK, C. J., in his judgement in Bipro Doss Gossain v. Chunder Seekur Bhuttacharjee (2). That case is in my opinion distinguishable. There the question was as to the meaning to be placed on the provision of section 20 of Act XIV of 1859 and no question arose as to the effect of an order of His Majesty dismissing an appeal. For the above reasons, I agree with the learned Chief Justice in holding that the respondent's application is governed by article 180 of schedule II, Act No. XV of 1877, and is not time-barred. I also would dismiss the appeal.

CHAMIER, J.—I concur.

Act No. XLV of 1860 (Indian Penal Code), section 182—Transfer—Unfounded allegations against the trying magistrate made by an accused person in an application for transfer of his case.

Held that an accused person, who in support of an application for the transfer of the case against him to some other Magistrate makes unfounded and defamatory allegations against the trying Magistrate, cannot be prosecuted in respect of such allegations under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code. Queen v. Daria Khan (1) and Queen-Empress v. Subbayya (2) referred to.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

One Ramdoo lodged a complaint against Matan of an offence under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code in the court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The case was made over to a Tahsildar Magistrate for trial. The case had not proceeded far when Matan presented a petition to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate praying him to transfer the case from the court of the Tahsildar Magistrate to some other court. In the course of the petition the applicant stated as one of the reasons for a transfer of the case that it had been instituted at the instance of the Tahsildar because the applicant had declined to accede to the Tahsildar's request that he should stand security for a man named Mangalia. The allegation was entirely without foundation. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate examined the applicant on oath in support of the application for transfer and the applicant then repeated his accusation against the Tahsildar. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate on this directed the applicant to be prosecuted in respect of these allegations under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code. Against this order the applicant applied in revision to the High Court.

CHAMIER, J.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate, directing the prosecution of the applicant for an offence under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code.

It appears that one Ramdoo lodged a complaint against the applicant of an offence under section 323 of the Code in the court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The case was made over to a Tahsildar Magistrate for trial. The case had not proceeded far when the applicant presented a petition to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate praying him to transfer the case from the court of the Tahsildar Magistrate to some other court. In the course of the petition the applicant stated as one of the reasons for a transfer that the case had been instituted at the instance of the Tahsildar because the applicant had declined to accede to the Tahsildar's request that the applicant should stand security for a man named Mangalia. transfer and the applicant then repeated the accusation against the Tahsildar. It is in respect of this accusation that the applicant has been ordered to be prosecuted.

It has been held repeatedly by this court that an accused person who makes a false affidavit in support of an application for transfer cannot be prosecuted in respect of the affidavit under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code, and it has been held that an accused person applying for a transfer cannot be prosecuted under section 228 of the Code in scandalous or insulting allegations made against a magistrate in the application for a transfer. Such a person may be prosecuted under section 500 of the Code in respect of defamatory statements made in the application, but in the only reported case that I am aware of the prosecution failed on the ground that the case fell within the 9th exception stated in that section. It appears to me that the applicant cannot be prosecuted under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of statements made by him during his examination [165] on oath by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, because the statements were made in answer to questions put by the magistrate and the applicant cannot be said to have been giving information within the meaning of section 182, when he was under examination.

But the question whether he may be prosecuted under section 182, in respect of statements made in his application for transfer is one of some difficulty. There is a note in the Current Index of Cases for 1908 of a case of Imperator v. Khan Muhammad (1), in which an accused person who made false allegations in an affidavit in support of an application for a transfer was prosecuted under section 182, but with that exception I have been unable to find any case in which such a prosecution was attempted or allowed. The report of the case referred to is not available.

It was held in Queen v. Daria Khan (2) that statements made by a prisoner for the purpose of his defence cannot be held to be information given to a public servant within the meaning of section 182 of the Indian Penal Code. It appears to me that the applicant was in the position of an accused person when he presented the application for a transfer. Had the case been pending in the Court of a magistrate having power to make over cases to other magistrates, e.g., a District Magistrate or Sub-Divisional Magistrate and the allegation had been made concerning some magistrate to which it proposed to transfer the case, there would, I suppose, be no doubt that the case was covered by the decision in Queen v. Daria Khan, of which, if I may say so, I entirely approve. It seems to me that it can make no difference that the statement was made to a magistrate other than that in whose Court the case was pending. I hold that the applicant was at the time in the position of an accused person, and I think it would be straining the language of section 182 to hold that a statement made in such circumstances was information given to a public servant within the meaning of that section. I feel confident that the section was never intended to apply to such a case. The view which I take is supported by the decision of the Madras High Court in Queen-Empress v. Subbayya (3).

[166] I would set aside the order for the prosecution of the applicant.

GRIFFIN, J.—I concur.

BY THE COURT:—The order of the Court is that the order of the magistrate sanctioning prosecution under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code is set aside.

ROSHAN LAL (Plaintiff) v. THE DELHI CLOTH AND GENERAL MILLS COMPANY, LIMITED, DELHI (Defendant).*

[10th August 1910.]

Contract—Sale—Deposit—Failure of purchaser to complete contract—Vendor entitled to retain deposit.

Plaintiff agreed to purchase 500 bales of cotton yarn from defendants and to deposit 5 rupees per bale as earnest money. He deposited somewhat more than half of the earnest money and thereafter repudiated the contract. Held that plaintiff was not entitled to recover that portion of the earnest money which he had paid. Collins v. Stimson (1), Howe v. Smith (2), Ex parte Barrell In re Parnell (3) and Bishan Chand v. Radha Kishan Das (4) referred to.

[Ref. 53 I. C. 875=30 C. L. J. 113=24 C. W. N. 40; 17 A. L. J. 309=50 I. C. 948 67 I. C. 714; 67 I. C. 806; cf. 1923 Rang. 47; 35 M. L. T. 205 (P. C.).]

THIS was a suit by the purchaser to recover a sum of Rs. 1,300 paid by him as earnest money on a contract for the purchase of cotton. The plaintiff agreed to take 500 bales of cotton yarn and to deposit as earnest money Rs. 5 per bale; if the earnest money was not deposited within two days the defendents were to be at liberty to adhere to or cancel the contract. The plaintiff paid Rs. 1,300 out of the earnest money, but failed to pay the balance, and thereafter repudiated the contract. Subsequently the plaintiff sued for the return of the earnest money which he had deposited. The claim was decreed by the first Court, but on appeal this decree was set aside and the suit dismissed. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Munshi Gulzari Lal, for the appellant.

Pandit Baldeo Ram Dave, for the respondents.

[167] STANLEY, C. J. BANERJI, J.—The question in this appeal is whether a purchaser who has repudiated a purchase is entitled to recover earnest money paid by him on entering into the contract. The contract in this case was for the purchase of 500 bales of cotton yarn, and the agreement was that the purchaser would deposit Rs. 5 per bale as earnest money with the defendant company; and that if that was not done within two days of the contract the defendant company would be at liberty either to adhere to or cancel the contract. The purchaser paid a sum of Rs. 1,300 as earnest money, which left a balance of earnest money still unpaid. It has been found by the lower appellate court that the purchaser repudiated the contract. He was guilty of two breaches: first of all, he failed to pay the entire earnest money agreed to be paid by him, and he also failed to take delivery of the goods and pay for them. Upon these findings the lower appellate court dismissed the plaintiff's claim. His suit was for recovery of the sum of Rs. 1,300, which was paid by him as earnest money.

We think that the court below was right in the view which it took. The question whether earnest money is recoverable has been considered in a number of cases, and it would appear that no invariable rule can be laid down on the subject. In the case of Collins v. Stimson (1) BARON POLLOCK stated the law upon the subject in the following terms "According to the law of vendor and purchaser the inference is that such a deposit is paid as a guarantee for the performance of the contract, and where the contract goes off by default of the purchaser the vendor is entitled to retain the deposit."

In the case of Howe v. Smith (2) the question was considered whether a sum which was paid on the purchase of real estate as a deposit and in part payment of the purchase money was recoverable. The plaintiff who sued for the recovery of the earnest money failed to perform his contract within a reasonable time, and it was held by the Court of appeal, affirming the decision of KAY, J., that the deposit, although to be taken as part payment, if the contract was completed, was also a guarantee for the performance of the contract, and that the plaintiff, having failed to [168] perform his contract within a reasonable time, had no right to a return of the deposit.

Again, in the case of Ex parte Barrell, in re Parnell (3), in which by a contract for sale of real estate it was stipulated that a portion of the purchase money should be paid immediately and the residue on completion of the contract, it was held on non-fulfilment of the contract by the purchaser that the vendor was entitled to retain the deposit. SIR W. M. JAMES, L. J., in his judgment says:—"The money was paid to the vendor as a guarantee that the contract should be performed. The trustee refuses to perform the contract and then says give me back the deposit. There is no ground for such a claim." SIR G. MELLISH, L. J., in his judgment observes:—"It appears to me clear that even where there is no clause in the contract as to the forfeiture of the deposit, if the purchaser repudiates the contract he cannot have back the money, as the contract has gone off through his default."

To the same effect is the ruling of KNOX and BURKITT, JJ., in the case of Bishan Chand v. Radha Kishan Das (4). The contract in that case was for the purchase of a decree for money. Through default of the purchaser the purchase was not carried out, and it was held that the purchaser could not recover the deposit which had been paid by him in pursuance of the contract.

We have said that no hard and fast rule can be laid down on this subject. As was said by COTTON, L. J., in the case of Howe v. Smith, "I do not say that in all cases where this Court would refuse specific performance, the vendor ought to be entitled to retain the deposit. It may well be that there may be circumstances which would justify this Court in declining, and which would require the Court, according to its ordinary rules, to refuse to order specific performance in which it could not be said that the purchaser had repudiated the contract, or that he had entirely put an end to it so as to enable the vendor to retain the deposit. In order to enable the vendor so to act, in my opinion, there must be acts on the part of the purchaser which not only amount to delay sufficient to deprive him of the equitable remedy of [169] specific performance, but which would make his conduct amount to a repudiation on his part of the contract." Such a case as would entitle a purchaser to a return of the earnest money is that of Alokeshi Dassi v. Hara Chand Dass (1). In that case the defendant vendor unsuccessfully denied the contract in toto and there was no repudiation of the contract by the plaintiff, and it was held that plaintiff purchaser was entitled to a refund of the deposit made by him. The present case is unlike that case according to the finding of the lower appellate Court. The plaintiff in this case was in default, in that he repudiated the contract, although full opportunity was given to him of completing it. We think that the lower appellate Court rightly dismissed his suit. We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Act (Local) No. III of 1901 (United Provinces Land Revenue Act), section 233 (k)—Partition—Revenue Court irregularly entertaining an application for allotment of a share to applicant—Suit in Civil Court for declaration of title as to share so allotted—Jurisdiction.

Some of the co-sharers in a mauza applied for partition. H, one of the non-applicants, came in within the time limited in the proclamation issued under section 110 of the Land Revenue Act, 1901, and asked for his share also to be partitioned off. After the time for objecting to the partition had expired, L filed an application claiming a share in the portion alleged by H to be his share, and without notice to H this application was granted, and part of the share allotted to him was given to L. H then sued in the Civil Court asking for a declaration of his title to the plots so allotted to L. Held that, however erroneous the procedure of the revenue authorities might have been, H's suit was barred by section 233 (k) of the Land Revenue Act, 1901. Muhammad Sadiq v. Lauto Ram (2) followed. Khasay v. Jugla (3) and Muhammad Jan v. Sadanand Pande (4) distinguished.

[Dist. 28 I. C. 454; 12 A. L. J. 1126=25 I. C. 177.]

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

In qasba Khair there were several khatas. On the 11th December, 1905, Bilas Rai and others who owned certain shares in same khatas, except khata No. 34, applied for perfect partition [170] making the other co-sharers parties to their application. The officer in charge of the partition issued a proclamation under section 110 of Act No. III of 1901, calling on the recorded co-sharers who had not joined in the application to appear and show cause on or before the 12th April, 1906. On the 10th April, 1906, the plaintiff in the present suit filed an application stating that he had no objection to the application of Bilas Rai and others but he further prayed that his own share be made into a separate and distinct mahal. Lachman Das, who had purchased only plots Nos. 979 and 1518 in khata No. 34 in execution of a decree, did not file any objection to the petition of the plaintiff. The application of the plaintiff was proceeded with, and the amin allotted to him the lands in dispute. On the 21st October, 1907. Lachman Das put in a petition before the partition officer stating that he had a title to the extent of two bighas and odd in all the lands in khata No. 34 and the allotment by the Amin was wrong and improper. On the 28th October, 1907 the partition officer, without issuing notice to the plaintiff, decided the objection in favour of Lachman Das. Thereupon the plaintiff instituted the present suit for a declaration that he was the owner in possession of the plots in dispute, and that the defendant had no right or share in it. The main defence of the defendant was that the suit was barred by the rule of res judicata and that section 233 clause (k) of Act No. III of 1901 applied to the case and that it was consequently not cognizable by the Civil Court. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, but the lower appellate Court reversed the decree and remanded the suit.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the appellants, contended that the suit was barred by section 233, clause (k) of Act No. III of 1901, and by the rule of res judicata. The plaintiff ought to have raised the question of proprietary title when he appeared in answer to the proclamation. The partition having been completed, the suit was not maintainable. He relied upon Muhammad Sadiq v. Laute Ram (1) and Nathi Mal v. Tej Singh (2).

Munshi Haribans Sahai, for the respondent, submitted that the suit was not barred by the rule of res judicata inasmuch as the [171] objection of Lachman Das raised a question of proprietary title and the partition officer was not competent to decide it. The partition officer was comptent to determine a question of title only when an objection was raised in the manner pointed out in section 111 of Act No. III of 1901. The plaintiff could not get any relief from the superior revenue Courts, inasmuch as they had no jurisdiction to determine a question of title. The decision was merely waste paper. Further, as the plaintiff had no opportunity of meeting the objection raised by the defendant, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is not barred; Awadh Behari Lal v. Ishri Prasad (3), Khasay v. Jugla (4) and Muhammad Jan v. Sadanand Pande (5). The suit was brought some eighteen months before the completion of the partition proceedings. The Full Bench in Muhammad Sadiq v. Laute Ram expressly left this question open.

KNOX and GRIFFIN, JJ.:—Lala Hunman Prasad, respondent in the present appeal was plaintiff in the Court of first intance. He came to Court saying that he was the owner in possession of certain zamindari property, consisting of numbers which are given in the schedule to his plaint, of which the total amount is 14 bighas 9 biswas. He alleged that the defendant had no right or share in these plots of land, that in the same village, the defendant Lachman Das, now appellant had purchased at auction 2 bighas 5 biswas, which was a grave-yard, and of which the numbers were 979 and 1518. He makes other allegations regarding the defendant Lachman Das' possession quoad these plots, but we are not concerned with these allegations in this appeal. He then goes to say that Bilas Rai, one of the co-sharers in Kasba Khair, applied the Revenue Court in 1905 for the partition of the Kasba Khair. The usual proclamation regarding partition was issued, and before the time allowed by the proclamation had expired, Hanuman Prasad came before the Collector and said that he had no objection to the partition and asked that a separate lot might be prepared of his property. Apparently Lachman Das had notice of the application of Bilas Rai, and it is admitted that he was present at the partition [172] proceedings which ensued. According to Hanuman Prasad, when their proceedings had gone on some way, namely, in October, 1907, and after the amin had drawn up lots, Luchman Das put in a petition to the effect that he was a co-sharer in khata No. 34. Hanuman Prasad says that no notice was given to him of this petition, and that behind his back the Revenue Court passed an order on the 21st of October, 1907, to the effect that Lachman Das was to have a share in the whole of the khata corresponding to the amount claimed by him, the result of which was that, instead of Lachman Das being given merely the two plots of grave land, he was given a share in the lands of the khata and, amongst that, of land which the plaintiff had asked to be marked out in a separate lot in his favour. Upon this Hanuman Prasad, on the 22nd November, 1907, instituted the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, asking for a declaration that he was the owner and in possession of the plots in suit.

The Court of first instance, holding that the plaintiff ought to have applied to the Revenue Court and that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction, dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge, holding that Hanuman Prasad had no opportunity to assert his title in answer to the petition put in by Lachman Das and could maintain a suit in the Civil Court, which could adjudicate upon the question of title raised before it, set aside the decree of the first Court and remanded the case for trial on the merits. In appeal, Lachman Das urged that section 233 (k) of Local Act No. III of 1901 bars the suit. He further contended that the plaintiff ought to have raised any question of title he possessed when he appeared in answer to the original proclamation for partition, and also that the decision of the Revenue Court operated as res judicata to the present claim. The partition proceedings, we are told, were not completed until the 15th of April, 1909, some 18 months after Hanuman Prasad instituted his suit in the Civil Court. So far as we can judge from the papers before us, the petition put in by Lachman Das was untrue, misleading and put in before the revenue Court out of time. The allegation of Hanuman Prasad is that he holds the land in severalty. This appears to be the fact, and the allegation appears to have commended itself to the partition [173] officers and he acting, as he would, under section 117 of Act III of 1901, allotted to Hanuman Prasad the lands held by him in severalty. The only lands, if any, to which the defendant was entitled were the two plots which we may term in this judgment the cemetery land. The procedure of the Court, so far as we may say anything about it, after Lachman Das' application was entirely irregular. At the same time we are also compelled to hold that Hanuman Prasad should have gone to the Revenue Court and to get put right the manifest irregularity in procedure which he says was committed by the Revenue Court. Had he done so, and if his allegations are correct, we have little doubt that the Revenue Court would have put matters right. Instead of that he has come to this Court and he is met by the bar contained in section 233 (k) of the Land Revenue Act. Section 233 (k) says that no person shall institute any suit or other proceedings in a Civil Court with respect to the partition or union of mahals except as provided by sections 111 and 112. Unless Hanuman Prasad can show that his case comes clearly within the provisions of section 111, his suit is barred by section 233 (k). He attempts to show this by saying that Luchman Das in his application of the 21st of October, 1907, raised a question of title, and as he never had any opportunity to answer that question of title, and in this way he tries to bring his case within the rulings in Khasay v. Jugla (1) and Muhammad Jan v. Sadanand Pande (2). Both these cases are clearly distinguishable from the present case. We can only repeat here what was laid down in the Full Bench case of Muhammad Sadiq v. Laute Ram (3), in which it was held that any exercise of jurisdiction of a Civil Court which would disturb or in any way affect the distribution of land made by partition is barred by section 241 (f) of Act XIX of 1873, now section 233 (k) of Act No. III of 1901, no matter whether a question of title or any other question is raised in the suit.

We decree the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and restore the decree of the Court of first instance. We make no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE facts out of which this appeal arose were as follows:—

The plaintiff alleged that he was the owner of the grove which he and his ancestors held rent-free; that the defendants Nos. 3 to 11 were his co-sharers; that the first two defendants, who are the land-holders of the village wrongfully dispossessed him in July, 1906, and let it to the 13th defendant, and that he, plaintiff, as one of the owners of the grove, was entitled to be restored to possession. He accordingly brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, on the 7th of January, 1907, for ejectment of the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 13 and for recovery of possession of the grove. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff was the tenant of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in respect of the grove and not the owners of it and that he had been dispossessed within six months preceding the date of the institution of the suit. It made a decree in the plaintiff's favour for possession as tenant. On appeal by the defendants the lower appellate Court held that the plaintiff had forfeited his right as tenant by denying his landlord's title, that the trees now existing in the grove were of spontaneous growth and were not planted by the plaintiff or his predecessors in title, and that he was not entitled to recover possession. The suit was accordingly dismissed.

[175] The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. On the appeal coming up for hearing before their Lordships KNOX and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ., it was referred to the Chief Justice for the constitution of a larger Bench in view of the fact that the rulings of the Court on the point raised in it appeared to be in conflict. The order of reference was as follows:—

"The suit out of which this second appeal arises was a suit brought by the appellant, who was plaintiff in the Court of first instance, for possession of a grove, which he claimed as forming part of a rent-free tenure which had been since the settlement made under Regulation IX of 1833 in the possession of Mansa Ram, ancestor of the plaintiff, and of his descendants. He alleged forcible dispossession by the respondents in July, 1906. In January, 1907, therefore he brought the present suit for recovery of possession.

"The Court of first instance gave him a decree. The lower appellate court reversed this decree on the ground that as the plaintiff had denied the relationship of landlord and tenant and raised a question of proprietary title which he had not proved his suit should be, and it was, dismissed.

"In second appeal the plaintiff contends that as the respondents forcibly dispossessed him and as his suit has been brought within six months from the date of dispossession, he is entitled, in any case, to a decree for possession under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act.

"The question then raised is whether in a suit for ejectment a plaintiff, who bases his claim upon proprietary title, is entitled to a decree under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, in any event, if he sues within six months from the date of dispossession and independently of whether he makes good the title under which he professes to sue.

"On this point the ruling of this Court would appear to be in conflict.

"In Wali Ahmad Khan v. Ajudhia Kandu (1) it was held by the majority of the Court that section 9 of the Specific Relief Act is intended to provide a special summary remedy for a person who being, whatever his title, in possession of immovable property is ousted therefrom. In Ram Harakh Rai v. Sheodihal Joti (2) a similar view was taken, and it was held that a Court should in all cases in which it applies give effect to the provisions of the first paragraph of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, whether that section be expressly pleaded or not. In Monsi v. Kashi (3) one of us followed, but with reluctance, the law laid down in Ram Harakh Rai v. Sheodihal Joti. These rulings were followed in Parbhu Lal v. Ram Charan (4).

"On the other hand, this Court in Wajid Ali v. Ram Saran Sahai (5), in Chuthan Rai v. Sheo Ghulam Rai (6) and in Baldeo Das v. Mangni Ram (7) held that section 9 of the Specific Relief Act referred only to cases in which no title was set up, but only the fact of dispossession established, and not to cases in which the plaintiff sought a declaration of title.

[176] "Our attention has moreover been called to the cases of Rama Sami Chetti v. Paruman Chetti (1), in which the Madras High Court declined to follow the case Ram Harakh Rai v. Sheodihal Joti and held that where a suit had not been brought under the special provisions of the Specific Relief Act, but was based on plaintiff's superior title, a claim to title being also set up in defence, the issue concerning title should have been tried.

The case then came on for hearing before a Full Bench, consisting of KNOX, BANERJI, and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji (Munshi Jang Bahadur Lal with him), for the appellant :—

The sole question for decision in this appeal is whether a plaintiff who brings a suit for possession of immoveable property by ejectment of the defendant on the basis of his own title, but fails to prove that title, would nevertheless be entitled to a decree for possession of the property if he can prove possession over that property within six months anterior to the date of his dispossession, under the provisions of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, even if that section be not expressly pleaded. This question was answered in the affirmative by a Division Bench of this Court in Ram Harakh Rai v. Sheodihal Joti (1), and this ruling was followed in Mousi v. Kashi (2) and Parbhu Lal v. Ram Charan (3). The court of first instance has found in this case that the plaintiff's suit was instituted within six months of the date of his dispossession, and that finding has not been disturbed by the lower appellate court. In view, therefore, of the above rulings of this Court, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for possession of the property in suit, although he claimed on the basis of his title, and endeavoured to prove it, but failed.

There is nothing in section 9 of the Specific Relief Act to show that the plaintiff is precluded from bringing a suit upon his title and at the same time claiming the benefit of that section. The authorities are clear that the section need not be specifically pleaded. Possession may be a source or root of title, and in any case deserves to be protected. When a person out of possession therefore sues for possession, if he proves his title, there can be [177] no further question, but if he cannot, the mere fact of his anterior possession will entitle him to a decree for possession, provided only that his suit is brought within six months of the date of his illegal dispossession. There is nothing in the language of sections 8 and 9 of the Act to indicate that the remedies are alternative. The plaintiff has the option either to bring a suit upon his title or to bring merely what is called a possessory suit. The beneficial object of section 9, as explained in Wali Ahmad Khan v. Ajudia Kandu (4), ought not to be lost sight of. There are old rulings of this Court which uphold the contrary view, but no reasons are given : Wajid Ali v. Ram Saran Sahai (5), Chuthan Rai v. Sheo Ghulam Rai (6), Baldeo Das v. Mangni Ram (7). The Madras High Court in Ramasami Chetti v. Parman Chetti (8) declined to follow the ruling in Ram Harakh Rai v. Sheodihal Joti (1).

Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri (Munshi Gulzari Lal with him), for the respondent :—

Sections 8 and 9 of the Specific Relief Act provide for alternative remedies and they are mutually exclusive. From the language of sections 8 and 9 we find that an option has been given to the plaintiff. He may either bring a regular suit upon his title under section 8 of the Act, or he may elect to adopt the summary procedure provided by section 9 under which no question of title can be raised. The object of section 9 is clearly to discourage forcible and unlawful dispossession. In order to grant relief under this section the court will only see whether the plaintiff was wrongfully dispossessed within the six months of the date of the institution of the suit. No other question can be gone into in such a suit. Any option or privilege granted by this section can be waived by the party concerned. When, therefore, the plaintiff brings a suit upon his title, he does not avail himself of the privilege granted by section 9 of the Act. He clearly intends that the court should grant him relief as in a regular suit on the strength of his title. There is no warrant in law for the court after it has examined the question of title in detail and found it against the plaintiff, to give him [178] relief under the summary jurisdiction provided by section 9. And the plaintiff may for very good reason desire that the question should not be settled summarily and that a decision once for all should be given on the basis of his title. The evidence in support of his title, for instance, may not be available to him when the question of title is litigated subsequently. A suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, again, it will be observed, is very limited in its scope. No appeal is allowed from any order or decree passed under this section; neither can such order or decree be reviewed. The plaintiff may, therefore, well chose his remedy under a suit on title and waive his right to a summary remedy. The right to both the remedies cannot therefore be combined in one and the same suit.

There is, again, I submit, a question of estoppel to be considered in such a case. By the frame of his suit and by his representations to the court the plaintiff induces and obliges the defendant to undergo an amount of trouble and expense to disprove the plaintiff's title and substantiate his own. The plaintiff cannot then be allowed at the last moment, when he fails to prove his title – the basis of his suit—to turn round and ask the court not to look upon all the evidence adduced, but to give him a relief only upon the basis of dispossession. If the court really finds upon evidence that the title is with the defendant and not with the plaintiff, it cannot be justified in granting any relief to the plaintiff, and in ignoring the defendant's cause, thus driving him to useless litigation. This would be both inconvenient and anomalous. It is certainly open to the plaintiff to amend his plaint before the trial commences. But if he elects to go to trial upon the merits of his title, he must prove that title to obtain any relief in the suit.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, was heard in reply.

KNOX, BANERJI, and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ.:—The sole question raised in this appeal is whether a plaintiff who sues for possession and for ejectment of the defendant on the basis of title and fails to prove his title is still entitled to a decree for possession under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, if he can prove possession within six months anterior to the date of his [179] dispossession. As there are conflicting rulings in this Court on the point the case has been referred to this Bench.

The facts are these:—The plaintiff alleged that he was the owner of a grove which he and his ancestors held rent-free; that the defendants Nos. 3 to 11 were his co-sharers; that the first two defendants, who are the land-holders of the village, wrongfully dispossessed him in July, 1906, and let it to the 13th defendant, and that he, plaintiff, as one of the owners of the grove, was entitled to be restored to possession. He accordingly brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, on the 7th of January, 1907, for ejectment of the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 13 and for recovery of possession of the grove. The court of first instance found that the plaintiff was the tenant of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in respect of the grove, and not the owner of it, and that he had been dispossessed within six months preceding the date of the institution of the suit. It made a decree in the plaintiff's favour for possession as tenant. On appeal by the defendants the lower appellate court held that the plaintiff had forfeited his right as tenant by denying his landlord's title, that the trees now existing in the grove were of spontaneous growth and were not planted by the plaintiff or his predecessors in title, and that he was not entitled to recover possession. The suit was accordingly dismissed.

The findings of the lower appellate court have not been questioned in the argument before us, but it is contended that as the court of first instance found that the plaintiff's suit had been instituted within six months of the date of his dispossession and this finding was not dissented from by the lower appellate court, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, although he failed to establish his title. In support of this contention we have been referred to the decision of this Court in Ram Harakh Rai v. Sheodihal Joti (1), which undoubtedly favours the contention. In that case it was held that "the fact that the plaintiff in addition to alleging and proving the facts which would entitle him to a decree under the first paragraph of section 9, claimed a title as mortgagee, would not disentitle him to a decree under the first paragraph of section 9." The learned Judges further observed :— "We see no reason why [180] a claim for damages and a claim for establishment of title may not be combined with a claim based on the first paragraph of section 9 of Act No. 1 of 1877". With great respect we are unable to agree with this view. Section 8 of the Act provides that a person entitled to the possession of specific immovable property may recover it in the manner prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure, that is to say, by a suit for ejectment on the basis of title. Section 9 gives a summary remedy to a person who has without his consent been dispossessed of immoveable property otherwise than in due course of law, for recovery of possession without establishing title, provided that his suit is brought within six months of the date of dispossession. The second paragraph of the section provides that the person against whom a decree may be passed under the first paragraph may, notwithstanding such decree, sue to establish his title and to recover possession. The two sections give alternative remedies and are in our opinion mutually exclusive. If a suit is brought under section 9 for recovery of possession, no question of title can be raised or determined. The object of the section is clearly to discourage forcible dispossession and to enable the person dispossessed to recover possession by merely proving previous possession and wrongful dispossession without proving title, but that is not his only remedy. He may, if he so chooses, bring a suit for possession on the basis of his title. But we do not think that he can combine both remedies in the same suit and that he can get a decree for possession even if he fails to prove title. Such a combination would, to say the least of it, result in anomaly and inconvenience. In a suit under section 9 no question of title is to be determined, but that question may be tried in another suit instituted after the decree in that suit. If a claim for establishment of title can be combined with a claim under section 9, the court will have to grant a decree for possession on dispossession being proved, in spite of its finding that the plaintiff had no title and that title was in the defendant. It could not surely be the intention of the legislature that the question of title could be litigated in another suit which under the second paragraph of section 9 the defendant would have the right to bring. In the case relied on, the claim for establishment of the plaintiff's title and for damages was dismissed, but he was [181] granted a decree for possession. The defendant was entitled under section 9 to bring a suit for establishment of his title, and in such suit the decision in the former suit as to title would be conclusive between the parties. So that the defendant in the first suit had merely to file his plaint in order to entitle him to a decree. This would only lead to anomaly and would promote litigation. In our judgment, when a plaintiff sues for possession on the basis of title and fails to establish title he cannot be granted a decree for possession under the first paragraph of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. Of course in some instances previous possession may afford evidence of title and where the defendant is a trespasser and the plaintiff was in continuous and peaceful possession he would be entitled to retain such possession. But where, as in this case, it is found that the plaintiff has no title and that the principal defendants are entitled to the property, the plaintiff cannot obtain a decree for possession. Our view is supported by the ruling of the Madras High Court in Ramasami Chetti v. Paraman Chetti (1), and is in consonance with the decisions of this Court in Wajid Ali v. Rama Saran(2) and Chuthan Rai v. Sheo Ghulam Rai (3), which do not appear to have been considered in Ram Harak Rai v. Sheodihal Joti, referred to above. The case last mentioned was, no doubt, followed by one of us sitting singly in Mousi v. Kashi (4), but this was done with reluctance. The point, however, did not arise in that case, as the plaintiff's adverse possession for more than twelve years was established. For the reasons stated above we are of opinion that when a plaintiff brings a suit for possession on the basis of title and fails to establish title, he cannot be granted a decree under the first paragraph of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, and that the case of Ram Harakh Rai v. Sheodihal Joti was not rightly decided. This appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Held by the Full Bench that a Muhammadan widow, who has been put in possession by her husband of his estate in lieu of her dower debt, is entitled, when called upon by her husband's heirs other than herself, to account for rents and profits received by her during the time of her possession, to claim interest at a reasonable rate upon her dower debt.

THE facts of this case are as follows :—

The following pedigree will make the relation of the parties clear :—

The plaintiff Hamira Bibi in this case sued to recover her share in the inheritance of her brother Inayat-ullah. Zubaida Bibi was in possession and claimed to be so in lieu of her dower, which had been fixed at the time of the marriage, at the sum of a lakh of rupees. Hamira Bibi had brought a suit against Zubaida Bibi on 4th October, 1902, to recover her share of the inheritance of her brother's estate without asking for any accounts. Her suit was dismissed by the Subordinate [183] Judge on the ground that Zubaida Bibi was in possession in lieu of dower, and as the suit was one for possession without any mention of accounts as to the discharge of dower, it could not be maintained. This decision of the Subordinate Judge was upheld by the High Court on 12th August, 1905, but it was provided that the dismissal of the appeal was without any prejudice to the institution of any fresh suit which the plaintiff might bring on proper lines. Hamira Bibi then brought the present suit asking for accounts. She claimed to recover the property on the plea that during the 14 years of her possession Zubaida Bibi had realized her dower, but proposed herself willing to pay the difference, if any part of the dower money still remained unrealized. The Court below took accounts and granted the defendant interest on her dower money at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. The plaintiff appealed.

The case was referred to a Full Bench in view of the conflict of authorities in this Court upon the question of the right of a Muhammadan widow to recover her dower with interest.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal (with him Maulvi Abdool Raoof), for the appellant :—

No interest could be allowed under the Muhammadan Law. No Moslem was allowed to claim it. In the absence of a contract for interest it could only be claimed under section 37 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act (VII of 1887.) If that section did not apply, the Muhammadan Law applied. Mr. W. Wallach (with him Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq), for the respondents :—

As far as dower itself was concerned Muhammadan Law was not applicable ; a marriage could be valid without any dower. Hidaya, page 44. Soorma Khatoon v. Attaff-oon-nissa Khatoon (9), Musammat Wahid-un-nissa v. Musammat Subrattan and others (10). The transaction would be governed by the rules of justice, equity and good conscience. He referred to Woomattool Fatima Begum v. Meer-un-nissa Khatoon (11), Mia Khan v. Bibi Bibijan (12). The lady was an ordinary creditor, and as such she was entitled to interest ; Chaudhri Wasi Ahmad v. Maina Bibi (13).

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, in reply :—

The object of dower was to prevent capricious divorce—we must apply to it the ordinary incidents of Muhammadan Law. Musammat Bebee Bachun v. Sheikh Hamid Hossein (14). If the lady held trees in dower she could not take the fruits of it except in reduction of the amount of dower. Marriage always involved dower. When none was fixed, the minimum amount, 10 dirhams, allowed by the Muhammadan Law, was supposed to have been settled. In the case in 9 W. R., the marriage had taken place in 1835 ; the wife was in possession and was alleged to be so under certain documents ; the suit was on the basis of the deeds being forgeries. So interest was allowed as she was held to be a trespasser. It is no authority for the proposition that a dower debt carries interest with it. The dower was already very excessive.

[185] KARAMAT HUSAIN, J.—The property in suit belonged to one Inayat-ul-lah, who died on the 10th of March, 1892. Zubaida Bibi is his widow. Her dower as found by this Court (see 43, Appellant's Evidence) was one lakh of rupees, and she was put into possession of the estate by her husband in lieu of her dower.

The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the plaintiff appellant for the recovery of her share (1 anna $\frac{2}{5}$ pies out of 16 annas) in the estate in the possession of Zubaida Bibi on the allegation that Zubaida Bibi had been in possession of the said estate for more than 14 (fourteen) years ; that her dower debt of one lakh of rupees had been satisfied out of its usufruct; that she had realized a sum of Rs. 12,240-12-5 over and above her dower; and that the plaintiff was entitled to Rs. 918-2-0 out of the excess. The plaintiff expressed her willingness to pay a share of the dower debt proportionate to her share in the estate, in case it was found that the dower debt was still due to Zubaida Bibi.

The pleas raised in defence by Zubaida Bibi, which we have to consider in the appeal, were that she was entitled to interest at the rate of Rs. 0-8-0 per cent. per mensem on the entire dower debt amounting to one lakh of rupees and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover her share of the estate by paying off a proportionate share of the dower debt, but that she must pay the entire dower debt.

The court below came to the conclusion that Zubaida Bibi was entitled to interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum on the whole dower debt, and that the plaintiff could not recover her share in the estate without paying it. On the above findings the court below dismissed the plaintiff's suit. That court in its judgement, dated the 15th of September, 1906, observed :—

"As the plaintiffs do not offer in terms to pay the whole dower debt due to defendant No. 1 (Zubaida Bibi) and they are not likely to pay a lakh of rupees to recover 4 annas of Inayat-ul-lah's property, I think the proper order to pass in the case would be to dismiss the suit."

Musammat Hamira Bibi appealed to this Court, and a Bench of this Court, in view of the conflict of the authorities in this Court upon the right of the widow of a Muhammadan to recover her dower together with interest, referred the case to the learned [186] Chief Justice in order that he might appoint a larger Bench. The case by the order of the learned Chief Justice came on for hearing before a Bench of three Judges.

Two points only were argued before us. The first is that a Muhammadan widow in the absence of a contract to the contrary has no right to claim interest on her dower. The second is that an heir of her husband may recover his share in the estate by paying a share of the dower proportionate to the share claimed.

In support of the first point, it is urged that the parties to the case are Hanafi Muhammadans; that the question whether the dower due to a Hanafi widow is or is not to carry interest is a question regarding marriage; that therefore under section 37 (1) of the Bengal, North-Western Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887 (Act No. XII of 1887) the rule of the Hanafi School of the Muhammadan law must be the rule of decision, and that as soon as it is established that this case is to be governed by the Hanafi School of the Muhammadan Law, Zubaida Bibi cannot claim interest on her dower, for usury is strictly prohibited in Islam (1).

This argument has no force. The law of Islam as interpreted by the Hanafi Doctors, no doubt, strictly prohibits receiving interest as well as paying it, but the provisions of section 37 (1) of the Bengal North-Western Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, have no application. The question whether a dower debt is or is not to carry interest can by no stretch of language be deemed to be a question regarding marriage.

(1) Those who devour usury shall not rise again save as he riseth whom Satan hath paralysed with a touch; and that is because they say selling is only like usury, but God has made selling lawful and usury unlawful, and he to whom the admonition from his Lord has come, if he desists, what has gone before is his (*); his matter is in God's hands. [187] Another argument of the learned advocate for the appellant is that under section 37 (2) of the Bengal, North-Western Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, this Court acting according to justice, equity and good conscience should apply the Hanafi Law to the case just as it, acting according to justice, equity and good conscience, applies the Muhammadan Law of pre-emption and of gift to Muhammadans, and should hold that a dower debt due to a Hanafi wife carries no interest. This argument is also unsound and is based on a wrong notion as to the nature of dower debt and as to the scope of section 37 (2) of the Act. In Abdul Karim v. Maqbul-un-nissa (1) the learned Chief Justice quotes (at p. 318) the following passage from Mr. Ameer Ali (now the Right Hon'ble Syed Ameer Ali) with approval:—

"Dower is a debt, like all other liabilities of the husband, and has preference over legacies bequeathed by the testator and the right of the heirs. A partition of estate cannot take place until the dower debt has been satisfied when the wife is alive she can recover the debt herself from the estate of her husband. If she be dead her representatives stand in her place and are entitled to recover the same;" and goes on to say:—"Dower in fact, whether it be prompt or deferred, is a debt due from the husband to the wife."

In first appeal No. 65 of 1904 decided on the 3rd of July, 1906, it has also been expressly laid down that dower is a debt. Dower therefore cannot come within the purview of section 37 (2), which applies to such cases as are not provided for section 37 (1) or by any other law in force in British India; but the question whether a debt is or is not to carry interest is not a question which is not provided for the Municipal Law of British India.

The fact that dower debt owes its origin to a peculiarity of the Muhammadan Law of marriage and is not the result of advancing money, can be no reason to divest it of the characteristics of a debt and to put upon it the limitations imposed by the Hanafi School of the Muhammadan Law on usury.

Supposing that the case were to be governed by the dictates of justice, equity and good conscience, I would be the last person to deprive a Muhammadan widow of interest on her dower. [188] Taking into account the helpless condition of a Muhammadan wife and the fact that when she is put into possession of the immovable property of her husband in lieu of her dower that is more to the advantage of the husband and other members of the family than to the advantage of the wife, I deem it highly unjust and inequitable that a Muhammadan widow in possession of the immovable property of her husband should be liable to account for the profits arising out of the property and should not be entitled to a reasonable rate of interest on her dower. The suggestion that the motive which made the the law-giver of Islam sanction exorbitant dowers is not a pecuniary gain to a wife but simply a check upon the capricious exercise of the unfettered power of divorce which her husband has, and that therefore the argument that it is inequitable to allow interest upon dower has no force. There is nothing, in the first place, to show that the motive for sanctioning large amounts of dower is to check the unlimited power of a husband to divorce according to the Hanafis; it is a mark of the personal qualification and the social status of the wife and is spoken of in the Hidaya, p. 44, as a token of respect for its object (the woman).

In the second place, in dealing with the legal incidents of a dower debt one has to look to its nature from the stand point of jurisprudence and not to the motives of the law-giver which brought it into being.

In the third place, there is no connection between the fact that a large dower is a check upon divorce and the fact that dower should carry no interest.

In the fourth place, if the object of sanctioning large dowers be a check upon divorce, the rule that dower should carry interest would put an additional check and would further the end in view. Granting that dower is a debt, it follows that the legal incidents of it after it has come into existence are to be governed by the Municipal Law of British India and not by the Hanafi Law which prohibits usury. It is, however, urged that to some of the legal incidents of dower after its creation the Hanafi Law has been applied and that therfore it should be extended to the remaining legal incidents of it. As instances of [189] the application of the Hanafi law, the following cases are put forward :—

The rule that a Muhammadan widow who obtains possession of the immovable property of her husband without force or fraud can retain it until her dower is paid [see Musummat Bibi Bachun v. Sheikh Hamid Hossein (1), and the cases which follow it]. The rule that a Muhammadan widow is entitled to the whole of the dower which her husband on marriage agreed to give her irrespective of his pecuniary means [Sugra Bibi v. Masuma Bibi (2)]. The rule that where the marriage contract is silent as to whether the payment of the dower is to be prompt or deferred, the whole or a portion of it is presumed to be prompt. (See Wilson's Anglo-Mahomedan Law, p. 121, 3rd Edition.)

The above instances in my opinion are exceptions to the general rule and do not establish the proposition that all the legal incidents of dower, after it has become due, are to be governed by the Hanafi Law. I may observe, in passing, that the right of a Muhammadan widow to hold the property of her husband until her dower is paid is a rule of the Hanafi Law of debt and not the law of dower. The rule that a husband is bound to pay the dower he agreed to pay, no matter how excessive it be, is hardly an incident of dower debt.

The rule that in cases in which the marriage contract is silent on the point, the whole or a portion of the dower is presumed to be prompt is according to the original authorities regulated by the local custom and cannot strictly speaking be deemed to be an incident of dower debt.

Coming to the case law on the point, I find that the preponderance of authority is in favour of the rule that interest is chargeable on dower. The first case is that of Soorma Khatoon v. Attaff-un-nissa Khatoon (3). The suit was for dower and an objection as to the awarding of interest was taken. The learned Judges who decided the case observed : —" Now with regard to the objection regarding interest, this being a case simply for recovery of debt, the principles of Mahomedan Law have no bearing upon it." [190] The second case is Woomatool Fatima Begum v. Meer-un-nissa Khanum (1). In this case it was contended that the widow in possession of the estate of her husband was liable to account for the profits of the land; while on behalf of the widow it was urged that she was entitled to interest on her dower, PEACOCK, C. J., observed :—

"The plaintiff does not ask to receive interest upon her dower, but she asks that she may not be compelled to account for the profits of the land during the time that she held it in lieu of her dower.

"If she had had a lakh of rupees paid to her when she first entered into possession of the land in 1845, she would not have been bound according to the tenets of the Mahomedan religion, to keep it in a box and take out of the box from time to time as much as she had occasion to spend, but she would have been allowed to invest her money in the purchase of land and to have lived upon the rents of her estate, even if she was prevented by her religion from lending her money at interest. If she would have been prevented from purchasing Government securties and receiving interest from Government instead of receving it from an individual, there were many other modes in such she might have invested the money if she had received her dower. It would have been a poor investment in this country if this lady could not have realised from her money at least 5 per cent. An investment which would have given her 5 per cent. for her capital would have yielded Rs. 5,000 a year; whereas taking the profits of the whole estate as six times the amount of the wasilat assessed upon the ⅙th of it, she received only Rs. 4,692 a year. If therefore she is to account for the profits of the land during the whole time that she held it in lieu of her dower, she will in fact, have received nothing instead of receiving the Rs. 5,000 a year, which she would have received from the investment of her money, if paid to her on her husband's death."

The third case is that of Bakreedun v. Ammatul Fatima (2). In this case it was contended that the widow was entitled to interest upon her dower and the learned Judges observed :—

"In the next place, J] is contended that the widow is entitled to charge interest upon her dower. The Subordinate Judge has disallowed into est, because it is forbidden by the Prophet. The question was discussed in the case of Mia Khan v. Bibijan, and it was held that for a considerable period of time past, the prohibition of Koran and of the Hedayah against the taking of interest has not been treated by the executive and by the persons charged with the administration of justice in this part of India as forming part of the active Municipal Law of the country, as moral precept it will no doubt always be influential with those who acknowledge its authority, but as a part of Municipal Law, if it ever had existence as such, it has long been obsolete. We are not aware of any case in this Court which has tended to shake the authority of that decision."

[191] The interest was, however, disallowed on the ground that it could not have been in the contemplation of the parties that interest would be chargeable on such excessive dower, (Rs. 41,003 and one gold Mohar).

The fourth case is that of Mia Khan v. Bibi Bibijan (3). This case is not an authority for the particular proposition that a widow is entitled to charge interest upon her dower, but it is an authority for the broader proposition that the Courts in British India do not refuse to decree interest to a Muhammadan on the ground that he is disentitled by Muhammadan Law to recover it. The rule laid down certainly covers the case of a widow if she claims interest upon her dower. As the passage bearing on this point is instructive and shows the attitude of the Courts in British India towards awarding interest to Muhammadan suitors, I quote it in extenso : —" The learned First Judge appears to be of opinion that, if the Act of 1855 be put upon one side, the law which the Civil Courts of this country are bound to administer between Muhammadan suitors " does not allow a Muhammadan to charge another Muhammadan any interest whatever." It seems to me that this view is erroneous. No doubt, the passage in the Hidaya to which the learned First Judge refers, and other passages in the Koran do, as they are commonly understood, forbid the taking of interest and certainly as far as I have the means of judging, I should suppose that a very considerable number of religiously inclined persons of the Muhammadan faith consider themselves bound to observe these precepts, and conscientiously keep themselves out of all transactions which appear to infringe them. But on the other hand, it is notorious that there are in India Muhammadan dealers in money, and traders of unquestionable respectability, and that it has been the practice among this class for a very long period to take interest even from their co-religionists in the way of their business. Mr. Harrington in his Analysis 1st Vol., page 182, after remarking that the Muhammadan Law forbids the taking of interest for the use of money upon loans from one Mussalman to another, and that the Hindu Law permits interest to be taken at prescribed rates only, goes on to say: "The Hindu legislators [192] have expressly sanctioned, and the Mussalman Government of India appear to have tolerated directly or indirectly, the customary interest of the country which, in the plan for the administration of justice proposed by the Committee of Circuit in 1772, is stated to have amounted to the most exorbitant usury. I cannot learn that our courts have, in any case which is of authority, refused to decree interest to a Muhammadan on the ground that he was disentitled by Muhammadan Law to recover it. On the whole it seems to me that, for a considerable period of time past, the prohibition of the Koran and the Hidaya against the taking of interest has not been treated by the executive and by the persons charged with the administration of justice in this part of India, as forming part of the active Municipal Law of the country. As a moral precept it will, no doubt, always be influential with those who acknowledge its authority, but I think that, as a part of the Municipal Law, if it ever had existence as such, it has long been obsolete."

The fifth case is an unreported ruling of this Court in Chaudhri Wasi Ahmad v. Musammat Maina Bibi (1) and is a direct authority for the proposition that interest is chargeable on a dower debt. The learned Chief Justice in his judgment observed:—

"It has been argued, and very strenuously argued, by Mr. Rahmat-ullah that according to the Muhammadan Law interest is not chargeable in respect of dower. We have been referred to a number of authorities but none of them bear out this proposition. On the contrary, it appears to be well setted law that dower is a debt ranking at least equally with other debts. That it is a debt there can be no doubt. Whether or not Musammat Maina Bibi was bound to account for the rents and profits during the time she was in possession is perhaps a question open to some doubt; but it appears to us to be clear that having been charged with the rents and profits she certainly is entitled to reasonable interest in respect of so much of her dower debt as remained undischarged by the rents and profits."

The above are the authorities in favour of the proposition that interest is chargeable on dower debt. There are two unreported rulings of this Court which are against it. The first is F. A. No. 204 of 1895, decided on the 23rd of July 1897. The learned judges who decided that case observed:—"The appellant put forth a claim to interest upon her dower. Such a claim we never [193] heard raised before. No authority, it was admitted, could be produced in support of it. We overrule it."

The second is F. A. No. 3 of 1881, decided on the 1st of January

1882. The learned Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur in his judgment dated the 24th of September, 1880, in the case of Sheikh Mujibullah v. Ummed Bibi (No. 42 of 1880) said: — 'Under the Muhammadan Law the defendant is not entitled to get interest on the amount of dower" and the learned judges of this Court on appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur in the case already mentioned observed :—' In the case of Sheikh Mujib-ullah respondent, we find no force in the pleas impugning the principle on which account has been prepared in respect of allowance on account of commission and of interest. The appellant's pretensions in these respects are untenable.' "

In Musammat Zamani Begam v. Syed Mansur Shah (1) the question of dower debt was involved but no interest on it was claimed.

Considering the facts that dower is a debt ; that as a debt it is to be governed by the Municipal Law of British India and not by the Hanafi Law ; that it would be extremely inequitable to make a Muhammadan widow in possession of her husband's property in lieu of her dower liable to account for the profits of the property without giving her a right to claim interest upon her dower, and the rulings which are in favour of interest, I would without the least hesitation hold that a Muhammadan widow in possession of her husband's estate in lieu of her dower could claim interest on it, and that the Courts in British India should not refuse to grant her a decree for it on the ground that the Muhammadan law prohibits usury. As regards the plea that the plaintiff is entitled to recover her share of the estate of Inayat-ullah on payment of the part of the dower proportionate to the share in the estate would ordinarily be not a valid plea.

In the particular circumstances of this case we think it would be inequitable to direct the plaintiff to pay the full amount of the dower as the share which the defendant Musammat Zubaida Bibi inherited from her husband and which is in her possession is also liable for her dower. Further we have before us two [194] sets of heirs claiming their respective shares in the estate. Both sets of plaintiffs cannot be directed to pay the whole amount of dower, as that would have the effect of awarding to Zubaida Bibi double the amount of her dower. The liability of the heirs of the husband for the dower is not personal and the dower is recoverable from the assets left by the husband. It would therefore be inequitable to direct each set of plaintiffs to pay to the defendant more than a share of dower proportionate to their share in the estate. Besides the two sets of plaintiffs and the defendant Zubaida Bibi, there are no other claimants of the estate. It seems therefore reasonable to direct the plaintiff in this case to pay her share of the dower in order to enable her to recover her share of the inheritance. Similarly the plaintiffs in the other case will have to pay their share of the dower to get their share of the inheritance. If the plaintiff were ordered to pay the whole dower and to get the whole estate, other heirs of Inayat-ullah including Zubaida would have to sue her for their shares and this would lead to multiplicity of actions. This is undesirable. The plaintiff should therefore get a decree for her share in the property which has been found to belong to Inayat-ullah on condition that she do pay her share of the dower of one lakh of rupees found to be due to Zubaida Bibi.

STANLEY, C. J.—I am also of opinion that the main question raised in this appeal, namely, whether Musammat Zubaida Bibi, who was put into possession by her husband of his estate in lieu of her dower debt, is entitled, when called upon by her husband's heirs other than herself, to account for the rents and profits received by her during the time of her possession, to claim interest at a reasonable rate upon her dower debt, must be answered in the affirmative. The plaintiff is one of the heirs of Inayat-ullah, the deceased husband of Zubaida Bibi, and she claims her share of the estate discharged of Zubaida Bibi's dower on the allegation that the dower debt has been satisfied out of the rents and profits. In the judgment which has just been delivered, my brother KARAMAT HUSAIN has dealt with the question at length and has quoted the authorities bearing on the subject. The weight of authority appears to me entirely [195] to support the view which he has taken, and I see no reason to disagree with him in the conclusion at which he has arrived.

As regards the form of the decree, it appears to me that the rights of the parties can be adjusted in two ways, either by a sale of the property and payment out of the proceeds of the sale of the dower debt, and by a division of the balance between the heirs according to their rights therein, or if the parties desire to retain the estate unsold, there being apparently no other debts of Inayat-ullah, to give their shares in the estate to Zubaida Bibi, Hamira Bibi and Amina Bibi and others, Hamira Bibi, and Amina Bibi and others first paying to Zubaida Bibi the rateable proportion of the dower debt proportionate to their shares respectively in the estate of Inayat-ullah. In the circumstances of the present case the last mentioned course appears to me to be equitable.

BANERJI, J.—I do not express any opinion on many of the various points discussed by my brother KARAMAT HUSAIN in the elaborate judgment just now delivered by him. The question whether interest can be allowed on the dower due to the widow of a deceased Muhammadan is not free from difficulty, but the weight of authority is in favour of the view that if the widow has been placed in possession of her husband's estate in lieu of her dower the Court has the discretion to award to her interest at a reasonable rate, and I am not prepared to dissent from this view. I agree in the order proposed.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and make a decree in favour of the plaintiff for possession of the share claimed by her save and except the property mentioned in list I annexed to the written statement of the defendant Zubaida Bibi conditional upon payment by her of Rs. 12,500 within six months from this date to Musammat Zubaida Bibi on account of her dower. If such payment be not made within the time mentioned above, her suit will stand dismissed with costs. In the event of her paying the said amount the parties will bear their own costs in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Before Sir John Stanley, Knight, Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Sir George Knox and Mr. Justice Chamier.

RETURAJI LUBAIN (Plaintiff) v. PAHLWAN BHAGAT and others (Defendants).*

Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-arz—Custom or contract—Construction of document—Regulation VII of 1822.

In a suit for pre-emption, wajib-ul-arzes of 1839 and of 1869, were produced. The preamble to the former was worded thus :—"Having well understood the following matters we willingly accept them" It then dealt with the right of pre-emption in the following terms :—"Mode of sale or transfer of whole or part of share," giving the right of pre-emption to co-sharers as against strangers and concluded with the words :—"therefore we write this iqrarnama so that it may be of use in future." The wajib-ul-arz of 1869, provided that "near co-sharers and other pattidars would have the right of pre-emption. Preference amongst them would be according to degrees of nearness" :—

Held (STANLEY, C. J., dissenting), the wajib-ul-arzes contained the record of custom and not of contract.

Per STANLEY, C. J. :—A custom to be binding must be unaltered, uniform, constant and definite. If the settlement of 1833 recorded a custom, then the co-sharers in the village at the time of the later settlement of 1869 must be deemed to have abrogated it and to have adopted by agreement the right of pre-emption which is recorded in the later wajib-ul-arz as more suitable to the then existing conditions. The variance in the rights as defined in two wajib ul-arzes leads to the conclusion that the right recorded in 1869, cannot be treated as a right existing by custom.

Per KNOX and CHAMIER, JJ.:—The word iqrar does not necessarily mean a contract. It means "ratification" or "assent"

The plaintiff appellant and one Babu Janki Prasad Singh, the vendor, were co-sharers in a village. The vendor sold a 5-anna 4 pie share to defendants 1 to 5 on 19th April 1907. The plaintiff brought this suit for pre-emption. She based her claim on a wajib-ul-arz of 1869, prepared at the settlement of 1859—69, and evidencing a custom of pre-emption in the village. The defendant vendees produced a wajib-ul-arz prepared at the settlement of 1834—42. The preamble to that wajib-ul-arz was as follows :—"We write this wajib-ul-arz in favour of the Government and having understood the following matters we willingly accept them." The heading of the clause relating to pre-emption [197] purported to deal with "the mode of sale and transfer of the whole or part of the shares of the shareholders." The clause itself provided that "whosoever from amongst ourselves wishes to transfer the whole or part of his share by sale or mortgage then it is incumbent on him that he should give information to the co-sharers of the village and sell or mortgage to him at the price settled. If any one without giving information to the shareholders of the village transfers his share to a stranger then it will be invalid." The last line of the wajib-ul-arz says:—"Therefore we write this iqrarnama so that it may be of use in case of need." The section relating to pre-emption in the wajib-ul-arz of 1869, was headed thus :—" Pre-emption and transfer by gift and the disposal of property, &c." The clause lays down that " in case of extreme necessity every co-sharer has the right to transfer his share recorded in the khewat. Near co-sharers and other pattidars will have the right of pre-emption. Preference amongst them will be according to degrees of nearness." The Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur dimissed the suit on the grounds, (1) that certain words used in the preamble of the wajib-ul-arz of 1833, showed that it was a record of contract and not of custom; (2) that the variations in the terms of the two wajib-ul-arzes showed that that of 1869 was a record of contract. The District Judge agreed with the view of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the appeal. The plaintiff appealed.

Munshi Iswar Saran, for the appellant: —

The wajib-ul-arz of 1869 was a record of custom. The one for 1833 was modelled on lines laid down by the Board of Revenue with reference to section 9 of Regulation VII of 1822. The only interpretation was that the share holders agreed to what was put down there as well as to the customs obtaining at the time. The Circular Orders of the Board of Revenue for 1868 direct Settlement Officers to record only customs and usages in the wajib-ul-arzes. In the record of 1833 only a skeleton form was given, a detailed account was found in the wajib-ul-arz of 1869. Besides, a custom could have grown up between 1833 and 1869. It was not necessary that it should be immemorial, it had only to be notorious. He referred to Baldeo Sahai [198] v. Nagai Ahir (1), Kuar Sen v. Mamman (2), Hub Lal Tewari v. Ganga Sahu (3), Bahal Rai v. Sukhdeo (4), Majidan Bibi v. Hayatan (5), Daryao Singh v. Jahan Singh (6), Parbhu v. Thakur (7), Gokal Dichhit v. Maheshri Dichhit (8), Lekhraj Bharti v. Anrudh Tiwari (9).

Babu Sital Prasad Ghosh, for the respondents :—

Thomason's Directions to Settlement Officers, (1858) p. 106, mentioned the "agreement of the country regarding pre-emption of shares" to be recorded by officers. Section 9 of Regulation VII of 1822, did not prohibit the recording of agreements.

He referred to Anant Singh v. Durga Singh, (10) Ram Prasad v. Mahadeo (11), Dharam Rai v. Tahal Rai (12), Baldei v. Wazir (13), and Muhammad v. Ilahi (14).

Munshi Iswar Saran, in reply:—

The wajib-ul-arz of 1869 must have been prepared according to the Circular Orders of 1869, and could only be a record of custom. The burden of proving it to be a record of contract rested on the other side.

STANLEY, C. J.: - The question raised in this appeal lies in a narrow compass. The appeal arose out of a suit for pre-emption, and the sole question is whether or not the record of the right of pre-emption contained in a wajib-ul-arz of the village of Deoria in the district of Gorakhpur, prepared at the Settlement of 1869, is a record of a right existing by custom or by contract. The plaintiff relies upon this wajib-ul-arz as establishing her claim, while the defendants rely also upon an earlier wajib-ul-arz of 183 and contend that reading the two wajib-ul-arzes together, the right must be regarded as one arising out of contract. This is the view which was taken by the two lower Courts. In consequence of a recent decision of [199] a Bench of this Court which is in conflict with earlier decisions, this appeal has been laid before a Full Bench.

The heading to the paragraph in the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 which deals with pre-emption is—" Mode of sale or transfer of whole or part of shares." The words " custom of pre-emption " are not used. The paragraph runs as follows :—

" If any of us wishes to transfer the whole or a part of his share by sale or mortgage, he should inform the co-sharers of the village and should mortgage or sell the same to him (sic) at a fixed price. If any one sells his share to a stranger without information to the co-sharers of the village the said transfer shall be invalid."

In the wajib-ul-arz of 1869 the right which is recorded is different. Paragraph 14 of that wajib-ul-arz in which the right of pre-emption is stated runs as follows :—" In case of extreme or urgent necessity every co-sharer has a right to transfer his share recorded in the khewat. Near co-sharers and other pattidars will have the right of pre-emption, preference amongst them will be according to degrees of nearness." The heading to the palagraph is " Pre-emption and transfer."

On behalf of the defendants respondents the contention is that the right recorded in this later wajib-ul-arz is at variance with the right previously existing ; and this being so, the right recorded in it must be deemed to be a right arising from the contract of the parties and as such came to an end at the termination of the settlement. On the part of the plaintiff it is contended that between the years 1833 and 1869 a custom of pre-emption may have slowly and gradually sprung into existence at variance with the right recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 and that this custom is the custom which is recorded in the later wajib-ul-arz In the course of the argument a suggestion was thrown out that the record contained in the wajib-ul arz of 1833 was only a skeleton form which omitted to give the details of the custom and that the details were supplied by the wajib-ul-arz of 1869.

As regards the first of these arguments, it appears to me that whatever the right was which is recorded in the earlier wajib-ul-arz that right must be deemed to be the right which continued to prevail during the existence of this settlement of 1833. There is no evidence before us to justify us in holding that any right of pre-emption grew into existence during this [200] period other than the one which is recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of 1833.

Then I come to what I may describe as the skeleton theory. It appears to me that the right recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 is very far from being a mere skeleton. It is definite, reasonable and complete; such a right as a co-parcenary body might naturally accept as ample protection against the incursion of stangers into the village. In the year 1833 there were only four co-sharers in the village and the object of pre-emption being to keep out stangers, this object would be attained by a provision that any share holder wishing to transfer his share should offer it first to his co-sharers before he offered it for sale to a stranger ; that there should be grades of pre-emptors where there are only four sharers, that is three entitled to pre-empt, appears to me to approach the absurd. The right recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of 1869 is a modification of the right previously recorded. According to it a share-holder wishing to sell his share must offer it first to near co-sharers, then to other co-sharers, before he could sell to a stranger. A custom to be binding must be unaltered uniform, constant and definite. If the settlement of 1833 recorded a custom, then it appears to me that the co-sharers in the village at the time of the later settlement of 1879 must be deemed to have abrogated it and to have adopted by agreement the right of pre-emption which is recorded in the later wajib-ul-arz as more suitable to the then existing conditions of the village. There are ten signatories to the wajib-ul-arz of 1869 and in the preamble to the wajib-ul-arz is the statement on their part:—"We write out the following conditions and shall act up to them." It seems to me highly probable that at the time of the settlements the co-sharers agreed among themselves as to the nature of the right of pre-emption which they desired to have recorded and communicated their wishes to the settlement Officer or some subordinate official charged with the duty of collecting information for the preparation of the settlement and consequently we have different rights recorded in the two settlements. The variance in the rights as defined in the two wajib-ul-arzes leads me to the conclusion that the right recorded in 1869 cannot be treated as a right existing [201] by custom. This view is consonant with a number of unreported decisions of this Court It was urged in the course of the arguments that only rights existing by custom are recorded in wajib-ul-arzes, but this does not appear to me to have been the case. It is common experience that agreements of the co-parcenary body as well as customs are constantly recorded in wajib-ul-arzes. We should be closing our eyes to realities if we failed to recognise this. We find that in Thomason's Directions to Settlement Officers of the year 1858, Settlement Officers were enjoined to record "an agreement of the community as regards the pre-emption of shares." As to this Regulation VII of 1822 may also be relied on (see section 9).

Many cases have come before the Courts in which the sole question was whether the record of a right of pre-emption in a wajib-ul-arz was a record of a custom or a contract. This question occupied the full Bench which determined the case of Ishri Singh v. Ganga (1) and also the attention of a Full Bench in Dalganjan Singh v. Ka ka Singh (2).

In addition to the wajib-ul-arz of 1869 the plaintiff relied upon a decree in a pre-emption suit. No reliance was placed upon this decree in the arguments before us. It was passed in January, 1888. If at this date the settlement of 1869 was in existence, this decree would be a colourless piece of evidence as during the settlement of 1869 a right of pre-emption did exist either by contract or by custom.

I would dismiss the appeal.

KNOX, J.—Musammat Returaji Dubain instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Gorakhpur, in which she sought to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of a 5-anna 4 pie share in mahal Deoria, pargana Salempur, which a certain Janki Prasad Singh, share-holder in the same mahal, sold on the 19th of April, 1907, to Pahalwan Bhagat and certain other Bhagats, residents of mahal Bairona, hereinafter styled in this judgement as "the Bhagats." She arrayed as defendants the Bhagats vendees and Babu Janki Prasad Singh the vendor. She based her right upon a custom of pre-emption which is described in the plaint as having of old been current in mahal Deoria. [202] This custom, she describes in the plaint thus : —" When a share is to be transferred, the co-sharers in the mahal have a preferential right to purchse it as against strangers."

It is common ground to both parties that the plaintiff is a share-holder in mahal Deoria, and that the defendants Bhagats are strangers. In support of her claim she filed and proved : —

(1) A copy of a decree in case No. 302 of 1887, decided on the 25th of January, 1888, by the Munsif of Deoria.

(2) A copy of an extract from a wajib-ul-arz of 1869.

" The Bhagats" defended the suit. No defence appears to have been filed by Babu Janki Prasad Singh. In the written statement filed by " the Bhagats " they set out that the custom of pre-emption is not current in the village. They raised certain other pleas, but we are not concerned with those in this appeal. In support of their written statement " the Bhagats " filed one solitary document, a copy of an extract of the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 prepared under Regulation VII of 1822, and bearing date 29th June, 1839. When filing it, they stated that they filed it to show that the wajib-ul arz of 1839 was in the form of a contract. (See paper No. 20, file C.)*

The learned Subordinate Judge framed no less than five issues, but he disposed of the case upon the first of the five issues and held that the custom of pre-emption did not exist in the village. The reason for this finding is thus given : —" The language used in the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 clearly showed that the right of pre-emption recorded in it was founded on contract and not on custom." He arrives at this finding because —

(1) The right recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 must have continued for the term of the settlement and consequently the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1869 could not be regarded as a record of custom. In support of this view he cites an unreported ruling of this Court — Babu Jhinku Singh v. Chutkaro (1).

(2) The language of the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 differs from the lanuauge used in the wajib-ul-arz of 1869. [See Ram Nandan v. Ram Narain (2)]. He dismissed the decree that had been [203] filed with the remark that this solitary instance was not sufficient to establish the alleged custom.

The District Judge before whom the plaintiff carried her case in appeal, agreed with the Subordinate Judge that the language used in the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 was the language of a contract. He allows that if the wajib-ul arz of 1869 stood alone, it would be construed as a record of custom, but for two reasons he holds that it cannot be anything but a contract ; and the two reasons for his holding this view are the same reasons which are given by the learned Subordinate Judge.

The plaintiff then brought her appeal to this Court. In consequence of the decision of this Court in Hub Lal Tewari v. Ganga Sahu (3) the appeal has been placed before a Bench of three Judges, and the question which we have to consider is whether the plaintiff has or has not proved the existence of a custom of pre-emption in mahal Deoria, pargana Salempur. The question raised is a question of no small importance, and, so far as I am concerned, I feel that it cannot be dismissed by simple reference to the fact that the language contained in one wajib-ul-arz differs from the language contained in another wajib-ul-arz appertaining to the same mahal.

In the present case neither of the Courts below have really looked into the merits of the case put before them. They have decided the question as to whether the custom of pre-emption does or does not exist in mahal Deoria, (1) upon the strength of certain words contained in the wajib-ul-arz of 1833, which, it appears to me, they have misunderstood, and (2) by applying, as though it had the force of a touchstone, the question: "Is the language contained in the two wajib-ul-arzes alike or different?" The learned District Judge appears to have had some searchings of heart about the matter in his mind, for he writes that had the wajib-ul-arz of 1869 stood alone, he would have construed it as evidence of custom.

I propose first to deal with the criticism addressed by the Courts below to the language of the wajib-ul-arz of 1833.

In the first place the learned Subordinate Judge, although he appears to quote the ipsissima verba of the wajib-ul-arz, does not [204] reproduce them accurately. The opening words of the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 run as follows:—

We, Ajudhia Dube, Beni Madho Dube, Lal Behari Dube, and Kura Mal Dube, birt-holders of mauza Deoria, tappa Bairona, pargana Salempur, Majhauli, do declare as follows:—

"The aforesaid village, which is our ancestral "birt" has been settled with us, as such, under Regulation IX of 1833, and the regulations (muratiba) relating to the settlement have been settled. Therefore, we execute this wajib-ul-arz (village administration paper) before the sarkar and having fully understood it, accept the following regulations as binding upon us."

The concluding words are:—" For this reason we have written this iqrarnama (deed of ratification) that it may be of use at the proper time." There is nothing in the preamble which corresponds to the words used by the learned Subordinate Judge " agreed to be bound by them," and I altogether differ from him in the translation which he gives to the word iqrarnama. It appears to me to have been too easily taken for granted in some cases that the word iqrar contains in it of necessity any idea of contracting, and that an iqrarnama of necessity contains any idea of a deed recording a contract. I have consulted various dictionaries, the well-known Qamus of Freytag, Richardson's Dictionary and others, and in none of them is the meaning "agreement" given as one of the first meanings of the word iqrar. My view of the word iqrar, and I claim it is amply borne out by those authorities, who are entitled to great weight, is that it stands for "ratification," "profession." A very common use of the word in our Courts is where it stands in the oath addressed to a witness and again in the confession made by an accused person of some wrong done by him. The witness does not contract with Almighty God but he professes before Almighty God that he intends to tell the truth, etc. The accused person does not contract with anyone, but he ratifies, professes, or acknowledges that he has done something. In this connection it is interesting to note that in the translation authorized by Government of the Contract Act of 1872, the word contract is never connoted by the word (iqrar); this word is not to be found in any part of the Act. If we get rid of this mistaken idea of the meaning of the word iqrar and read the [205] extract of the wajib-ul-arz of 1869 naturally, it runs, so far as the question of pre-emption is concerned, thus :—

10. "Method of sale and transfer of the whole or part of a share of shareholders.—Whoever amongst us wishes to transfer by means of sale or mortgage the whole or a portion of his share, it is incumbent (lazim) on him that he give notice to his co-sharers in the village and sell or mortage to him (sic) at the price fixed and if any one without notice to the co-sharers of the village transfer his share to a stranger the transaction will not be lawful," and the ratifying clause ends thus :—

"Therefore we have written this ratification in order that it may be useful when the time comes."

I have consulted the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 in the original and I see nothing whatever in the language of it from first to last to justify the inference that it is a record of contract. As there is nothing in the language of the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 from which we must necessarily infer that it is a record of contract it is well to look at the case as it stands between the parties. The plaintiff comes into Court upon a custom, the existence of which she claims to prove by an extract from the wajib-ul-arz of 1869, and by a decree recognising that in the year 1888, according to the fact stated in the wajib-ul-arz for 1869 the custom did exist in mahal Deoria. There is nothing in the language of the wajib-ul-arz of 1869 which would militate against the idea that it records a contract, and it is corroborated by the decree. Against this evidence, which would be sufficient to establish the custom if it stood alone, cf, Majidan Bibi v. Sheikh Hyatan (1), the Bhagats put forward an extract from the wajib-ul-arz of 1833. Is this extract any longer of any value as evidence to contradict and rebut the evidence contained in the wajib-ul-arz of 1869? In answer to this I hold, first, that there is nothing in the language of the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 which points to the right therein recorded being a right based upon contract. It follows therefore, that the first of the reasons given by the Courts below for their finding falls to the ground.

The second reason given by them opens up a more difficult question and requires some consideration both of the origin of [206] the customs of pre-emption in Hindu villages (mahal Deoria is a village of which all the co-sharers have been for a long time past and are still Hindus) and of the sanction which the law confers upon records relating to pre-emption contained in a wajib-ul-arz prepared under the authority contained in Regulation VII of 1822.

From the copies of the wajib-ul-arz filed in this case and from copies of the wajib-ul-arzes which have been before this Court there is prima facie evidence that a usage or custom did prevail in some of the villages of pargana Salempur, whereby a co-sharer intending to effect a transfer had to give notice of the intended transfer to his co-sharers and to sell to them in preference to a stranger at the price fixed upon for transfer.

In 1822 the Government in Regulation VII of 1822 expressed it as their wish and intention that in revising the existing settlement of Gorakhpur, the efforts of the revenue officers should chiefly be directed to any general and extensive enhancement of the juma, but to the object of equalizing the public burdens and of ascertaining, settling and recording the rights, interests, privileges and properties of all persons and classes owning, occupying, managing or cultivating the land, &c. They desired also that the proceedings held and the records formed by the Collectors, when making settlement or otherwise specially employed in conducting inquiries of the above nature, should be such as that all demands, claims and suits may be adjudged and determined according to the facts therein stated until the same shall have been formally altered or it shall be shown by the result of a full investigation in a regular suit that the proceeding or record of the Collector was erroneous or incomplete. In order to carry out their wish and desire they enacted (section 9) that it shall be the duty of Collectors and other officers exercising the powers of Collectors ' on the occasion of making or revising settlements of the land revenue, to unite with the adjustment of the assessment and the investigation of the extent and produce of the land the object of ascertaining and recording the fullest possible information in regard to landed tenures, &c. For this purpose their proceedings were to embrace the formation of as accurate a record as possible of all local usages connected with [207] land tenures, &c. In prosecuting these inquiries, Collectors were given the power of summoning witnesses and examining them on oath. If any doubt exists as to the exact meaning of these words and as to whether they embraced the inquiry into and judicial decision by Collectors on such questions as to the existence of a usage or custom of pre-emption that doubt is resolved by a reference to the famous Circular no. 1, which the Board of Revenue issued on the 9th April, 1839, and the appendix No. XIII, in which a sample is given as to how a right of pre-emption should be entered in the wajib-ul-arz. (Four Circular Orders of the Sadar Board of Revenue, Allahabad, 1839 to 1841, reprinted Calcutta, 1861 see pages 55 and 96.)

The intention of the Regulation was that the inquiry into these entries should be such that all suits may be adjudged and determined according to the facts therein stated until it should be shown that the proceeding or record of the Collector was erroneous or incomplete.

There is nothing in Regulation VII of 1822 which authorized Collectors to record contracts regarding landed tenures. It is only right to infer in the absence of proof to the contrary that they recorded only local usages, i. e., such usages as had the sanction of custom.

As has been seen above, provision was made for correction of incomplete entries or of any errors that might exist. The first settlement conducted under Regulation VII of 1822 in Gorakhpur came to an end just before 1857.

Preparations for the next settlement, also conducted under Regulation VII of 1822, so far as pargana Salempur was concerned, were reopened in 1859-60, and mahal Deoria, as the wajib-ul-arz shows, was settled in 1869.

Just before this date the Board of Revenue had issued their Circular no. 24 of 1868, dated the 9th of December, 1868. This Circular had special reference to the formation of the record of rights. The attention of Settlement Officers was recalled to the Directions to Settlement Officers, which call the attention of Settlement Officers to the fact that (i) the formation of the record of rights is a judicial act (p. 21), (ii) the object of his investigation is not to create new rights, but to define those that exist (p. 46), [208] (iii) that completeness of record can only be insured by great vigilance on his part. The villagers are themselves reluctant to lay open to public scrutiny the internal economy of their village. They are distrustful, and slow to appreciate the motives which lead to the inquiry. The strong, the crafty, and the dishonest wish to avoid a proceeding which will tie their hands, and close every door against future encroachment and intrigue. Again the process is a laborious one, which the persons employed in the formation of the record are apt to slur over. Each peculiarity of the tenure probably has to be elicited by repeated questions, and the expressions to be very carefully adjusted so as exactly to meet the case (p. 70) and (iv) that the record of rights is not to answer a temporary end, or to exhibit, as in the case of assessment, to the satisfaction of superiors, that a certain operation has been judiciously performed. The record is to be permanent, it is to be as it were the charter of rights, to which all persons, having an interest in the land, or seeking to acquire such interest, are to appeal. It is to be the common book of reference to all officers of Government in their transactions with the people—to the Collector, to the Magistrate, and above all to the Judge (p. 74).

That in the second chapter should be recorded under paragraph 14 the custom relating to pre-emption. They dwell upon the extreme importance to the people of a carefully prepared record of rights and upon the necessity of the Settlement Officer confining himself in the wajib-ul-arz to a record of the usages and customs which they find to be actually in existence.

Lastly, they direct that the greatest care should always be paid to the attestation of the khewat and wajib-ul-arz. The presence of all parties interested should be secured, and the papers carefully read over and explained to them, when possible, by an English officer. Each record of rights should bear at the foot a note by the attesting officer showing the date and place of attestation, and the names of the parties present. This should be signed in full by the attesting officer.

Such was the law and such were the instructions under which this wajib-ul-arz was prepared. It was attested on the 30th of September, 1869 and the attesting officer has signed the attestation. [209] The officer was Rai Baldeo Bakhsh, a Deputy Collector of eleven years' standing.

I have gone through this wajib-ul-arz in the original, and I can find in it none of those fancy entries which are said to exist in certain wajib-ul-arzes. It is divided into four chapters. The first chapter is headed "Chapter I, an account and description of the mahal and of possession therein." Chapter II is headed "Haquq baqimanda bahami hissadaran" —the rights which remain in existence among the share-holders,—and in the 14th paragraph of this chapter, just where we would expect to find it, comes the entry :—

"10. Mode of sale and transfer of the whole or part of the share of the co-sharers. If any one of us wishes to transfer the whole or part of his share by sale or mortgage, he is bound to give information to his co-sharers in the village and sell or mortgage to him for the price fixed. If any one transfers his share to a stranger without giving information to the co-sharers in the village, the transfer shall be invalid."

The ratification clause runs as follows :—"The persons whose signatures are given below in a separate rubkar of to-day's date acknowledge the accuracy of all the paragraphs of the waj b ul-arz pattidari."

Following the well-known rule Omnia præsumuntur rite et solemniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium—I hold that we have to presume regarding this entry—

(1) that the officer who framed the record of 1869 was properly appointed and duly authorized so to act,

(II) that in the formation of this record of rights he held a judicial inquiry on the spot regarding the various matters co ntained therein,

(III) that in the absence of proof to the contrary credit should be given to him for having acted with honesty and discretion within the limits of his authority,

(IV) that wherein his record differs from the record of 1833, he made complete what he decided was incomplete and corrected what he found to be incorrect in his predecessor's record,

(V) that facts without proof of which the finding as to the custom of pre-emption could not have been found and recorded [210] were proved at the inquiry. See Rex v. Nottingham Old Water Works Coy. (1).

My attention has now been called to various rulings in which this Court has held that variation between the language contained in two wajib-ul-arzes drawn up under Regulation VII of 1822 is inconsistent with the existence of a custom. One such ruling is Ram Prasad Misir v. Babu Mahadeo Misir (2). The attention of Mr. Justice TUDBALL who decided this case was not apparently drawn to the force given by Regulation VII of 1822 to records made under that Regulation. He even allows that the agreement before him may have been possibly an agreement to abide by old existing customs, but the documents do not show this. May not the answer to this be that the documents were drawn up under the Regulation and there was no necessity to show that they recorded old customs as still existing?

It is now time to turn to the record of the case and see what, viewed from the above standpoint, is the exact position of the contending parties. It seems to me that we are not concerned with the question how the right arose. This suit has so far as this question is concerned, to be adjudged and determined upon evidence which bears the stamp and impress of being a careful and honest record of a custom of pre-emption. The opposite side might have produced evidence to show that the record was carelessly or dishonestly prepared or that the custom recorded has fallen into desuetude and no longer exists. Nothing of the kind has been shown. They merely produce an extract from the wajib-ul-arz of 1833, in other words they produce the presumably incomplete or incorrect record in answer to the presumably complete and correct record. I would decree this appeal, reverse the decree of the court below, and return the appeal, through the District Judge, to the court below, i.e. Subordinate Judge, with a direction that it be re-admitted on the file of pending suits and disposed of according to law.

CHAMIER, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the appellant for pre-emption of a share in a village on the basis of [211] custom. The appellant relied, in proof of the custom, upon a decree obtained by another person in 1888 for pre-emption of a share in the village and upon the wajib-ul-arz of the village prepared at the settlement of 1859-1869. The respondents, the purchasers of the share in suit, who are complete strangers to the village, denied the custom and produced an extract from the wajib-ul-arz prepared at the settlement of 1834-1842. In this and many other cases the earlier settlement has been referred to as the settlement of 1833, but it appears that that settlement did not begin till 1834. The wajib-ul-arz of the earlier settlement produced in the present case was completed, if not prepared altogether, in 1839. The opening clause of it contains the following words :—"The settlement has been made according to Regulation IX of 1833, therefore we write this wajib-ul-arz of our own free-will and having fully understood it, we accept the matters stated below as binding upon us" (maratib zail khushi se apne upar manzur karte hain). The heading of the clause relating to pre-emption is "Mode of sale and transfer of the whole or part of the share-holders," and the clause itself runs as follows :—Whoever amongst us wishes to transfer his share in whole or in part by sale or mortgage is bound to inform his co-sharers and to sell or mortgage to him (sic), at the price fixed. If any one transfers his share to a stranger without informing his co-sharers, the transfer will not be valid." The concluding words are, "therefore we have written this iqrarnama that it may be of use at the proper time." Paragraph 14 of the wajib-ul-arz of the latter settlement, which is in the chapter relating to "the remaining rights of the co-sharers," is headed "Pre-emption and transfer by gift and the disposal of property in charity, &c.," and the relevant portion runs as follows :—"In case of urgent necessity every co-sharer has the right to transfer his share recorded in the khewat ; near co-sharers and other pattidars will have the right to pre-empt, the nearer being preferred to the more remote—tarjih ba lihaz madarij qarib. The courts below have dismissed the suit. The lower appellate court has held that the earlier wajib-ul-arz recorded a contract for, not a custom of, pre-emption ; that as pre-emption depended upon contract, not custom, between 1833 and 1869 (he assumed [212] that the earlier wajib-ul-arz was prepared in 1833) there cannot have been a custom of pre-emption in 1869, and that if the earlier wajib-ul-arz was a record of custom there were differences between the customs recorded in the two wajib-ul-arzes and therefore that custom was uncertain and could not be enforced.

This appeal has been referred to a Full Bench in consequence of the many conflicting views which have been expressed regarding the proper method of construing the wajib-ul-arzes prepared at the settlements of the Gorakhpur district made in 1834-1842 and 1859-1869. The learned vakil for the respondents contended that a number of recent decisions of this Court have established a cursus curiæ which we ought not to disturb. Decisions resting upon the construction of documents couched in different language cannot ordinarily be said to conflict with each other, but there has, I think, been a real conflict of judicial opinion in the pre-emption cases from the Gorakhpur district, notwithstanding that the language of the different wajib-ul-arzes produced has not been the same in all cases. The cases which I have been able to find fall into five distinct classes, namely, (I) those in which the wajib-ul-arz of the later settlement has been accepted as sufficient evidence of the custom therein set out on the ground that the custom may have sprung up since the wajib-ul-arz of the earlier settlement was prepared, e. g., Gokul Ditchhit v. Maheshri Ditchhit (1) and Parbhu Nath v. Thakur (2); (II) cases in which the differences between the clauses relating to pre-emption in the earlier and later wajib-ul-arzes have been disregarded or held to be unimportant and the later wajib-ul-arz has been accepted as a correct record of the custom; (III) cases in which it has been held that no valid custom has been proved either, (a) because the earlier wajib-ul-arz was a record of a contract, as shown by the use of the words iqrar or iqrarnama or other similar words, which were held to indicate that the persons who signed the wajib-ul-arzes had "agreed " to what was entered in it, or (b) because there was a difference between the earlier and later wajib-ul-arzes, e. g., Phallu Ram v. Sheo [213] Harak (1), Dhuram v. Tahal (2), Ahilakh v. Bhawani Din (3), Shiam Lal v. Jadunandan (4), Mahabal Rai v. Ram Bhabut (5), Muhammad Khan v. Ilahi Bakhsh (6), Ram Prasad v Mahadeo Prasad (7); Baldeo v. Wazir Khan (8) and Manraj v. Nasirullah (9); (IV) cases in which the court has held that the earlier wajib-ul-arz was like the later wajib-ul-arz, the record of a custom, notwithstanding the use of words indicating assent or agreement, and that the earlier wajib-ul-arz recorded the custom in brief and general terms, while the later one set it out in greater detail and there was no real conflict between the two, e.g. Hab Lal v. Ganga Sahai (10) and Bahal Rai v. Sukhdeo Prasad (11), and (V) cases in which one or both of the wajib-ul-arzes differed largely from those generally met with in the district and there were special reasons for deciding for or against the custom set up which do not exist in the present case. In all the cases of the first four classes which I have seen the court had before it an extract from the wajib-ul-arz of the settlement of 1834-1842 and an extract from the wajib-ul-arz of the settlement of 1859-1863. The former gave the right of pre-emption to co-sharers without more, and the latter provided for two or more grades of pre-emptors, the right being given as a rule first to near co-sharers, next to co-sharers in the same thok or patti and lastly to other co-sharers in the village. The reason given for the decision in any of the cases in the third class are applicable to all of them notwithstanding the difference in the language of the wajib-ul-arzes with which the court had to deal, and it is upon decisions in cases of this class, of which there have been many lately, that the learned vakil for the respondents relied as establishing a cursus curiæ which should not be disturbed. It appears to me that the views expressed in them must sooner or later put an end to suits for pre-emption on the basis of custom entered in the wajib-ul-arz not only in the Gorakhpur district but in other districts also. In fact decisions in cases of this class have already been applied to cases from the Meerut and Aligarh [214] districts and probably to others also. It is a significant fact that learned Judges when dealing with pre-emption cases from the Gorakhpur district have almost invariably referred to decisions in other cases, though insisting that each case must be decided with reference to the particular wajib-ul-arzes before the court. The truth is that there are two questions which arise in all these cases, namely, the effect to be given to words indicating that the malguzars have assented to a wajib ul-arz or that they are bound by it and the importance to be attached to differences of a well defined nature between the wajib-ul-arzes of the two settlements.

It seems to me that in construing a wajib-ul-arz one must have regard to the document as a whole and bear in mind the law and instructions, if any, under which, and the circumstances in which the document was prepared. The present District Judge of Gorakhpur has in more than one case complained of the difficulty of construing short extracts from wajib-ul-arzes. In the present case the complete wajib-ul-arzes of both settlements are before us. The wajib-ul-arz of the settlement which was made between 1834 and 1842 was prepared in accordance with paragraph 9 of Regulation VII of 1822, which I may note was not touched by the later Regulation of 1833 mentioned in the wajib-ul-arz so far as our present purpose is concerned. The Regulation of 1822 imposed upon Settlement Officers the duty of "uniting with the adjustment of the assessment ....the object of ascertaining and recording the fullest possible information with regard to landed tenures and the rights, interests and privileges of the various classes of the agricultural community," and their proceedings were to "embrace the formation of as accurate a record as possible of all local usages connected with landed tenures" and the information collected was to be so arranged and recorded as to admit of immediate reference thereafter by courts of judicature. In the case of Lekraj Koer v. Mahpal Singh (1) their lordships of the Privy Council held that a custom relating to the mode of inheritance was a usage of the kind which the Regulation required the Settlement Officer to ascertain and record, and there can be no doubt that a custom of [215] pre-emption was also such a usage. Executive instructions were issued by the Board of Revenue from time to time. The instructions in force at the date of the preparation of the wajib-ul-arz of the earlier settlement in the present case, and they are the earliest instructions which I have been able to find, are contained in the Board's Circular of 1839, which laid down that one of the records of the settlement file was to be the engagement (iqrarnama) entered into by the malguzars and co-parceners. This engagement was to show the amount of Jama agreed to and to be a general record of liabilities, privileges and interests attaching to each member of the community. Among other matters, it was to show the division of the jama among the members of the community, the mode of collecting village expenses, remunerating chaukidars, and patwaris, the selection of lambardars, and generally all other municipal arrangements made at the settlement, and the document was to be signed by the parties affected thereby in token of their assent to it. The Board disclaimed any desire to bind Settlement Officers to adopt any particular form, but they gave a sample form in the appendix and they said that the engagement need not be drawn out to an unreasonable length so as to exhibit in detail all the information collected. The sample form is very brief. It is described as an iqrarnama and one clause in it runs as follows :—" If any co-sharer desires to sell or pledge his share and all the co-sharers refuse to take it he is at liberty to sell or pledge it to an outsider." It would appear from this that the revenue authorities intended that the custom of pre-emption should be recorded in brief and general terms. Neither the regulation nor the circular says a word about contracts for pre-emption. On the other hand, it is notorious that a custom of pre-emption was very common. It will be observed that the clause relating to pre-emption in the village now in question gives the sense of the form given in the circular, and that in none of the cases from the Gorakhpur district cited during the arguments, does the extract from the wajib-ul-arz of the earlier settlement which was put in evidence go beyond the sample form given by the Board in 1839, though it does not appear whether all the wajib-ul-arzes were prepared after the issue of that circular or not. In every case the record was brief. [216] In all of them without exception the right to pre-empt is given to co-sharers without more and no provision is made for competition between co-sharers. The wajib-ul-arz of 1869 also was prepared in pursuance of Regulation VII of 1822, but in the meantime the Board of Revenue had issued fresh instructions as to the compilation of settlement files. At the time when the wajib-ul-arz of 1869 was prepared, the instructions in force were contained in the Board's Circular No. 24 of 1868. In paragraph 9 of it they say that the wajib-ul-arz should be a record of the customs and usages prevalent in the estate. In paragraph 17 they say that it is not their intention to prescribe a form of wajib-ul-arz which is to be undeviatingly followed by all Settlement Officers, but they wish to impress on all officers the extreme importance of a carefully prepared record and the necessity of their confining themselves in the wajib-ul-arz to a record of the usages and customs which they find to be actually in existence. In conclusion they say that the greatest care should be paid to the attestation of the khewat and wajib-ul-arz. The presence of all parties was to be secured and the papers carefully read over and explained to them. These instructions show very clearly that Settlement Officers were enjoined to record customs, not contracts, in matters like pre-emption and that much more detailed information was required in 1868 than in 1839. Attached to the circular of 1868 was a skeleton form of wajib-ul-arz paragraph 14 of which is headed. "The custom relating to pre-emption" and provides for several grades of pre-emptors. The history of the preparation of these wajib-ul-arzes shows that there is a strong presumption that what is entered in them regarding pre-emption is the record of a custom. We have all of us seen wajib-ul-arzes which contain provisions which ought not to be in them. In some, no doubt, language may be found which shows clearly an attempt to create a right of pre-emption. In others there is an obvious contract between the co-parceners for a right of pre-emption. But where the contrary is not shown, a provision in a wajib-ul-arz relating to pre-emption should be presumed to be the record of a custom, and this rule has been affirmed repeatedly by this Court. In all the cases from the Gorakhpur district in which the wajib-ul-arz of the earlier settlement has been held [217] to be evidence of a contract for pre-emption the preamble or opening clause or the last clause has contained some such words as "ham iqrar karte hain," "ham paband rahenge" or "ham kurband rahenge." In the present case the words are "ham maratib zail khushi se apne upar manzur karte hain." In the form given in the Board's Circular the words are a good deal stronger; they are "batashim sharait zail iqrar karte hain," yet it is certain that the Board never intended that a contract of pre-emption should be recorded. The word iqrar does not necessarily mean contract. In the sample forms it means no more than declared assent. Within certain limits the exact form of words used in the opening or attestation clause is immaterial. The form was prepared by officials and the words iqrar, manzur and so forth were intended to show that the malguzars admitted that the record which they were signing was correct and binding upon them. It appears to me that to hold that words in a wajib-ul-arz indicating assent or acknowledgment by the malguzars are sufficient to show that the malguzars entered into a contract with each other regarding pre-emption is to disregard the whole history of the preparation of wajib-ul-arzes.

Starting with the presumption that the intention was to record an existing custom I consider that words like iqrar karte hain, or manzur karte hain, or paband rahenge or the like are entirely insufficient by themselves to rebut that presumption. It would have been a difficult matter to get the malguzars all over the district to agree to the creation of a new right, but easy to get them to assent to the record of a notorious and existing custom. As AIKMAN, J., observed in the case of Baldeo Sahai v. Nagai Ahir (1), malguzars could agree to observe an existing custom as well as enter into a new contract.

The earlier wajib-ul-arz in the present case was signed by only four persons, but this does not appear to be sufficient reason for holding that it is a contract, not a custom, which is recorded. The construction which has been placed in many cases upon wajib-ul-arzes of the earlier settlement is due, I suspect, in no small degree to the fact that the whole wajib-ul-arz was not before the Court. Having carefully considered the language of [218] the wajib-ul-arz of the earlier settlement produced in the present case, I have been unable to find anything in it which indicates that it was intended to be the record of a contract for pre-emption.

It must, however, be admitted that the custom is not recorded in the same language in both wajib-ul-arzes, and the question is whether it should on this account be held that the custom is not certain. According to the decision of their Lordships in Lekhraj Kuar v. Mahpal Singh (2), the earlier wajib-ul-arz having been prepared in pursuance of Regulation VII of 1822 must be presumed to be correct so far as it goes, and the same presumption attaches to the later wajib-ul-arz. If the case rested here, I should have been disposed to hold that the later wajib-ul-arz should prevail having been prepared at a settlement made by way of revision of the previous settlement. One of the avowed objects of the later settlements was to correct errors and make good deficiencies in the old record. The whole settlement record of 1839 is brief compared with that of 1869. The Board's instructions in 1839 positively discouraged the recording of elaborate details. But further it appear to me that there is not necessarily any contradiction between the two wajib-ul-arzes with which we are concerned in the present case. The earlier gives the right of pre-emption to co-sharers as also does the later. It is incontestable that if the earlier wajib-ul-arz were the only record of the custom the appellant might prove by oral evidence that in case of competition between co-sharers, the nearer co-sharer was entitled to pre-empt. In fact it is always open to a person to supplement a wajib-ul-arz by oral evidence, and where large interests are at stake this is commonly done. Why then should not the appellant in the present case be entitled to supplement the earlier wajib-ul-arz by the later and presumably more correct one? I entirely agree with what my brother KNOX said in the case of Hub Lal v. Ganga Sahu (3) with reference to similar wajib-ul-arzes. The earlier one records the custom in brief and general terms. The later one goes more into details. It is more complete, and this is exactly what one would [219] expect." The words in the later wajib-ul-arz "in case of urgent necessity" may be disregarded. They have no bearing upon the question of pre-emption. It is notorious that the records of the earliest settlements were often found to be unsatisfactory and incomplete. Hence the necessity for the more elaborate records that were prepared afterwards.

In my opinion the reasons given by the Courts below, for holding that the earlier wajib-ul-arz was the record of a contract and that the custom set up by the appellant has not been proved by the wajib-ul-arzes are insufficient. I would allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower [220] THE plaintiff in this case conducted certain transactions as agent for the defendants for the sale and purchase of silver bars. These transactions resulting in a loss to the defendants, they drew certain hundis in the plaintiff's favour. The plaintiff sued on the hundis so drawn, and the main question raised in the suit was whether the consideration for them was or was not the losses incurred in the transactions above referred to, and if so, whether the amounts were recoverable, if, as was alleged, these transactions were of the nature of wagering contracts, no actual delivery of silver ever having been intended. The court of first instance (Munsif of Cawnpore) dismissed the suit. The lower appellate court (District Judge) decreed it. The defendants appealed.

illegal, having regard to the provisions of section 30 of the Indian Contract Act, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, notwithstanding that he carried on business in different places under different names. The learned Judge has refrained from recording a finding as to whether or not the consideration for the hundis was illegal. We must accordingly refer the following issue for trial to the lower appellate court;—

"Was the consideration for the hundis sued on illegal, having regard to the provisions of section 30 of the Indian Contract Act.

"On return of the finding ten days will be allowed for filing objections."

The court below found that the hundis were executed by the defendants for money lost by the plaintiff, as their agents, on wagering contracts and on the appeal again coming on for hearing the following judgment was delivered:—

RICHARDS and TUDBALL, JJ.—This appeal came before us on the 3rd of May 1910. The suit was one on foot of certain hundis. The defence was that the hundis were given for the [221] value of certain goods which the plaintiff failed to deliver, and that there had been certain wagering contracts between the plaintiff and the defendants, and that the plaintiff wrongfully applied the hundis to the satisfaction, not of the price of the goods which had been purchased, but to the settlement of the wagering account. The court of first instance decided in favour of the defendants on the ground that the hundis represented a wagering contract. The lower appellate court, in the first instance refrained from going into the question as to whether or not the hundis were given in settlement of a wagering contract, and decided the case on the ground that the different branches of the plaintiff's firm in different cities were separate entities, and that even if the contracts were wagering contracts, they were not wagering contracts entered into with the Cawnpore branch of the plaintiff's business. We accordingly referred an issue to ascertain what was the real consideration for the hundis, and whether it was illegal having regard to the provisions of section 30 of the Indian Contract Act. The finding on this issue has now been returned, and the court has found that the hundis represent the amount due by the defendants to the plaintiff on accounts settled between them as principal and agent, in other words, that even assuming that the transactions were gambling transactions in the sense that it never was intended that actual delivery of goods should be made, nevertheless the wagering contract was not between the plaintiff or the other branches of his firm and the defendants, but that the silver bars were purchased and sold by the plaintiff from or to third parties as agent for the defendants. An objection has been filed to this finding on various grounds; but it has not been suggested that there was no evidence on which the court was entitled to come to the finding at which it arrived. It has been argued that this finding was a new case which was not put forward at any time by either of the parties, at least until the issue was referred. We find, however, that in the third ground of appeal to the lower appellate court the plaintiff, in effect, took this very ground, namely, that even if the transactions were in their nature gambling transactions because the delivery of the goods was not contemplated, nevertheless, the plaintiff was the agent [222] of the defendants and was entitled to recover the loss he had sustained. We think that the finding on the issue is binding upon us, and that being so, we are bound by the authority of the case of Shibho Mal v. Lachman Das (1). In that case it was expressly held that an agent who has paid wagering losses for his principal is entitled to recover. The learned Judges decided on the authority of the case Thacker v. Hardy (1). This last mentioned authority was decided when the law in England in respect of gambling transactions was practically identical with the present law in this country as provided by section 30 of the Indian Contract Act. The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Act No. VIII of 1890 (Guardians and Wards Act), section 17—Guardian and ward—Considerations by which a court should be guided in the selection of a guardian.

In considering the appointment of a guardian for a minor the proper test is the welfare of the minor. Where the applicant was a distant relation of the husband of a childless widow of some 12 or 13 years of age, who was living happily with her father, it was held that the father of the minor widow was her proper guardian. Khudiram Mookerjee v. Bonwari Lal Roy (2) referred to.

THIS was an application by one Tota Ram asking that the applicant might be appointed guardian of the widow of one Joti Prasad, a child some 12 or 13 years of age. The applicant was a distant relative of the deceased Joti Prasad. The widow, Musammat Reoti, was living under the care of her father Ram Charan. The court (District Judge of Aligarh) rejected the application and appointed Ram Charan as guardian of the minor. The applicant appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the opposite party.

KNOX and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ.—The District Judge of Aligarh had before him an application made by Tota Ram, admittedly a very distant relative of one Joti Prasad deceased. [223] The application was to be appointed as guardian of the person and property of the widow of the deceased Joti Prasad. The said widow, Musammat Reoti, is a girl of only 12 or 13 years of age. She has been up to this time apparently in the custody of her father. Under these circumstances the court below considered it only expedient that she should remain under that custody and not under the custody of this admittedly very distant relative. On behalf of Tota Ram, who has appealed from the order of the District Judge refusing his application and appointing the father Ram Charan as guardian, our attention is called to the case of Khudiram Mookerjee v. Bonwari Lal Roy (2). In that case the learned Judges held that—under the text of Narada cited in the Dayabhaga, to the effect that when the husband is deceased, his kin are the guardians of his childless widow—if no other reason is made out against the husband's kin, preference should be given to them over

No text has been cited to us from the Mitakshara or the Mitakshara school of law, but in a matter of this kind the real test which a court has to apply is the test laid down in section 17 of Act VIII of 1890. The point the courts have to consider is what will be for the welfare of the minor. We think it by no means for the welfare of the minior that a girl of twelve or thirteen should be relegated to the guardianship of a distant relative when she has already at her own door a guardian and is living happily under the guardianship of her own father. The court below has exercised a very proper discretion in the matter. We are not prepared to interfere with the order of the court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Plaintiffs purchased certain property at an execution sale on the 20th November 1891, the property being at the time of purchase in the possession of trespassers, and formal possession was given to them on the 25th November 1892. In 1897 other persons, also trespassers, obtained possession of the property, against and not through the persons oringinally in possession. In 1908 the plaintiffs sued the second set of trespassers for possession, Held that article 144 of the second schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, applied and the suit was not time barred. Ram Prosad, Janna v. Lakhi Narain Pradhan (1) followed.

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of TUDBALL, J. The material facts appear from the judgment under appeal, which was as follows:—

"The facts of the case out of which this appeal arises are, so far as they are material for the disposal of the appeal, as follows:—Two brothers, Phenku and Sumeran, were separate owners each of a two annas share in a village. One Ram Sahai was the ancestor of the present plaintiffs. Phenku, Sumeran and Ram Sahai jointly brought a suit against certain defendants, which they lost in the year 1883, and costs were awarded to the defendant against them. Some-time between 1883 and 1887, both Phenku and Sumeran died. The former's estate was inherited by his sons. Sumeran left a daughter's son to succeed him. The latter, however, did not get possession of his estate, on the contrary the sons of Phenku, without any title, took possession of it, and in the year 1887 mortgaged it to one Subbe Rai. The defendants in the suit of 1883 executed their decree for costs as against Ram Sahai, the sons of Phenku and heirs of Sumeran. In 1891, the whole four annas (i.e., the shares of both Phenku and Sumeran) was attached and sold and purchased by the present plaintiffs. The latter was put into formal possession on 25th November 1892. On an application for mutation of names, the Revenue Court ordered his name to be recorded subject to the mortgage of Subbe Rai. The latter's mortgage was one with possession. In 1894, that is, after their rights had been attached and sold in execution of the decree for costs, the heirs of Sumeran brought a suit against the heirs of Phenku and the mortgagee Subbe Rai to recover the two-anna share of Sumeran and after some litigation finally obtained a decree from this Court in their favour in 1897. In execution of that decree they obtained possession as against the heirs of Phenku and Subbe Rai. The present suit was brought by the plaintiffs against the heirs of Sumeran to recover [225] possession of this two anna share. It is brought some 16 years after the date on which formal possession was awarded to the plaintiffs as auction-purchasers, but within twelve years of the date on which the heirs of Sumeran obtained possession as against the sons of Phenku and their mortgagee, but considerably more than 16 years after the date on which the sons of Phenku took possession of their share adversely to the heirs of Sumeran. Among other defences to the suit, the plea of limitation was raised. Both the lower Courts have acceded to this plea, and holding that the plaintiffs have failed to prove possession within the period of twelve years (a possession which they actually alleged) have dismissed the suit. On appeal to this Court it is urged that the article applicable to the present suit, on the findings of fact by the lower Court is article 144 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act. On behalf of the respondents it is urged that either article 137 or article 142 applies, and in either case the suit is barred by limitation. Article 137 relates to a suit by a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree, when the judgment-debtor is out of possession at the date of the sale: and the period of limitation begins to run from the date when the judgment-debtor is first entitled to possession. The situation in the present case amounts to this, that while trespassers were in possession of the judgment-debtor's property that property was attached and sold in execution of the decree. If the auction-purchaser had then brought a suit to recover possession from the trespasser, it is quite clear that this article would apply. But the present suit is not directed against the trespasser. It is directed against the original judgment-debtor, who has subsequently to the sale ejected the trespasser and taken possession of the property himself. As against the present plaintiff, the judgment-debtor is equally a trespasser with the person who has been ejected by the judgment-debtor. Article 137, in my opinion, was not intended to apply to a suit such as is now before me, but to a suit directed against a third party other than the judgment-debtor. If this were not so, and the article applied to the circumstances of the present case, it would be tantamount to allowing the later of two trespassers to add to the period of his hostile possession, the period of possession of a former trespasser from whom he has not derived title in any way. In the case of Ram Prosad Jamna v. Lakhi Narain Pradhan (1), the facts were very similar to those of the present case. A vendor who was at the time out of possession of certain immoveable property, sold a portion of it, and after the date of sale the vendor recovered possession. The purchaser within twelve years after the vendor had recovered possession, but more than twelve years after the vendor had been orginally dispossessed instituted a suit to obtain possession of the property covered by the sale deed. It was held that article 136 (the article applicable to cases of private sales) did not apply, but that the case fell within the purview of article 144. Similarly in the case reported in I. L. R. 15 Bom. 26, a Bench of the Bombay High Court held that articles 136 and 137 applied to suits brought by purchasers against third persons in possession of lands, in whose favour limitation runs against the purchaser, in the same way as it would against the owner with whose rights the purchaser is clothed. The only decision of this Court to which my attention has been called is that to be found in I. L [226] R 2 All. 718. That decision, however, does not help me in the slightest, in the present case. It seems to me that the language in column 3 of schedule II against articles 136 and 137 is only intelligible in the view that I take. As regards article 142, it is urged that formal delivery of possession granted to the present plaintiffs on 25th November, 1892, is possession within the meaning of that article, as has been held in this Court and also by the Calcutta High Court. Formal delivery of possession as against a judgment-debtor in possession would, no doubt, constitute such possession as is contemplated by this article, but as against a third person, it is of no value whatsoever. At the date when formal delivery of possession was given to the present plaintiff, the judgment-debtors, who were then owners of the property in dispute, were not in possession. The mortgagee, Subbe Rai, a trespasser, was in possession, and as against him the plaintiff cannot be said to have obtained possession. The case of Narain Das v. Lalta Prasad (2) laid down that whatever might be the effect of the delivery of formal possession under section 319 of the Code of Civil Procedure as against the judgment-debtor himself, such formal delivery of possession will not take effect as actual possession as against a purchaser of the rights of the judgment-debtor who has previously obtained actual possession. In the present case there was no purchaser, but a trespasser who had obtained possession before the auction sale. In my opinion the formal delivery of possession of the 25th November, 1892, was not possession within the meaning of article 142. That article applies to a suit for possession of immoveable property, when the plaintiff, while in possession of the property, has been dispossessed or has discontinued the possession. The only article which can therefore apply is article 144 as was applied by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Ram Prosad Jamna mentioned above. In this view the period of limitation began to run when the possession of the defendants first became adverse to the plaintiffs. The adverse possession of the defendants clearly commenced when they recovered possession under their decree, against the heirs of Phenku and the mortgagee Subba Rai. They cannot add to that period the period during which the sons of Phenku held adversely to themselves. Their possessory title cannot be said to have been derived in any way whatever from the sons of Phenku, and therefore the two periods of adverse possession cannot be added together, so as to bar the present suit. It seems to me quite clear that it was not until the present defendants wrested the possession from the sons of Phenku, that any possession adverse to the present plaintiffs could have been arisen in them. It is true that the present plaintiffs in the plaint say that they had been in possession within twelve years, but the facts have been found against them. On the facts found, article 144 clearly applies and the present suit is within time. I therefore admit the appeal and set aside the decree of the Courts below. As the suit was dismissed on a preliminary point by the Court of first instance, and there are other issues to be decided between the parties. I remand the case through the lower Appellate Court to the Court of first instance for decision on the merits. Costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

[227] Munshi Govind Prasad, for the appellants, submitted that the burden of proving that they had a subsisting title on the date of suit lay on the plaintiffs. They had obtained formal possession in 1892, but the suit for possession was brought more than twelve years after that date. The suit was governed by article 137, Act XV of 1877, schedule II, and was barred by limitation. He relied on Sheoprasad v. Udai Singh (1). Mazhar Husain v. Behari Singh (2) and Parmanand v. Saheb Ali (3).

Babu Sital Prosad Ghose, for the respondents, submitted that as the plaintiffs did not claim through the person who was in possession in 1892, they could not tack their possession on to that of the preceding trespasser. The defendants entered into possession in 1897 when the plaintiffs had a subsisting title, and the defendants had not since acquired a title by prescription. The suit having been brought within 12 years of 1897, was not barred.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—The facts of this case are fully set forth in the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court from whose decisions this appeal under the Letters Patent has been preferred, and it is unnecessary to recapitulate them. The plaintiffs acquired the property claimed by them under an auction purchase which took place on the 20th of November, 1891. Formal possession was delivered to their predecessors in title on the 25th of November, 1892. At that time Sumeran, whose rights the plaintiffs' father, Ram Sahai, purchased at auction, was dead and his legal representatives were out of possession. A trespasser, namely, the mortgagee from the sons of Phenku Rai, was actually in possession. It was in 1897 that the present defendants appellants obtained actual possession of the property by virtue of a decree which they obtained in a suit to which the plaintiffs, or their predecessor in title, was no party. It is contended that the claim comes within the purview of article 137 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act of 1877. We agree with our learned colleague that that article only applies to a suit against a third party and not to a suit against the judgment-debtor or his representative. This is manifest [228] from the language of the third column of the schedule as pointed out by our learned brother. We are also of opinion that article

(1) (1880) I. L. R. 2 All. 718.
(2) (1906) I. L. R. 28 All. 760.
(3) (1889) I. L. R. 11 All. 438.

142 is inapplicable. The plaintiffs were never in actual possession and were not dispossessed. The only article therefore of the Limitation Act which can apply is article 144, and the period of limitation is 12 years from the date on which the defendant's possession became adverse to the plaintiffs. The word " defendant " by its very definition includes a person from or through whom the defendant derives his liability to be sued. Therefore the adverse possession of the defendant, referred to in the article, necessarily means the adverse possession of the defendant himself or of any person from or through whom he derives his possession. In the present case the defendant did not derive his possession from or through the sons of Phenku or their mortgagee. Therefore the defendants are not entitled to add to their own possession the period of the possession of the first set of trespassers. In the year 1897 when the defendants actually obtained possession, the plaintiffs had a subsisting title to the property, more than 12 years not having elapsed from the date of their auction purchase. It is from the date on which the defendants obtained delivery of possession in execution of the decree obtained by them that their possession can be regarded as adverse, and, as such possession commenced only in 1897, they have not been in possession for a period sufficiently long to extinguish the plaintiff's rights. The claim is therefore not time-barred, and the decision of the learned Judge of this Court is correct. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

BANK OF UPPER INDIA, LIMITED, MUSSOORIE (Defendant) v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL (Plaintiff) and DIGAMBAR SINGH AND ANOTHER (Defendants.)*

Adverse possession—Limitation—Land situate in a cantonment—Presumption as to title.

Certain land situate in the cantonment of Dehra Dun was appropriated in the beginning of the nineteenth century by the predecessor in title of the defendant for the purpose of building a house. The land was held, subject to the rules from time to time applicable to cantonments, by various occupiers until the year 1884 when the cantonments were handed over to the civil authorities. In 1890 the Secretary of State sued the then occupant for a declaration of title and assessment of ground rent, or, in the event of the defendant refusing to pay rent, for possession. Held that the circumstances of the case warranted the presumption that the title to the land in suit was vested in the Crown, and that the possession thereof could not be regarded as adverse until at the earliest the year 1874, when the land in suit ceased to be a part of the cantonment. Secretary of State for India v Jagan Prasad (1) referred to.

This was a suit brought by the Secretary of State for India in Council for a declaration of title to certain land situate in the old cantonment of Dehra Dun, which had been made over to the civil authorities in 1874. The facts out of which the suit arose are fully stated in the judgment of the Court.

Mr. B. E. O'Coor and The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, for the appellant.

Mr. W. Wallach and Babu Lalit Mohan Banerji for the respondents.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—In the suit which has given rise to this appeal, the Secretary of State for India seeks for a declaration of his proprietary right to a plot of land known as No. 4 Rajpore Road, Dehra Dun, containing 86 odd local bighas. He also asks for an assessment of the land to ground rent and for the execution of a lease for 90 years by the defendants, and in the event of refusal by the defendants to pay the rent when fixed for possession of the lands by their ejectment therefrom. The plaintiff further claims a sum in respect of rent from the 26th of December 1901 to the date of the institution of the suit.

[230] The main defence of the defendant Bank is a plea of limitation, the allegation of the Bank being that the Bank and its predecessors in title have been in adverse possession of the property for a period of upwards of 60 years.

The history of the property takes us back to the beginning of the 19th century, when an incursion was made into Dehra Dun and the adjoining territory, then belonging to the Raj of Garhwal by the troops of the King of Nepal, and this territory was wrested from the Raj. Then followed a war between the troops of the British Government and the Gurkha troops, with the result that the Gurkhas were ultimately defeated and the territory in question was ceded to the British Government in in the year 1816. Portion of the territory so ceded was restored to the Raj of Garhwal, but Dehra Dun was retained by Government. About this time a young officer, Lieutenant Young, who afterwards attained the rank of Colonel, raised a Gurkha regiment and located it in Dehra Dun. A cantonment was formed which was demarcated by pillars which are still standing. Within this cantonment, Lieutenant Young built a house for himself, and he appropriated the piece of ground which is the subject-matter of this litigation. This piece of land is situate within the boundary pillars at the north end of the cantonment. This cantonment remained under the control of the military authorities, subject to the regulations governing lands in cantonments, until it was made over by the military to the civil authorities on the 17th of August, 1874. No evidence is forthcoming as to the authority under which Lieutenant Young appropriated the land in question. It may be presumed that as he raised the regiment and formed the cantonment, he built his house and appropriated the land surrounding it without any specific authority being given to him for so doing. He was a man of considerable ability and force of character, as his letters which are on the record show, and in 1828 he was appointed Superintendent of the Dun. He appears to have transferred the property to an Assistant Surgeon, named Bruce, prior to 1843. Bruce in turn transferred his interest to one Leadbeater and on the 28th of January 1864, the Administrator-General of Bengal as the Administrator with the will annexed of Leadbeater [231] "according to his estate, right, title and interest therein, and so far as he could or might at law or in equity as such Administrator as aforesaid and not further or otherwise" granted and confirmed unto the Rev. John Simms Woodside "according to the nature of the premises," the dwelling house with the land belonging thereto, described as being "in the north end of the military cantonments at Dehra Dun and formerly the property of Collector Young." Mr. Woodside transferred his interest in the property to Colonel Peter Abbot in 1859, and ultimately after divers mesne transfers, the defendant appellant Bank purchased it.

So long as the property remained in cantonments, it appears to us clear that Colonel Young and his successors in title could acquire no title thereto by adverse possession. Colonel Young was an officer of Government and Superintendent of the Dun, and it must, we think, be presumed that he built the house in question and occupied the land adjoining it, subject to the regulations governing lands in cantonments and as Government property. In fact, he recognised throughout that the property belonged to the Crown. We have on the record a letter under his hand when Superintendent of the Doon, dated the 22nd of October 1829, in which he admitted that the zemindari or proprietary right in the property was vested in Government. In reply to a letter of one Captain McMullin, Executive Officer of the XIth Division, Meerut, he writes :—" I have the honour to inform you that the lands in the cantonments of the Sermoor Battalion (i.e., the old cantonments) are held on the following terms, the zamindari or proprietary right being vested in Government : Lands farmed to thikadars and included in the last settlement and taken into cantonments subsequently 23 pacca bighas, 16 biswas and 15 biswansis for which Government pays Rs. 18. The claim ceases with the existing settlement. There are 23 pacca bighas, 16 biswas and 5 biswansis belonging to the muafi lands of Mahant Sarup Das, for which nothing is paid, no claim having been made. The remaining land, that is, 277 bighas pacca, 4 biswas and 10 biswansis is Government land." It is obvious from this letter that Lieutenant Young did not then set up any claim to the absolute ownership of the property. [232] So long as that property remained in cantonments, it must be regarded, we think, as land held for Government under Government regulations. If this be so, it follows that the plea of the statute of limitation must fail, inasmuch as the old cantonments remained under military authority up to the 17th August, 1874, when the control was handed over to the civil authorities. From that date up to the date of the institution of this suit 60 years have not elapsed.

The learned Subordinate Judge has very fully dealt with the facts of the case in his judgment, and we do not think it necessary to recapitulate them. He found against the defendant Bank on the plea of limitation, and we think rightly. The case is not unlike that which was the subject of decision by STRAIGHT, J., in The Secretary of State for India v. Jagan Prasad (1). In that case it was held that a party who built a house in cantonments must be taken to have derived his title to occupy the land from the military authorities and that their power to make a grant of it could only be co-extensive with their own tenure of the property, and that no assignment by them could subsist beyond the period the land might remain subject to cantonment regulations. Under the various transfers from Lieutenant Young and his successors in title the only interest in the land which passed was, whatever interest Young possessed. He could not under the circumstances dispose of the absolute interest, which belonged to Government. This accounts for the guarded manner in which the Administrator-General of Bengal purported to convey the property in the deed of transfer of the 28th of January 1854. He merely granted it according to his estate and interest therein ; and so far as he could at law or equity do so. This being the state of things up to the year 1874, when possibly adverse possession for the first time might, with some show of reason, be set up, the defendant's plea of limitation must fail, 60 years not having elapsed from that year.

The fairness of the terms upon which a lease is offered by the Government to the defendant Bank has not been questioned before us. These terms appear to be just and reasonable.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

[233] We are asked by Mr. O'Conor on behalf of the defendant Bank to fix a time within which the lease should be executed. Mr. Wallach, on behalf of the respondent, raises no objection. We think that the lease should be executed within a period of two months from this date, and so we direct.

Civil Procedure Code (1882), section 325*A*—"Alienation"—Muhammadan law—Gift during marz-ul-maut—Will.

Held that a gift made by a Muhammadan during death-illness is (1) under the Muhammadan law a will and therefore valid as to one-third f the property comprised in it, and (2) is not an alienation which might fall under the prohibition contained in section 325A of the Code of Civil Procedure (1882).

[Ref. 67 I. C. 77=34 C. L. J. 444=49 Cal. 477 ; 82 I. C. 886=40 C. L. J. 331.]

THIS was a suit for a declaration that a deed of gift executed by one Saleh-un-nissa, was void on the ground that she was suffering from death-illness at the time of the gift and that the property was under the management of the Collector and therefore, according to section 325A, Civil Procedure Code, the lady was not competent to make the gift. It was found that the lady was suffering from death-illness when she executed the gift, but was in possession of her proper senses when the property was given to her daughter, son-in-law and maternal uncle. The Court of first instance (Munsif of Ghazipur) decreed the claim, and that decree was affirmed on appeal by the officiating District Judge. The defendant appealed to the High Court, and there raised the plea that the gift being made in marz-ul-maut operated as a will and was valid to the extent of one-third.

Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq, for the appellants. A gift made in marz-ul-maut, operates as a will. Ameer Ali, Vol. I, pp. 23—25. The gift to the extent of one-third is therefore valid. Section 325A of the Code of Civil Procedure is no bar to the lady making a will at least in favour of the donees who were [234] not her heirs. That section only prevents alienations which are to take effect immediately and not after death.

Mr. Ishaq Khan, for the respondents, submitted that the transfer amounted to an alienation and was not valid. The word alienation includes all transfers including a will. The judgment-debtor purported to make a gift, but under the Muhammadan Law it amounts to a will. The will is not valid in favour of an heir for more than one-third. The will was made to daughter and son-in-law and maternal uncle. If valid, it operates in respect of one-third share given to those who are not heirs. Alienation by will is also an alienation which is to take effect after death. The will therefore cannot be made while the property is in the Collector's charge.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the plaintiff respondent, Muhammad Ismail, for a declaration that a deed of gift, dated the 29th of June 1908, executed by Musammat Saleh-un-nissa, is void on the ground, first, that she was suffering from death-illness at the time of executing the document, and secondly, that the property was under the management of the Collector under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, and under section 325 (A) of Act No. XIV of 1882 the lady was not competent to make the gift. The Court of first instance decreed the claim and the lower Appellate Court has affirmed that decree. It has been found that the lady was suffering from death-illness when she executed the deed of gift. It has also been found on the issue referred by us to the Court below, namely, whether she was in possession of her senses and had full knowledge of the contents and effect of the deed of gift, that she was in possession of her senses and was fully cognisant of the contents and effect of the document.

Upon these findings it is contended before us that the gift being one made during death-illness is a will under the Muhammadan Law and is valid as regards one-third of the property comprised in it, and that it is not valid in so far as it bestows any part of the property on the heirs of the deceased and also as regards two-thirds of the remainder. Now under the [235] gift in question half of the property was given to Muhammad Sayeed, the paternal uncle of the lady, and out of the remaining half, one-third was given to her daughter and two-thirds to her son-in-law, the husband of another daughter. In so far as the document bestows any part of the property on the daughter Asghar-un-nissa, it is admittedly void as a will. It is conceded that if section 325 (A) of the Code of Civil Procedure was no bar to the right of the lady to make a will, the document is a valid will as regards one-third of the property given to Jawad Husain and Muhammad Sayeed, that is to say, that it is valid in regard to one-sixth share obtained by Muhammad Sayeed and one-ninth obtained by Jawad Husain. It is not denied that under the Muhammadan Law a gift made during death-illness operates as a will. So that if section 325 (A) is not a bar to the right of the lady to make the will, it would operate in respect of the one-sixth and the one-ninth shares mentioned above and would not be void as regards those shares.

We have therefore to determine whether section 325 (A) precluded Musammat Saleh-un-nissa, from making a will of her property. That section provides that so long as the Collector can exercise or perform in respect of the judgment-debtor's immoveable property, or any part thereof, any of the powers or duties conferred or imposed on him by sections 322-325, the judgment-debtor or his representative in interest shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate such property or part except with the written permission of the Collector. It is urged that a will comes within the term "alienate" as mentioned in the section. We are unable to agree with this contention. The word "alienate" in our opinion was used ejusdem generis with the words preceding, namely, mortgage, charge, lease, and manifestly contemplates a transfer which would have present effect and not a devise which can only have operation after the death of the testator. In this view the will was not void and the lady was not incompetent to make it. That being so, the plaintiff's claim should be dismissed in so far as it relates to a one-sixth share acquired by Muhammad Sayeed and a one-ninth share acquired by Jawad Husain under the document in question, treating it as a will, and as regards the rest the said document is void.

[236] We accordingly allow the appeal and dismiss the claim as regards a sixth share of the property acquired by Muhammad Sayeed and a ninth share, acquired by Jawad Husain. We affirm the decree of the Court below as regards the remainder of the claim. Under the circumstances we direct the parties to pay their own costs in all Courts.

He was [238] examined and he stated that he had no other property excepting that which he was suing to redeem. The Court fixed a date for inquiry into the alleged pauperism. Babu Sarat Chandra Chaudhri (for Dr. Satesh Chandra Banerji), for the applicant :—

The Subordinate Judge did not enter into the merits of the application at all. He rejected it merely on the ground that as the applicant could possibly raise funds on the security of his equity of redemption he was not a pauper. But this very equity of redemption was the subject matter of his suit. It has been ruled that a pauper is not obliged to raise funds by mortgaging his claim; Vedanta Desikacharyulu v. Perindevamma (1). The Subordinate Judge should have made a proper inquiry into the circumstances of the applicant and have ascertained whether or not he was a pauper within the meaning of order XXXIII, rule 1.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala (with him Munshi Govind Prasad), for the opposite party:—

The Subordinate Judge was right in his opinion. The applicant could raise money on the security of his equity of redemption, which might be of considerable value. The equity of redemption was not the subject-matter of the suit. What was sought to be redeemed was the physical property itself and not the equity of redemption, which is a right quite distinct and separate from the corpus of the property. If the applicant's contention were right, then there could be no puisne mortgages. Then, the case is not one in which a revision should be entertained. There is no question of jurisdiction; there has been no material irregularity. It is not alleged that the applicant tendered any [239] evidence which the Court refused to entertain or consider. There is no evidence on the record, other than the statement of the applicant himself. On that evidence the Court rightly or wrongly came to the conclusion that he was not a pauper. Misappraisement of evidence is no ground for revision. The case is governed by the ruling of Kamrakh Nath v. Sundar Nath (2) which followed the case of Chattarpal Singh v. Raja Ram (3).

Babu Sarat Chandra Chaudhri, in reply:—

In the present case the matter has not at all been gone into as to whether the applicant is a pauper or not. It is not the petitioner's plea that his evidence has been wrongly disbelieved, but that it has not been considered at all. The Subordinate Judge does not say that he disbelieved the petitioner's statement; if that had been the case, then no revision would have lain. A revision does lie if the Court has failed to deal with the question of the applicant's pauperism with reference to the definition of a "pauper"; Muhammad Husain v. Ajudhia Prasad (4), Secretary of State v. Jillo (5).

KNOX and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ.:—This application is for revision of an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Ghazipur. The Subordinate Judge had before him an application on the part of the petitioner seeking to be permitted to sue in forma pauperis. The Subordinate Judge, as we find from the record, fixed a day for receiving whatever evidence the applicant might adduce in proof of his pauperism. He examined the applicant, and it was not shown to us that any evidence tendered by the petitioner was rejected by the Court unheard. After examining the petitioner, the Court wrote as follows:—

"The applicant has on his own showing the equity of redemption, and there is nothing to show that he cannot obtain money on its security, I believe he is not a pauper and dismiss the application with costs."

The suit which the petitioner desired to institute was a suit asking for redemption of the whole of a certain property set out in the schedule attached to the plaint. On behalf of the [240] petitioner we are referred to the case of Vedanta Desikacharyulu v. Perindevamma (1), and we were asked to hold that a person praying for the relief which the plaintiff sought, should not be refused permission to sue in forma pauperis and to be left to raise funds by mortgaging his claims. It has, however, been pointed out to us by the other side, and we accept the contention, that the petitioner in trying to raise money upon the equity of redemption would not in effect be mortgaging his claim. The equity of redemption in many cases is property of far greater value than the mortgage which the person instituting the suit may be seeking to redeem. If any obscurity remains in the present case it is the fault of the plaintiff that de did not remove that obscurity. There is no right existing to sue in forma pauperis. It is an exemption from the ordinary rule which he claims from the court and the burden of proving the exemption lies upon the person who claims the exemption. We are not satisfied that the court was in error when it held that the petitioner had not proved his pauperism. As he had not proved his pauperism the court was within its jurisdiction in refusing permission. We dismiss the application with costs.

[8th November, 1910.]

Civil Procedure Code (1908), order XXI, rules 18, 19, 20—Execution of decree—Cross-decrees—Set-off—Money decree—Decree for enforcement of charge.

Held that under the Code of Civil Procedure (1908) a court is competent to set off a simple decree for recovery of money against a decree for recovery of money by enforcement of a charge.

[Dist : 38 All. 669.]

The facts of this case were as follows :—The applicants held a simple money decree against the opposite party. The latter held a decree against the applicants for the recovery of a certain sum of money by enforcement of a charge against their immovable property. The first mentioned decree was for a smaller amount than the latter. The executing court (Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore) set off the two decrees against each other and [241] recorded the first as discharged. The applicants filed a revision in the High Court.

Babu Surendra Nath Sen (for Babu Durga Charan Banerji), for the applicants :—

The question is whether a court is competent to set off two decrees, one of which is a simple money decree and the other for the recovery of money by enforcement of a mortgage or charge. The rulings under section 246 of the old Code are conflicting. The present law on the subject of cross-decrees is embodied in order XXI, rules 18, 19 and 20 of the new Code. Rules 18 and 19 contain the general provisions as to set off. Rule 20, which is new, extends those provisions to the case of mortgage decrees. The evident intention of the Legislature is that where we have mortgage decrees the rules as to set-off shall also apply that is, two mortgaged decrees may be set off against each other. Just as rule 18 deals with the class of decrees " for the payment of two sums of money " and provides rules for their setting off inter se, so rule 20 deals with the class of mortgage decrees and their setting off inter se. It is nowhere provided that a decree of the former class may be set off against one of the latter class. The two classes of decrees obviously differ in many respects. If it be said that a mortgage decree is also a money decree because a mortgage means a debt plus security, then there was no necessity for enacting rule 20. The use of the word " decrees " in the plural in rule 20 also indicates that the Legislature contemplated that the decrees should both be mortgage decrees.

Munshi Iswar Saran, for the opposite party, was not heard.

KNOX and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ. :—Nagar Mal and others, applicants, held a decree for money against Ram Chand. Ram Chand subsequent to the passing of that decree obtained a decree for money to be enforced by sale of property. The judgment-debtors were the holders of the decree first named. The petitioners took out execution of their decree. The court executing the decree set off the first decree against the other and marked the decree, dated the 16th of December, 1908, as discharged.

[242] It is contended before us that this order setting off the two decrees against each other was an order passed without jurisdiction. The contention is that while the first decree is, in strict terms, a decree to recover a sum of money, the second decree is a decree for sale in enforcement of a charge against immoveable property and that the Legislature in enacting rule 20 under order XXI meant to draw a distinct line of cleavage between the class of decrees contemplated in rules 18 and 19 and the class of decrees contemplated in rule 20. It has not been pointed out to us that anyone will be prejudiced by a decree of the kind contemplated by rule 20 being set off against a decree of the kind contemplated in rules 18 and 19 and vice versa. On the other hand, the practice of setting off decrees in this way is a very salutary procedure, and it is equally open to argument that rule 20 was expressly inserted in order to make it clear that though a decree might be a decree for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge, it might yet be dealt with on the same lines as where both the cross decrees are decrees to recover sums of money. At any rate in the present case we see no reason for interference, and we dismiss the application with costs.

money to fulfil the conditions of a decree for pre-emption passed [243] in his favour. Amongst other defences it was pleaded that the bond had been discharged and that it was executed without necessity and not for family purposes. The Court of first instance (Additional Subordinate Judge of Meerut) found against the plaintiffs on both issues. On appeal the additional District Judge reversed the decree of the first court and decreed the plaintiff's claim. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

RICHARDS and GRIFFIN, JJ.—This and the connected appeal appeal No. 201, arise out of suits brought on foot of two mortgage bonds. The bonds were made by the father of a joint Hindu family and the property pledged was ancestral property. A number of defences were raised, and, amongst others, defences that the bonds were discharged and that they were executed by a father without necessity and not for family purposes. The Court of first instance found against the plaintiffs on both these issues. The learned Additional District Judge has reversed the decree of the Court of first instance. He finds that the bonds were not paid off and after referring in his judgment to two witnesses who are attesting witnesses of the bonds, says as follows :—"Their evidence is sufficient to show that the money was obtained for a legal necessity, for the enlargement of family estate by exercising rights of pre-emption. It was entirely the interest of the family, even though there is no legal proof that the effect was given to this purpose. I hold that the debts were incurred for legal necessity." This judgment is not very satisfactory. The Court of first instance had given somewhat substantial reason for holding that it had not been proved that the bonds were given for family necessity. He has said that the allegation was that the money was advanced for pre-emptive decrees but that no such decrees had been filed. It would have been more satisfactory if the learned Additional District Judge had gone into these matters and given his reasons for over-ruling the Court below. In the present case it is not even alleged in the bond that the consideration was money advanced to acquire property pre-empted. We feel, however, that in second appeal we must [244] accept the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge as a finding that the money was borrowed on two bonds for the purpose of complying with the terms of one or more pre-emptive decrees. We think that in the absence of evidence to the contrary it must be assumed that these decrees were complied with and that the family acquired the property, the subject-matter of the pre-emptive decrees, by means of the money that was advanced on foot of the bonds. A pre-emptive decree provides that the decree-holder shall acquire the property therein mentioned provided he pays the purchase money within a time fixed. If he does not do so, his suit is to be dismissed with costs. It is very hard to say that such a decree with the liability that is attached to it is not a debt. It cannot be urged now that a creditor who has made honest and reasonable inquiry as to the object of the loan is bound to see to the application of the money he advances, and therefore the absence of a finding that the money advanced on foot of a bond was actually applied to the pre-emptive decrees is not fatal to the plaintiff's case. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (1882), section 43 —Civil Procedure Code (1908), schedule 1, order II, rule 2—Competence to give leave to omit remedies or split causes of action not limited by pecuniary jurisdiction of Court—Suit for surplus collections made by mortgagee—Limitation—Act No. IX of 1871, schedule II, article 105—Act No. XV of 1877, section 2, schedule II, articles 105, 109—Act No. IX of 1908, schedule I, articles 105, 109.

The competence of a Court to give leave to a plaintiff to omit to sue for a relief to which he may be entitled is not affected by the pecuniary value of the relief in respect of which such leave is sought.

A suit by a mortgagor after the mortgage has been satisfied to recover surplus collections received by the mortgagee may be brought within three years from the time when the mortgagor re-enters on the mortgaged property under article 105 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act of 1877 (schedule I to the Limitation Act of 1908) and there is no restriction as to the way in which the mortgagor may obtain possession Ram Din v. Bhup Singh (1) discussed.

[245] THE facts of this case were as follows :—

The plaintiffs, mortgagors to a mortgage deed of the year 1850, brought a suit for redemption in the Court of a Munsif in 1905. They divided their claim, having obtained the leave of the Court to bring a separate suit for surplus collections alleged to have been made by the defendant mortgagee while in possession of the mortgaged property. The plaintiffs' suit for redemption was decreed on the 21st of May, 1908, and on the 21st of August of the same year they filed their suit for recovery of the surplus collections. The Court of first instance (Subordinate Judge of Aligarh) decreed the claim. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal and Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the respondents.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs respondents for surplus collections alleged to have been received by the defendant as mortgagee of the property of the plaintiffs. The mortgage was made in the year 1850, and a redemption suit was instituted in the year 1905. Before the hearing of the earlier suit an application was made to the Judge before whom the suit was pending, namely, the Munsif of Khurja, for liberty to bring a suit for recovery of surplus collections. This application was made pursuant to the provisions of section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, which corresponds with order II, rule 2, of the Code of 1908. The learned Munsif granted the applicants' prayer. The suit for redemption was decreed on the 21st of May, 1908, and on the 21st of August of the same year the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted. The claim in respect of mesne profits is for a sum of Rs. 5,500. The Court below gave a decree in the plaintiffs' favour, and against this decree the present appeal has been preferred.

Several points have been raised by the learned vakil for the appellant, with which it is unnecessary for us to deal. The first and main contention is, that the suit is not maintainable in view of the fact that the present suit was not cognizable by the learned Munsif who gave permission to bring the suit, the amount [246] of the claim being in excess of his pecuniary jurisdiction. It is admitted that the suit for redemption was within the cognizance of the Munsif of Khurja and that he was competent to try that suit. But it is said that he was not competent to give the leave which is contemplated by section 43 of the Code of 1882. That section provides that " a person entitled to more than one remedy in respect of the same cause of action may sue for all or any of his remedies, but if he omits, except with the leave of the Court obtained before the first hearing to sue for any of such remedies, he shall not afterwards sue for the remedy so omitted." We think that this rule contemplated that the leave to bring the subsequent suit should be obtained from the Court before which the original suit was pending and that the Munsif of Khurja before whom the suit for redemption was pending was competent to give leave to bring the later suit. We have on the record the order of the Munsif granting that permission. It is dated the 12th of May, 1905. So far as we can see, no other Court was competent to give leave to bring the second suit. The suit therefore out of which this appeal has arisen was not a suit brought contrary to the provisions of section 43, but a suit which the plaintiffs were authorized to bring under that section, they having obtained the permission of the Munsif of Khurja to omit the remedy in respect of which the present suit has been brought and sue for it thereafter. There is no force therefore in this contention.

The next contention addressed to us by the learned vakil for the appellants is that article 109 and not article 105 of schedule II to the Limitation Act of 1877 (schedule I to the Act of 1908) is applicable to the case. In 1871 Act No. IX of 1871 came into force, and in article 105, of the second schedule appended to that Act, provision was made for the recovery by a mortgagor of surplus collections received by the mortgagee after the mortgage had been satisfied, the period of limitation being three years from the date of receipt, i.e., the receipt of the collections. This Act was in force up to the passing of Act No. XV of 1877 which came into operation on the 1st October, 1877. Article 105 of the second schedule to that Act prescribed a period of three years' limitation for a suit for surplus collections to date from the time when the mortgagor re-enters on the mortgaged property. The same provision in [247] regard to limitation is contained in article 105 of the recent Act, Act No. IX of 1908. In section 2 of Act No. XV of 1877, it is prescribed that nothing therein contained shall be deemed to revive any right to sue barred under Act No. IX of 1871, or under enactment thereby repealed. It has been contended before us, as we have said, that the article applicable to this case is article 109 and not article 105 of the Acts of 1877 and 1908, and reliance has been placed upon a ruling of a Bench of this Court in the case of Ram Din v. Bhup Singh (1). In that case the plaintiffs, who were usufructuary mortgagors brought a suit for redemption on the ground that the mortgage debt had been satisfied from the profits of the mortgaged property. In that suit the plaintiffs did not claim any surplus profits, nor did they obtain, as in this case, leave of the Court to bring a subsequent suit for surplus profits. It was held by Mr Justice AIKMAN and Mr. Justice KARAMAT HUSAIN that the suit was barred by the provisions of section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. Mr. Justice AIKMAN in his judgment remarked :—" In my opinion this article must not be construed so as to conflict with the provision of section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure and must be deemed to refer to cases in which the mortgagor has got possession of the mortgaged property otherwise than by means of a suit for redemption." In that case the suit did conflict with the provisions of section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and therefore is unlike the suit which is now under consideration, in which there is no conflict between section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 and article 105 of the Limitation Act. But the learned Judges who decided that case go on to remark that article 105 must be deemed to refer to cases in which the mortgagor has got possession of the mortgaged property otherwise than by means of a suit for redemption. In the circumstances of that case this is merely an obiter dictum and we are not bound by it. We may say, however, that we are unable to accept the dictum so expressed. We are of opinion that if permission to bring a subsequent suit for surplus profits has been given in accordance with section 43 of the former Code of Civil Procedure or order II, rule 2, of the present Code, there being no conflict between the provisions of the [248] articles and the provisions of the section and order respectively, there is no reason why article 105 of the Limitation Act should not apply as it is expressed in terms to do. The language of the article precisely meets the case before us. In a suit by a mortgagor after the mortgage has been satisfied as in this case, a suit to recover surplus collections received by the mortgagee may be brought within three years from the time when the mortgagor re-enters on the mortgage property. Article 109 does not apply to a case of the kind. There is no restriction as to the way in which the mortgagor may obtain possession, and we see no grounds for holding, as did the learned Judges in the case above referred to, that it only applies to cases in which the mortgagor has obtaind possession otherwise than by means of a redemption suit. We are of opinion that the suit is maintainable and that the only article which can apply is article 105. Article 109 is applicable to a different state of things. It contemplates a suit for the profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant, and not a suit by a mortgagor for surplus collections.

Another point has been raised by the learned vakil for the appellants, and that is, that under Act No. IX of 1871, limitation ran from the date of the receipt of the surplus collections and that this provision was in no way affected by the provisions of Act XV of 1877, which altered the period from which limitation began to run. As we have said section 2 of the Act of 1877 prescribes that nothing therein contained should revive any right which had been barred under the earlier Statutes. We think that this contention is well founded, and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover surplus profits which were received prior to the 1st of October, 1874. To this extent the argument addressed to us must prevail. The learned advocate and vakil for the respective parties have calculated what sum should be allowed in respect of the surplus collections for the period prior to the 1st of October, 1874, and they are agreed that Rs. 500 represents the amount of the surplus collections for that period.

In other respects the decree of the Court below will stand. We direct that the parties shall pay and receive costs in proportion to failure and success in both Courts.

Act No. XLV of 1860 (Indian Penal Code) section 409—Criminal Misappropriation—Evidence—What prosecution has to prove.

On a charge under section 409, of the Indian Penal Code it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove in what manner money alleged to have been misappropriated has actually been disposed of by the accused. If it is shown that money entrusted to the accused was not accounted for nor returned by him in accordance with his duty, it lies on the accused to prove his defence.

[Dist. 18 Cr. L. J. 655=15 A. L. J. 517=40 I. C. 303.]

THE facts of this case were as follows:—The accused was a process-server attached to the Court of the Munsif of Fatehabad. On the 25th September, 1909, he was given a number of summonses for service together with the sum of Rs. 26-8-0, for diet money of the witnesses to be served. The summonses were returnable by the 5th October. On the 13th October he was given another batch of summonses, returnable on the 22nd November, together with Rs. 18 for diet money. The summonses were not returned on the due dates nor was any report made by the accused as to their service, or non-service, nor was the money returned. On demand being made the accused afterwards returned the summonses unserved, but did not even then refund the diet money, merely saying that it was lost. He never made any report either to the police or to his superior officer of the loss of the money and failed to give any satisfactory explanation of this omission. Subsequently he refunded the whole of the amount. He was prosecuted under section 409 of the Indian Penal Code. His defence was that he had been robbed of the money. The trying Magistrate found him guilty and sentenced him to six month's imprisonment. On appeal the Sessions Judge was of opinion that the prosecution had failed to establish the charge and [250] acquitted him. The Sessions Judge made the following remarks in his judgment, after setting out the facts as above-mentioned:—"On the other hand the prosecution has not produced any evidence to establish conclusively that he had misappropriated the money to his own use. There were two decrees out against him at that time, but it has not been shown that he used that money for payment of those decrees. The prosecution ought to have shown by some evidence that the amount with the embezzlement of which he has been charged had in reality been appropriated by him to his own use and that his defence was groundless." The story of the accused that the accused had been robbed was not regarded by the Sessions Judge as established. On this point he remarked :—" It is true that his defence on the face of it does not appear to be very convincing, but it does tend to throw some doubt on his guilt." The local Government appealed against the acquittal.

The Government Advocate (Mr. A. E. Ryves) for the Crown :—The Sessions Judge is wrong in law in holding that on the facts found the prosecution has failed to establish the charge. On an indictment under section 409, Penal Code, it is not incumbent upon the prosecution to prove that any sum was spent by the accused for himself, or brought to his own use on any specific occasion. The prosecution has proved that the accused failed, on due date, to return the summonses, served or unserved, and to refund the money entrusted to him or give a satisfctory explanation for his default. A sufficient prima facie case was thereby made out, and it then rested on the accused to prove that he had a sufficient and satisfactory justification for his default. He has failed to do so, and he should, therefore, have been convicted. It is no defence that the money was subsequently refunded.

Mr. D. R. Sawhny, for the accused :—

Under section 101 of the Evidence Act it is entirely upon the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused. It should be established by clear evidence that he committed a misappropriation in fact. Mere delay or negligence in rendering prompt account of the money is not enough to establish his guilt. He could be rightly convicted if he had declined to account for the money or made a false account. No specific act of misappropriation has [261] been proved. I rely on the case of Imam Din v. The Emperor (1).

RICHARDS and TUDBALL, JJ.—Kadir Bakhsh was charged under section 409, Indian Penal Code, on two counts with criminal misappropriation of certain money entrusted to him. The learned Magistrate convicted and sentenced the accused to six months' rigorous imprisonment on each charge to run concurrently. The learned Sessions Judge reversed the finding of the Magistrate and acquitted the accused. Government has appealed. Most of the facts connected with the case are practically undisputed. The accused is a process-server. He received on the 25th of September, 1909, from the Munsif's Court, Rs. 26-8-0 as diet-money for witnesses and then again he received Rs. 18 on the 13th of October, 1909. The first summonses should have been returned on the 5th of October and the second lot on the 22nd of November. The accused did not return the summonses until the 9th of December, 1909, when he returned them unserved, but without the money. He stated that the money was lost. Between the 15th of December, 1909, and the 17th of December, 1909, the accused made good the money. The evidence showed that there were decrees out against the accused which he was apparently unable to satisfy. The evidence also showed that the accused when asked to return the summonses stated that some of them had been served and some of them not. This statement of the accused was untrue, because the summonses were all finally returned unserved. The evidence further showed that until the summonses were returned unserved the accused never made any report of the loss of the money either to the police or to his own superior officer. The learned Sessions Judge says in dealing with the case :—" His defence was that he had lost the money while suffering from severe illness, but he failed to explain why he did not report the alleged loss to the police or his own superior officer. No satisfactory explanation is given as to this omission. On the other hand the prosecution has not produced any evidence to establish conclusively that he had misappropriated the money to his own use. There were two decrees out against him at that time, but it has not been shown that he used that money for payment of those decrees. [252] The prosecution ought to have shown by some evidence that the amount with the embezzlement of which he has been charged had in reality been appropriated by him to his own use and that his defence was groundless." In our opinion the learned Sessions Judge is quite wrong in the proposition which we understand him to lay down in this paragraph of his judgment. There is no doubt that if the accused had shown that he had really been robbed of the money he would not be guilty of the offences with which he is charged. It is also true that if the evidence for the defence coupled with the surrounding circumstances and the statement of the accused himself created a doubt in the learned Sessions Judge's mind as to the guilt of the accused, the latter would be entitled to get the benefit of that doubt. But it is entirely wrong to suggest that it lay on the prosecution to prove the actual mode of misappropriation of the money. They were not called upon to prove that he applied this money in the discharge of the decrees against him or in any other way. When they proved that he had not returned the money in accordance with his duty when he returned the summonses unserved, the Crown had proved their case, and it lay on the accused to prove his defence. We might refer the learned Judge to the provisions of section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act. The learned Judge himself seems to have altogether disbelieved the story of the alleged loss, which is unsupported by any evidence. No doubt some evidence was given that the accused was ill. But it by no means follows that because the accused was ill, he was robbed of the money. We think on the evidence that the conclusion arrived at by the learned Magistrate was right and that arrived at by the learned Sessions Judge was wrong. On the other hand, when we come to consider the question of punishment, we think that we ought to take into consideration the good character which the accused has borne, also the fact that he made good the money which he had misappropriated, and that it is possible also that he will lose his office, and taking all these matters into consideration we do not intend that the accused should be kept any longer in jail. We allow the appeal and finding the accused guilty of two offences under section 409, Indian Penal Code, we sentence the accused to six weeks' rigorous imprisonment on each count, the sentences to run concurrently. As [253] the accused has already served more than six weeks pending the appeal to the Sessions Judge, the result of order will be that the re-arrest of the accused will be unnecessary and the bail bond will be discharged.

Hindu law—Gift—Gift in favour of an idol which is to be subsequently consecrated—Possession given to manager.

By a deed of gift certain zamindari property was expressed to be given to an idol which was not at the time of execution in existence and possession of the property was made over to a certain person as pujari. Held that the deed was valid and created a trust in favour of the idol. Mohar Singh v. Het Singh (1) and Bhupati Nath Smrititirtha v. Ram Lal Maitra (2) referred to.

THE facts out of which this appeal arose were as follows :—

Mathura Prasad and Chhatarjit acquired a certain share in a village. They made a gift of it in favour of "Thakur Ramlalaji Mandir (or Dewalaya), mauza Kailiya," an idol which was not then in existence, and, appointing one Bhola as pujari and manager of the said idol, made over the property to him for the idol. After Mathura Prasad's death his widow and the other donor, Chhattarjit, sued to have the gift set aside on the ground that the gift was void. The Courts below set aside the gift. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal (with him Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru), for the appellants :—

The validity of the gift does not depend on there being any idol of that name : the gift was in favour of a specific deity. I rely on Mohar Singh v. Het Singh (1) and Bhupati Nath Smrititirtha v. Ram Lal Maitra (2). These were cases of wills, but on principle there is no difference between a bequest and a gift of this kind.

[254] The respondents were not represented.

RICHARDS and TUDBALL, JJ.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought for possession of certain property on the setting aside of a deed of endowment, dated the 5th of December, 1905. The suit was based on two grounds ; first, that undue influence and fraud had been practised, and secondly, that on the date of the endowment the image had not been duly consecrated and that therefore under the Hindu law the gift was invalid. The lower Appellate Court held that no fraud or undue influence had been established, but found that the idol had no legal existence at the time of the execution of the gift and that therefore the gift is invalid under the Hindu Law.

On appeal it is urged that in view of the ruling of this Court in Mohar Singh v. Het Singh (1), which followed the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Bhupati Nath Smrititirtha v. Ram Lal Maitra (2), the decision of the lower Court is wrong. The only difference between the case which is now before us and the cases which were the subject-matter of the two abovementioned decisions, is that the gift in the latter cases came into force on the death of the donor, whereas in the present case the gift was made during the lifetime of the donor. In principle there is no difference whatsoever between the two cases. A trust was clearly created in the present case for the worship of an idol which was to be consecrated and placed in a temple, and the original defendant, Bhola, was made manager and trustee thereof.

Following the two abovementioned decisions we hold that the lower court was in error on this point of law and therefore the suit should have been dismissed.

We allow the appeal and set aside the decrees of the courts below, the plaintiffs' suit standing dismissed with costs in all courts.

Hindu law—Widow—Money borrowed for legal necessity—Construction of well—Feast on return from pilgrimage—Daughter's marriage.

Money borrowed to defray the expenses of the marriage of the daughter of a Hindu widow in possession of her husband's property, is money borrowed for legal necessity, but a feast given on return from pilgrimage is not so connected with the pilgrimage as to justify its allowance as money expended for legal necessity.

Expenses incurred in the construction of a well may be a legal necessity if it be proved to be for the benefit of the estate.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

The plaintiffs were the reversionary heirs of one Nohar Singh. They instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for a declaration of their title and for possession of the property of Nohar Singh. Nohar Singh left a widow, Musammat Mendo, who executed three hypothecation bonds in favour of Zalim Singh and Chandan Singh, both since deceased. Suits were brought upon these bonds, and the property now in question was sold in execution of decrees obtained in these suits and a portion of the property was purchased by the mortgagees. The suit of the plaintiffs in the present case was resisted on the ground that the mortgages in question were executed by Musammat Mendo to raise money for legal necessity. The court below (Additional Subordinate Judge of Aligarh) held that there was legal necessity for a portion only of the loan taken by her and gave a decree accordingly to the plaintiffs for possession and for mesne profits. The learned Subordinate Judge deducted, however, from the mesne profits, the sums representing the amount borrowed by Musammat Mendo for legal necessity.

Against this decree Makhan Lal, son of Chandan Singh, appealed to the High Court.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—The plaintiffs are the reversionary heirs of one Nohar Singh. They instituted the suit out [256] of which this appeal has arisen for a declaration of their title and for possession of the property of Nohar Singh. Nohar Singh left a widow, Musammat Mendo, who executed three hypothecation bonds in favour of Zalim Singh and Chandan Singh, both now deceased. Suits were brought upon these bonds, and the property now in question was sold in execution of decrees obtained in these suits and a portion of the property was purchased by the mortgagees. The suit of the plaintiffs in the present case was resisted on the ground that the mortgages in question were executed by Musammat Mendo to raise money for legal necessity. The court below held that there was legal necessity for a portion only of the loan taken by her and gave a decree accordingly to the plaintiffs for possession and for mesne profits. The learned Subordinate Judge deducted, however, from the mesne profits, the sums representing the amount obtained by Musammat Mendo for legal necessity.

Makhan Lal, a son of Chandan Singh, appeals against this decree. His case is that Musammat Mendo obtained the entire of the loans, and executed the bonds to which we have referred, for legal necessity. The consideration for the first bond is stated to be money due on account and cash for constructing a well. The second bond was for money taken to satisfy accounts and money due on a bond of the 21st of December, 1880. The third was for money raised to meet money due on accounts and a decree of one Maula Baksh. The accounts of Chandan Singh and Zalim Singh were examined to ascertain the particulars of the expenditure referred to in these bonds, and it was ascertained that the money was advanced under three principal heads :—(1) for the construction of a well ; (2) for defraying the expenses of a feast on the return of Musammat Mendo from Gaya, and (3) for the expenses of the marriage of Mendo's daughter. The money borrowed for the expenses of the marriage of Mendo's daughter was clearly for legal necessity, and the court below rightly allowed the money so expended. But in respect of the other matters to which we have referred, it held that there was no legal necessity for the borrowing. Expenses incurred in the construction of a well may be a legal necessity if it be proved to be for the benefit of the estate; but there is no [257] evidence to satisfy us that the well which was constructed by Musammat Mendo was constructed for the benefit of the estate or for the good of her tenants and cultivators. We, therefore, think that the court below was right in disallowing this item. The other item, namely, the expenses of a feast on the return of Mendo from pilgrimage, appears also to us not to have been incurred for legal necessity. A feast given on the return of a pilgrim cannot be said to be so intimately connected with the pilgrimage as to justify its allowance as money expended for legal necessity. We know of no authority for allowing such an item as coming within the meaning of legal necessity and none has been cited to us. For these reasons we agree in the view taken by the court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Custom—Evidence—Presumption—Inference of existence of a custom from continued user of land for a particular purpose.

It is open to a court to infer from long enjoyment not exercised by permission, stealth or force, the existence of a custom. If after considering the evidence the court comes to the conclusion that an alleged custom is unreasonable or that the privilege is enjoyed as a result of permission given or that it is exercised by stealth or force the court is entitled to find against the custom. Kuar Sen v. Mamman (1) referred to.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

The plaintiffs were the zamindars of the village Jahangirabad and the defendants were cloth printers and sellers. On a particular plot in the village rain water accumulated in the rainy season. The defendants made use of this water for the purposes of their trade, according to the plaintiffs with their permission on payment of rent. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants prevented them from making other use of the pond and hence they prayed for an injunction to restrain them from interfering with them (the plaintiffs). The defendants denied the permission or payment of rent. They alleged that they [258] were making use of the pond for hundreds of years and that there was a custom prevalent in the village by which the defendants were entitled to use the water of the pond. The Court of first instance (Additional Subordinate Judge of Aligarh) dismissed the claim, but on appeal the lower appellate court (District Judge) reversed the decree. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

RICHARDS AND TUDBALL, JJ.—After hearing the parties in this appeal we have come to the conclusion that the appeal ought not to be decided without determination of some further matters by the learned District Judge. Notwithstanding that the defendants claimed actual title to the land in dispute, the case was fought out upon the issue whether or not the defendants had a right to soak their cloth and dry it on the property in dispute, which has now been found to be the property of the plaintiffs. It seems to us that the learned District Judge was of opinion that no court under any circumstances could find that a customary right existed where the evidence in support of the custom consisted of user. In this we think the learned Judge was wrong. In our opinion it is open to the court to infer from long enjoyment not exercised by permission, stealth, or force, the existence of a custom. Of course, if the court after considering the evidence came to the conclusion that the alleged custom was unreasonable, or that the privilege was enjoyed as the result of permission given, or that it was exercised by stealth, or force, he would be equally entitled to find against the alleged custom: vide Kuar Sen v. Mamman (1). We accordingly refer the following issues to the lower appellate court:—

(1) Does any custom exist by reason of which the defendants are entitled to exercise the right of soaking and drying their cloth on the plaintiff's property?

(2) Over what portion of the land in dispute are the defendants entitled to enjoy this right?

[259] In determining these issues the court will have regard to the remarks expressed above. If the court finds that there was a custom extending over some portion, but not over the whole, of the land in dispute, the court, by means of a map or otherwise, will clearly define the area over which the right exists.

The court will also be entitled to take into consideration the reasonableness of the alleged custom. For example, we consider that it might be unreasonable for tenants to claim to prevent a zamindar using a large piece of land for building, agricultural, or other purposes, merely because without interference on the part of the zamindar they had for many years used the land for the purpose of drying cow-dung cakes. In the present case we think that the court might, in conjunction with the evidence of user, consider such matters as the importance of the industry, the length of time it has been established and the possibility or impossibility of carrying on the industry elsewhere if the land is turned into a grove. The court will be entitled to take any additional evidence it finds necessary; on return of the findings 10 days will be allowed to file objections.

On return of the findings the following judgment was delivered:—

The finding on the issues referred by us is against the appellants. Objections have been filed, and the particular objection is that there was a finding by the lower appellate court before the remand that "there had been a user which extended over a period of fifty years," and that the finding of the court upon remand that there was "no evidence that the families of the appellants have constantly and without intermission made use of the tank for a very long time" is inconsistent with the first finding.

In our order of remand we explained to the learned Judge that user under certain circumstances might establish a custom. It appears that when the case went back, very few of the appellants appeared or were represented. A compromise, which the learned Judge says, was most advantageous to the appellants, was agreed upon by their representatives. Shadi Lal, however, refused to abide by the compromise and the case had to proceed. The learned Judge has found against the custom, and we have no [260] reason to think that he did not fully carry out the directions we gave him in the order of remand. We, however, were ready to hear the learned pleader for the appellants and were ready that he should refer us to the evidence which was taken in the court below originally and also on remand, so that we might dispose of the case ourselves without any further delay. The learned pleader admitted that he is not in a position to refer us to this evidence.

We, accordingly, must dismiss the appeal with costs.

MAHARAJA OF BENARES (Defendant), v. BALDEO PRASAD (Plaintiff).*

[25th November, 1910.]

Act (Local) No. II of 1901 (Agra Tenancy Act) section 177—Appeal—Question of proprietary title—Jus tertii pleaded by defendant—Third person added as a defendant—Question decided against latter.

In a suit for assessment of revenue on land in the possession of the defendant, the defendant pleaded that the land belonged, not to the plaintiff but to a third person. The third person was brought upon the record as a defendant and claimed the land as his, and, on the question of ownership being decided against him, appealed. Held that the question raised in the suit was a question of proprietary title which arose directly and substantially in the suit and that an appeal lay to the District Judge.

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of GRIFFIN, J. The facts of the case are stated in the judgment under appeal which was as follows :—

"This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit instituted under sections 150 and 158 of the Tenancy Act. The plaintiff's claim was that the defendants should be assessed to revenue in respect of certain land in their possession. According to the plaintiff he was the zamindar of the land in dispute and the defendants had no right to hold it free of revenue. The defendants pleaded that the Maharaja of Benares was the zamindar and that they were entitled to hold the land rent and revenue free. The Assistant Collector decreed the suit. There was an appeal to the Commissioner, who remanded the case with directions that the Maharaja of Benares be made a party. This was done, and the Assistant Collector again decreed the suit. The Maharaja of Benares appealed to the Commissioner, who returned the memorandum of appeal with directions that it should be presented to the District Judge. The latter has now decreed the appeal preferred to him by the Maharaja of Benares. The plaintiff comes here in second appeal. It appears that in the Court of the Assistant Collector certain public records were produced and it was on the strength of the entries in these records [261] that the Assistant Collector decided the case in favour of the plaintiff. No copies of these entries, however, were placed on the record, so that when the case came before the District Judge there was practically no evidence on the record to support the finding of the Assistant Collector. The District Judge was asked to receive certified copies of the entries in the public records, but he refused to do so. This refusal is made one of the grounds of appeal to this Court. I think that under the circumstances of the case the learned District Judge would have exercised a proper discretion in receiving certified copies of the entries in the public record which had been inspected by the Assistant Collector.

"The next ground of appeal is that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The question is one of some difficulty. The section giving a right of appeal under the provisions of the Tenancy Act is section 177 which is to the following effect: —'An appeal shall lie to the District Judge from a decree of an Assistant Collector of the first class in all suits in which (e) a question of proprietary title has been in issue in the court of first instance and is a matter in issue in the appeal.' In the present case there was an issue in the Court of first instance as to whether the plaintiff or the Maharaja of Benares was the zamindar of the land in suit, and the same issue was raised in the appeal preferred by the Maharaja of Benares. It is, however, pointed out that there was no decree against the Maharaja of Benares and as such he was not competent to appeal against the decree. I am referred to a Full Bench ruling reported in I. L. R. 3 All. 150, in which, however, the facts were different from those of the present case. There is no doubt whatever that in a series of decisions of this Court where a third party had been brought in under the provisions of section 148 of Act XII of 1881 it has been held that the remedy of an unsuccessful intervenor lay in a suit in a Civil Court and not by an appeal. It is true that the corresponding section of the Tenancy Act, section 198, does not apply to the facts of the present case, inasmuch as the suit is not a suit between a landholder and his tenant. But I think the principle deducible from these rulings is applicable to the present case. It is desirable that a question of proprietary title should be fought out and decided in a Civil Court. The present suit is a suit for assessment of revenue. So far as the original defendants are concerned, the only question was whether the land was liable to be assessed to revenue or not. The Maharaja of Benares was brought in by the order of a Revenue Court, with the result that there was a question of proprietary title raised between him and the original plaintiff. This question of title, no doubt, was of considerable importance both to the plaintiff and the Maharaja of Benares, but it made no difference to the original defendants whether they should have to pay the revenue which was assessed to the one or the other. Following, therefore, the principle laid down in I. L. R., 13 All. 364, and other rulings to the similar effect, I think the remedy of the Maharaja of Benares lay in a separate suit in a Civil Court and not by an appeal to the District Judge. I therefore allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and restore that of the court of first instance with costs."

Babu Jogindra Nath Chaudhri, for the appellant.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the respondent.

[262] STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises in a suit which was brought by Pandit Baldeo Prasad, respondent, against the principal defendants for assessment of revenue on land held by the said defendants, on the allegation that they were the tenants of the plaintiff, that the land was held rent free by them in the plaintiff's zamindari, and that it was liable to assessment to revenue. The principal defendant in answer to the claim urged that the plaintiff had no right to bring the suit inasmuch as the land in question was a part of the property of the Maharaja of Benares. The Maharaja was added as a defendant and urged that the land lay in his zamindari. The conclusion to which the court of first instance came was that the land in question lay in the zamindari of the plaintiff and that he was entitled to a decree. It accordingly made a decree to the effect that the principal defendant should pay Rs. 3-11-2, exclusive of cesses, to the plaintiff, on account of revenue. From this decree the Maharaja of Benares appealed to the District Judge of Benares. The appeal was entertained, and the learned District Judge held that as a question of proprietary title had been determined by the court of first instance, and was also raised in the appeal, the appeal lay to his court. As regards the merits of the case he held that, as the documents upon which the court of first instance relied were not on the record, the plaintiff had failed to establish his claim. The learned Judge accordingly dismissed the suit.

From this decree an appeal was preferred to this Court. The learned Judge who heard the appeal was of opinion that no appeal lay to the District Judge and accordingly reversed his decision and restored that of the court of first instance.

From the decision of the learned Judge of this Court this appeal has been preferred under the Letters Patent and the first and main contention raised is that the appeal from the decree of the court of first instance was properly entertained and heard by the learned District Judge. In our opinion this contention is well-founded. Section 177 of Act No II of 1901 provides that an appeal shall lie to the District Judge from the decree of an Assistant Collector of the first class in all suits in which a question of proprietary title has been in issue in the court of first instance and is a matter in issue in the appeal. The question [263] whether the land which formed the subject-matter of the suit was the property of the plaintiff or of the Maharaja defendant, was a question which arose directly and substantially in the suit brought by the plaintiff. The plaintiff could not obtain a decree unless that question was determined and found in his favour. The court of first instance determined the question of title and decreed it in favour of the plaintiff. The decree of that court was a decree not only against the principal defendant but also against the Maharaja of Benares. Upon the question of title it was clearly a decree against the Maharaja by which he was prejudiced. As a question of title was in issue in the court of first instance and was also in issue in the appeal, the appeal lay to the District Judge, and we think the learned Judge was right in holding that he was competent to entertain it.

As regards the merits of the case the learned District Judge commented on the conduct of the court of first instance and of the plaintiff in not placing on the record copies of documents, which the court of first instance inspected after sending for the records which contained them. The learned Judge held that as those documents were not placed on the record, he was justified in holding that there was no evidence on the record which supported the plaintiff's claim. The conduct of the court of first instance in sending for records and not directing copies to be produced was no doubt irregular, but we do not think that on that ground alone the plaintiff's claim should have been dismissed. We agree with our learned colleague that under the circumstances of the case the learned District Judge would have exercised a proper discretion if he had received certified copies of the entries of public records which had been inspected by the court of first instance. We think it is not right to visit the plaintiff with the consequences of the neglect of duty of the court of the first instance. The appeal to the District Judge was not therefore tried according to law, and we must hold that there has been no proper trial.

We recordingly allow this appeal, set aside the decree of this Court and the decree of the lower appellate court, and remand the case to the lower appellate court with directions to readmit it under its original number in the register and dispose of it on the merits after allowing the plaintiff to produce certified [264] copies of the documents relied upon by him, the originals of which had been inspected by the court of first instance. Both parties will be at liberty to adduce any further evidence which may be relevant to the matters in issue. The plaintiff will pay the costs of the appeal to this Court and of the abortive appeal to the District Judge. All other costs will follow the event.

ASHFAQ HUSAIN AND OTHERS (Judgment-debtors) v. GAURI SAHAI (Decree-holder). *

Two appeals consolidated.

[10th and 11th November, 1910 and 1st February, 1911.]

[On appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad.]

Limitation—Execution of joint decree—Decree set aside as against one of several joint judgment-debtors, against whom it has been ex parte*—Decree passed subsequently against the exempted party—Civil Procedure Code* (1882), section 108—Order on a former application whether res judicata.

A decree for sale on a mortgage was passed against several defendants jointly on the 25th August, 1900, and made absolute on the 21st December, 1901. As against one defendant, however, the decree was ex parte, and it was set aside as against her on appeal on the 11th March, 1902. Subsequently, a decree was passed on the merits against this defendant on the 15th August, 1902, and her appeal was dismissed by the High Court on the 16th November, 1904, and as against her that decree was made absolute on the 27th November, 1905. An application for execution was made against all the defendants on the 21st December, 1905, based on the decrees of the 25th August, 1900, the 15th August, 1902, the 16th November, 1904, the 21st December, 1901, and the 27th November, 1905. The defendants filed an objection to the application on the 7th February, 1906, alleging that they were no parties to the decrees of the 15th August, 1902, and the 27th November, 1905, and that, as to the decrees of the 25th August, 1900, and the 21st December, 1901, they were time barred.

Held (affirming the decision of the High Court) that the decrees of the 25th August, 1900, and the 16th November, 1904, were steps in granting the plaintiff the relief to which he was entitled. The latter decree supplemented and completed the former, and for the first time justified the plaintiff in applying for the joint execution of the decree. Time under the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) began to run from the date of the latter decree, or rather from the date it was made absolute—the 27th November, 1905, and consequently the application was not barred.

Held, also, that the plaintiff was not estopped, in the present proceedings, by the order of the 27th November, 1905, dismissing his former application for [265] execution of the 15th February, 1905, which was based on the decree of the 15th August, 1902, alone; whereas the present application was based on the joint effect of the two orders absolute of the 21st December, 1901, and the 27th November, 1905, which were in effect one decree of the later date. The applications therefore were different and the former did not operate as res judicata.

Two consolidated appeals 50 and 51 of 1909 from two decrees (27th June, 1907) of the High Court at Allahabad, which reversed orders (17th April, 1906, and 5th May, 1906) of the Subordinate Judge of Moradabad.

The only question in the appeal was whether or not the execution of a mortgage decree in favour of the respondent was barred by limitation.

The facts are stated in the judgment of their Lordships and also in in the report of the hearing before the High Court (RICHARDS and GRIFFIN, JJ.) which will be found in I. L. R. 29 All. 623.

On those facts the Subordinate Judge in his judgment on 17th April, 1906, said :—

"The decree-holder contends that he can count time from the decree of the appellate Court of the 16th November, 1904. It has been noticed that the ex parte decree was set aside so far as Sakina was concerned. The case was reheard on the merits as between the plaintiff and her only, and the decree of the 15th August, 1902, was passed as between the plaintiff and her only. She appealed from this decree, and the High Court decree was confined between her and the plaintiff only. The defendants (objectors) were not parties to the decree of the first Court of the 15th August, 1902, nor to that of the High Court of the 16th November, 1904 The cases referred to by the decree-holder, Nur-ul-Hasan v. Muhammad Hasan (1), Basant Lal v. Najm-un-nissa Bibi (2) and Ram Lal v Jagannath (3), are distinguishable, in that in each of them the decree itself was under question before the Appellate Court, though all the persons who were parties before the first Court were not before the Appellate Court. Here neither the decree of the 25th August, 1900, nor that by which it was made absolute, that is, the decree of the 21st December, 1901, was subject of the appeal. It may be added that while Sakina's appeal against the order refusing her application of section 103 was before the Court, and again when the case was being tried on the merits so far as she was concerned, and again when the decree passed on the merits was the subject of appeal to the High Court which ended in the decree of the 16th November, 1904, there was nothing that could prevent the decree-holder from putting the decree of the 21st December, 1901, in execution against the defendants and to have such interest in the property as was in the hands of these defendants sold. Nor, having [266] regard to the judgment of the High Court setting aside the ex parte decree, can it be said that the whole ex parte decree was set aside.

"I cannot help but hold that the application for execution as against the defendants (objectors) is beyond time from the decree of the 21st December, 1901. This is a case in which there were two decrees: one against the defendants (objectors), the other against Sakina. The latter decree may be executed in respect of the whole sum against the interest of Sakina, but the decree of the 21st December, 1901, is barred. I accept the objection with costs, allowing execution against Sakina and her interest only."

On the same day (17th April 1906) the Subordinate Judge made an order directing the appellants to specify the amount of the share of Sakina in the mortgaged property and postponed the further hearing of the application for execution to the 27th April, 1906.

On that date the respondent filed a petition stating that his decree was a joint decree, and the mortgage was also joint, and the Subordinate Judge thereupon, on the 5th May, 1906, ordered the execution case to be struck off on the ground that, as Sakina's share was not specified, it could not be sold.

From these two orders (17th April and 5th May, 1906) the respondent appealed to the High Court. The appeal from the former order is reported as above stated. On appeal from the latter order the High Court said :—

"Having regard to our judgment in the connected appeal, it is perhaps unnecessary to give any further judgment in this case. However, inasmuch as the Court below dismissed the application for execution against Sakina Bibi, we set it aside so far as it is inconsistent with our judgment just delivered in the connected appeal. As Sakina Bibi did not appear in the Court below and does not appear now, we make no order as to costs."

Both orders having been reversed by the High Court, the present appeals 50 and 51 were brought from the respective orders of reversal. On these appeals :—

De Gruyther, K. C. and Ross, for the appellants, contended that the application for execution dated the 21st December, 1905, was made more than three years after the decree of the 25th August, 1900, was made absolute against the appellants on the 21st December, 1901, and was therefore barred by lapse of time; and that the decree of the 16th November, 1904, was not the decree in the suit capable of being executed against the appellants. Reference was made to the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sections 88, 89; Limitation Act (XV of 1877), [267] schedule II, article 179 : Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), sections 108, 540, 545 : Sheo Prasad v. Anrudh Singh (1), Jivaji v. Ramchandra (2) and Baikanta Nath Mittra v. Aughore Nath Bose (3). It was also contended that the decree of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 27th November, 1905, became final as between the appellant and respondent, not having been appealed from, and the High Court had no jurisdiction to question its validity; and the cases of Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (4) and Beni Ram v. Nanhu Mal (5) were referred to. It was further contended that the same decree had the effect of a res judicata between the parties, and prevented the making of a further application substantially the same, reference being made to the case of Krishna Behari Roy v. Bunwari Lall Roy (6).

E. U. Eddis, for the respondent, contended that under article 179 of schedule II of the Limitation Act, 1877, limitation did not begin to run until the date of the decree of the High Court of the 16th November, 1904, and consequently the application for execution of the 21st December, 1905, was not barred. In all these proceedings the Subordinate Judge had treated the original decree against all the judgment-debtors, and the subsequent decree against Sakina as being totally distinct and independent decrees which must be executed separately; but the correct way of dealing with them, it was submitted, was to take them together, and so treated they formed only one decree against all the judgment-debtors jointly, and the whole decree should be executed at one time and in one proceeding. Reference was made to Gopal Chunder Manna v. Gosain Das Kalay (7) and Kristnama Chariar v. Mangammal (8). The reasons given by the High Court were right, and the judgment should be upheld.

De Gruyther, K. C. in reply referred to and distinguished the case of Sham Sundar v. Muhammad Ihtisham Ali (9), which [268] was referred to by the High Court as being applicable in principle to the present case.

1911, February 1st.—The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by LORD MERSEY :—

The substantial question in this case is whether an application for the execution of a decree absolute obtained by the respondent for the sale of some property which had been mortgaged to him by the appellants is barred by section 4 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877. There is also a further question, namely, whether a similar application had not already been made to the Court and dismissed on the 27th November, 1905, so as to make the present application res judicata.

The litigation which has led up to this dispute has been very long, and it has been somewhat complicated, but the story can be told for present purposes, in a few sentences.

The respondent was the holder of a mortgage of the interest of the appellants and of a lady named Musammat Sakina in certain lands. The mortgage debt, was a joint debt, and the mortgaged property was joint property. Default was made in payment of the debt, and thereupon the respondent instituted proceedings for the recovery of the money. He also asked for a decree that if payment were not made the property should be sold.

The present appellants put in defences, but the lady failed to appear. The case was tried, and the defences were found to be untrue, whereupon a decree was pronounced against all the defendants, the judgment against the lady going by default of appearance. This decree was dated the 25th August, 1900, and it was made absolute on the 21st December, 1901.

If nothing more had happened there should have been no difficulty about obtaining an order for execution of the decree. But before the decree absolute was made, namely, on the 19th September, 1900, the lady Musammat Sakina had bestirred herself and had applied for a review of the judgment of the 25th August, 1900, on the ground that she had never been served with process. The lady's application was refused by the Subordinate Judge before whom it came. This was on the 13th May, 1901. [269] The learned Judge did not believe her statement that she had no notice of the proceedings and he was of opinion that she had been put forward by the principal defendant in the suit, the present appellant Ashfaq Husain, in order to delay the execution. Musammat Sakina then appealed; and her appeal was allowed, the Court directing "that the decree passed ex parte be set aside so far as the appellant, Musammat Sakina is concerned," and that the case should be reheard upon the merits as against her. This was on the 11th March, 1902. The case was accordingly set down for rehearing, and Musammat Sakina then pleaded that the plaintiff had received certain sums of money from her deceased husband on account of the mortgage debt for which he had not given credit. This defence of payment had not been put forward by any of the other defendants, and at the hearing Musammat Sakina was unable to support it by satisfactory evidence. Accordingly judgment was given against her on the 15th August, 1902. She then again appealed, but the High Court, agreeing with the Subordinate Judge that her witnesses were unworthy of credit, dismissed her appeal. This was on the 16th November, 1904. Nothing was paid, and on the 15th February, 1905, the plaintiff filed an application against all the defendants in the action asking that the decree of the 15th August, 1902, might be made absolute, and for an order for the sale of the property. To this the appellants filed an objection alleging that the decree of the 15th August, 1902, was passed against Musammat Sakina alone, and that the original decree of the 25th August, 1900, passed against the appellants, "had become extinct" by operation of the Statute of Limitation. The objection was heard on the 27th November, 1905, when the Subordinate Judge held that the decree of the 15th August, 1902, concerned Musammat Sakina only, and that therefore no order absolute could be made against the objectors on the basis of that decree. He also found that the plaintiff had already, namely, on the 21st December, 1901, obtained a decree absolute against the objectors, so that there were two binding decrees (namely, the decree against the objectors and the decree against Musammat Sakina) in respect of the same mortgage. The learned Judge therefore came to the conclusion that he could not help but disallow the plaintiff's [270] application; and the application was accordingly dismissed. The learned Judge, however, made a decree absolute (dated the 27th November, 1905), against Sakina. Later on, namely, on the 21st December, 1905, the plaintiff filed an application against all the defendants for execution by way of sale of the property. This application was based on the decrees of the 25th August, 1900, the 15th August, 1902, the 16th November, 1904, the 21st December, 1901, and the 27th November, 1905, before-mentioned. The present appellants filed an objection to this application on the 7th February, 1906, alleging that they were no parties to the decrees of the 15th August, 1902, and the 27th November, 1905, and that as to the decrees of 25th August, 1900, and 21st December, 1901, they were time barred.

These are the facts, and the first question is whether the remedy against the present defendants is statute barred. The limitation applicable to the case is to be found in the fourth section of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, which provides that every application made after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the second schedule annexed to the Act shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence. The second schedule (Art. 179) provides that the time for an application for the execution of a decree shall be three years from the date of the decree or (where there has been an appeal) from the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court. The answer to the question, therefore, depends upon the date of the decree on which the application for execution is based. If the date of the decree is more than three years before the date of the application, then the respondent's remedy is statute barred, but otherwise not. Now the respondents originally claimed a decree against all the defendants jointly in respect of a joint mortgage debt, and he obtained on the 25th August, 1900, what purported to be a judgment in accordance with his claim. But it subsequently appeared that by reason of non-service of process on one of the defendants the judgment ought not to have been given, and accordingly the Court re-opened the matter by setting aside the judgment so far as it affected the one defendant who had not been served, and directed another inquiry to ascertain whether that defendant had any defence. It might [271] have been more in accordance with strict procedure if the Court had set aside the whole judgment and had proceeded to re-try the case as against all the defendants. But it was apparently considered that such a course would involve unnecessary delay and expense, and no one objected to the procedure adopted by the Court.

Thus the original judgment of the 25th August, 1900, was treated by the Court and by the parties as a mere step in the granting of the relief for which the plaintiff was asking and to which, as it ultimately turned out, he was entitled, namely, a decree against all the defendants jointly. The irregularity (if any) in the procedure has, in their Lordships' opinion, worked no wrong and is of no real consequence. Subsequently, and after many delays, for which the respondent was in no way responsible, it was ascertained that the defendant who alleged that she had not been served had no defence, and a decree was made against her. This decree, which was dated the 16th November, 1904, was the second step in granting to the plaintiff the relief to which he was entitled. It supplemented and completed the decree granted on the 25th August, 1900, and for the first time gave to the plaintiff that which would alone justify him in applying for the joint execution to which he was entitled. It is from the date of this last judgment (the 16th November, 1904), or rather from the date when it was made absolute (the 27th November, 1905), that the time under the statute began to run. It was then for the first time that the Court granted a complete decree to the respondent. It follows therefore that the plaintiff's remedy is not statute barred. This seems to have been the view taken by the High Court in the judgment from which this appeal is brought, and in their Lordships' opinion it is right.

As to the second point taken on behalf of the appellants, namely, that the plaintiff is estopped in the present proceedings by the judgment given against him on the 27th November, 1905, upon his application of the 15th February, 1905, it is sufficient to say that the present application is different from the application then before the Court. The application of the 15th February, 1905, was based on the decree of the 15th August, 1902, and on that alone, whereas the present application is based upon the joint [272] effect of the two orders absolute of the 21st December, 1901, and the 27th November, 1905, made against the appellants and Sakina respectively, and which two orders are in effect on the decree of the later date.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeals should be dismissed. The appellants will pay the costs.

such business they contracted in their own names with the defendants for a loan, and on the accounts a balance was struck between the parties on the 9th August, 1901. Held (reversing the decision of the High Court) that the suit as originally brought was properly constituted; that the members of the family subsequently added were unnecessary parties; and that the suit was consequently not barred.

APPEAL from a judgment and decree (2nd February 1907) of the High Court at Allahabad, which reversed a judgment and decree (24th September 1904) of the Subordinate Judge of Ghazipur.

The facts of the case are stated in the judgment of their Lordships, and also in the report of the appeal before the High Court (SIR JOHM STANLEY C. J., and SIR WILLIAM BURKITT, J.) which will be found in I. L. R. 29 All. 311, Shamrathi Singh v. Kishan Prasad.

The two issues alone material in this appeal were (1). Whether it is necessary to make other members of the family parties to the suit: if so, what persons have not been made parties, and what is the result of such omission?

(3) Is the plaintiff's suit barred by time against all the defendants, or the defendants aforesaid?

On the facts the Subordinate Judge found that the original plaintiffs with whom the contract sued on was entered into were the managing members of the joint family, and as such were entitled to institute the suit in their own names alone on behalf of themselves and the other members of the family. He was of opinion therefore on the above issues that it was not necessary that all the members of the family should be made parties to the suit, or that it should be brought on behalf of them all, that the parties added as plaintiffs by the order of the 8th September, 1904, were unnecessary parties to whom the provisions of section 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) were not applicable; and that the suit was not barred against any of the defendants.

On appeal by the defendants that decision was reversed by the High Court and the suit was dismissed. The High Court judgment will be found at page 312 of the report above referred to.

DeGruyther K. C. and B. Dube for the appellants contended that the contract of loan having been made with the original plaintiffs only, they alone were entitled to enforce it; and that they were entitled as the managing members of a joint Hindu family to maintain a suit for the recovery of a debt due to the joint family. In that view the suit was not barred by the law of limitation. Reference was made to the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) section 22, and schedule II, articles 57, 59, 64, 85, 115 and 120; and the following cases were cited and discussed, Pragi Lal v.

Under the particular circumstances of the case the added plaintiffs should in equity be considered parties to the suit from the date of its institution; and in no case ought the suit to have been wholly dismissed.

Ross, for the respondent, contended, mainly for the reasons given by the High Court, that the managing members of a joint Hindu family carrying on a joint family business were not entitled to maintain a suit in their own names against debtors of the family without joining with them either as plaintiffs or defendants all the other members of the family. He referred to Hari Gopal v. Gokaldas Kushabashet (10); Angamuthu Pillai v. Kolandavelu Pillai (11); Mayne's Hindu Law, 7th Ed., page 379 [LORD MERSEY referred to page 381]; Ramsebuk v. Ramlall Koondoo (12); and Kalidas Kevaldas v. Nathu [275] Bhagvan (13). The suit was barred by section 22 of the Limitation Act, and had been rightly dismissed by the High Court.

The appellants were not called upon to reply.

1911. February 1*st*.—The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by.

LORD ROBSON:—

The question to be determined in this appeal is whether or not the suit is barred by the Indian Limitation Act of 1877.

There is no doubt that when first brought, it was well within the statutory period of three years, but it is contended by the respondents that it was not then brought by all the proper and necessary plaintiffs, and that afterwards, when the record was amended in that respect, the statutory time had expired.

The suit was commenced by the first three plaintiffs on the record. They are the managing members of an undivided Hindu joint family governed by the Mitakshara Law, and, as such managing members, they carry on the business of money-lenders together at Hanumanganj in the district of Ballia, as a firm, under the name and style of Manorath Bhagat Dhana Ram.

The other members of the joint family do not participate in the management of that business or "shop," as it is called, and the loan transactions out of which the claim arises were negotiated and concluded by the members of the said firm alone, with the first three defendants, who are also members of another undivided Hindu family.

The accounts between the parties began in 1895, and balances were periodically agreed, between them until the 9th August, 1901, when the last balance was struck and the period of limitation began to run. On that date the defendants duly acknowledged the correctness of the balance then appearing in the plaintiffs' books, and executed a sarkhat or agreement admitting it to be due and payable by them. It is found by the learned Subordinate Judge that this agreement was made between the defendants and the first three plaintiffs, who accordingly brought their action for the balance in question on the 3rd June, 1904. The defendants objected that all the members of the family to which the plaintiffs belonged ought to be joined with them as [276] plaintiffs. On the 22nd August, 1904, the original plaintiffs, while denying that the other members of the family were necessary parties, and alleging themselves to be the proprietors and managers of the firm, yet with a view to removing the defendants' objection for what it was worth, prayed for leave to add the other members of the family as plaintiffs. Leave was accordingly given, and the amendment was made on the 8th September, 1904. By this time the three years allowed by Act XV of 1877, second schedule, article 64, had expired, and it became necessary to determine whether or not the additional plaintiffs were really necessary parties, because if not, the suit had always been properly constituted and the time under the statute stopped running on the 3rd June, 1904, within the three years.

The learned Subordinate Judge of Ghazipur decided in favour of the plaintiffs, but the High Court for the North-Western Provinces reversed his judgment. Their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge ought to be restored.

The Indian decisions as to the powers of the managing members of an undivided Hindu joint family are somewhat conflicting. It is, however, clear that where a business like money-lending has to be carried on in the interests of the family as a whole, the managing members may properly be entrusted with the power of making contracts, giving receipts and compromising or discharging claims ordinarily incidental to the business. Without a general power of that sort, it would be impossible for the business to be carried on at all, and there is no reason to doubt the correctness of the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the first three plaintiffs here were in fact entrusted with, and regularly exercised, such a power in regard to this money-lending business. He finds in broad terms that all the business relating to the shop had been carried on in the names of the first three plaintiffs only, and that all law suits relating to the shop, or the family, had also been instituted in their names alone.

Is there any principle of law, or any custom applicable to a case like this, according to which the managing members of a Hindu joint family intrusted with the management of a business must be held incompetent to enforce at law the ordinary business [277] contracts they are entitled to make or discharge in their own names? The defendant is, of course, entitled to insist on all the persons with whom he expressly contracted being made parties to the suit, and that was done in the action as originally framed in this case. There were no other parties to the contract of the 9th August, 1901, than the respondents and the first three plaintiffs. The respondents are demanding, however, that persons who are incompetent to interfere in the business of the contract, or to give a receipt under it, and are merely interested in its profits shall be treated as parties necessary to its enforcement. The High Court thought there was much to be said in favour of the view taken by the Court below, but considered the matter concluded by authority. They cited the case of K. P. Kanna

Pisharody v. V. M. Narayanan Somayajipad (1) which was a case turning on the co-ownership of land. The co-owners were an association of individuals of which only some brought the action while others supported the defendants. Knight, C. J., held that all the co-owners in such a case must join and that they could not invest the managers of their property with the right to sue in their own names or in a representative capacity. Their Lordships think that this proposition, thus broadly stated as to co-ownership, cannot be applied to the managing members of a business carried on for an undivided Hindu joint family. It was not so applied in the later case of Arunachala Pillai v. Vythialinga Mudaliyar (2), where it was stated that the managing member of an undivided Hindu family, suing as such, is entitled to bring a suit to establish a right belonging to the family without making the other members of the family parties to the suit.

Stress was laid by the High Court on the judgment in Ramsebuk v. Ramlall Kondoo (3). In that case a business was carried on for the benefit of a Mitakshara family by a firm consisting of four members of the family. The action in question was brought by two only of the partners, and the other two were not added until after the period of limitation had expired. The Court held that the plaintiffs must fail because all the co-contractors had not been added as plaintiffs. Garth C. J., says, p. [278] 824 : —" If in this case it had been found in the Court below as a fact that the contract was made between the defendant and the two original plaintiffs only there would be no difficulty in deciding in their favour, because the joinder of the other two plaintiffs would only have been a misjoinder, which, by section 31 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is never now fatal to a suit." Again (p. 825) the learned Chief Justice says :— " The lower Court has found in this case that all the four plaintiffs were partners in the concern, and that the defendants contracted with all jointly." It is to be observed that there were other members of the family who had an equal family interest in the profits of the business, but it was not suggested that they should be joined as plaintiffs or that they were to be treated as partners in the firm of managing members. In the present case, however, the defendants were originally sued by all the partners or persons with whom they had made their contract, and therefore they cannot avail themselves of Ramsebuk's case as an authority in their favour.

The same observations apply to the case of Imam-ud-din v. Liladhar (4). There the decision simply was that, except in the case of an assignment by the other surviving partner, it is not competent to one only of two or more surviving partners to sue for a debt due to the firm.

The decision in the case of Alagappa Chetti v. Vellian Chetti (5), cited by the respondents, may be supported on the ground that the single plaintiff in that case was not shown to be the managing member of the family or to be the only partner of the business with which the litigation was concerned.

Their Lordships think, however, that the proposition there laid down to the effect that the manager cannot sue without joining all those interested with him, if literally construed, goes too far.

In the opinion of their Lordships, the original plaintiffs in this case

Before Sir John Stanley, Knight, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Banerji.

[25th November, 1910.]

Civil Procedure Code (1882), sections 341 and 349—Execution of decree—Arrest of debtor—Discharge pending an insolvency petition—Re-arrest in execution of the same decree—Act No. XV of 1877 (Indian Limitation Act), schedule II, article 179—Application in accordance with law.

Where a judgment-debtor who has been arrested and sent to jail in execution of a decree obtains an interim release under section 349 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, such a release is not a discharge under section 341 of the Code and does not exempt the judgment-debtor from liability to be re-arrested in execution of the same decree. An application, therefore, in such circumstances, for execution of the decree by re-arrest of the judgment debtor is one in accordance with law and saves limitation. Shamji Deokaran v. Poonja Jairam (1) followed. Secretary of State for India v. Judah (2) dissented from.

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of KARAMAT HUSAIN J. The facts of the case appear from the judgment under appeal, which was as follows :—

"The decree-holder in this case obtained the decree on the 19th November, 1904. The first application was made on the 6th February, 1905. The prayer was to have the judgment-debtor arrested, but that application was struck off for default. The second application for execution was made on the 2nd July, 1905, and the judgment-debtor was arrested on the 3rd of July and sent to jail. The judgment-debtor applied to be declared an insolvent, and by the order of the District Judge of the 28th July, 1905, an interim order was passed by the District Judge for the release of the judgment-debtor. The application of the judgment debtor for a declaration that he was an insolvent [280] was rejected. Notice of this was given to the court executing the decree. That court, on the 30th August, 1905, gave notice to the decree-holder to proceed, and on the 6th September, 1905, the court struck off the decree-holder's application for default. On the 10th August, 1907, the decree-holder made a third application which was struck off for default on the 24th August, 1907. That application was also for the arrest of the judgment-debtor. The fourth application was made on the 3rd September, 1908, praying for the attachment of certain property of the judgment-debtor.

"The objection taken by the judgment-debtor is that this fourth application is time-barred for the following reason. The judgment-debtor, who was arrested under the second application, was released, and, as he could not be arrested for a second time, the third application of the 10th August, 1907, which was also for his arrest, could not have been made and therefore could not be regarded as a step in aid of execution of the decree.

"The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the application of the 10th August was an application in accordance with law and that therefore the execution of the decree was not barred by limitation. The judgment-debtor appealed and his appeal was rejected by the District Judge of Allahabad. He in his judgment says :—'The judgment-debtor was released under an order of the Court of Insolvency, but his application in insolvency was ultimately rejected by the Court and he was liable to be sent to jail. Therefore, as held in I. L. R. 26 Bom 652, the judgment-debtor who was arrested and imprisoned in execution of a decree and had obtained an interim protection under the Insolvency Act was liable to be arrested in execution of the same decree. Therefore the order of the Court below is correct.'

"The judgment-debtor comes here in second appeal, and it is argued by his learned advocate that if a judgment-debtor is released once, no matter how he is released, the decree-holder cannot apply for his arrest a second time. In support of his contention he relies on I. L. R. 12 Cal. 652 ; I. L. R. 20 Cal. 874 and 72 L. J. p. 46.

"The authorities relied on by the learned advocate have no application to the facts of this case. Section 341 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, Act No. XIV of 1882, enacts that 'a judgment-debtor discharged under this section is not thereby discharged from his debt ; but he cannot be re-arrested under the decree in execution of which he was arrested.'

"In the case before me the judgment-debtor was not discharged under section 341, and therefore the application for execution of the 10th of August, 1907, was an application in accordance with law. This view is supported by the ruling in Shamji Deokaran v. Poonja Jairam (1).

"The result is that I dismiss the appeal with costs."

The judgment-debtor appealed.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the appellant :—

The case of Shamji Deokaran v. Poonja Jairam (1) does not govern this case. That was under the Insolvency Act (11 [281] and 12 Vict., C. 21), which makes special provision for the re-arrest of persons released by an interim order. That Act only applies to Presidency towns. I rely on Secretary of State for India in Council v. Judah (2) and Chureh's Trustees v. Hibbard (3). If the time intervening between release and application for a second writ of arrest was greater than the original period for which imprisonment was ordered the judgment-debtor could not be re-arrested. The debtor ought to have been re-arrested immediately after his application was rejected.

Maulvi Shafi-uz-zaman, for the respondent, was not called upon.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—The question for determination in this appeal is whether or not an application of the 10th of August, 1907, made by the judgment-creditor respondent, was an application in execution of his decree made in accordance with law. The respondent obtained a decree against the appellant on the 19th November, 1904, and on an application for execution made on the 7th of July, 1905, the judgment-debtor was arrested and sent to jail. He then applied to be declared an insolvent, and by the order of the District Judge of the 28th of July, 1905, an interim order was passed for his release from imprisonment. Subsequently the application of the appellant for declaration of insolvency was rejected. An application was then made by the judgment-creditor on the 10th of August 1907, for the arrest of the judgment-debtor. An objection was raised to this application that it does not save the operation of the Statute of limitation by giving a fresh start for limitation, it being contended that it was not made in accordance with law. An application was made on the 3rd of September, 1908, praying for the attachment of certain property of the judgment-debtor, and to this application the plea of limitation was set up. The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the application of the 10th of August, 1907, was an application in accordance with law, and that therefore the execution of the decree was not barred by limitation. The judgment-debtor appealed, with the result that his appeal was dismissed. He then filed [284] a second appeal, which was also dismissed, and now he comes before us in appeal under the Letters Patent.

The learned Judge of this Court, after a review of the authorities, came to the conclusion that the application of the 10th of August, 1907, was in accordance with law, and that application saved the operation of limitation. We think in this view our learned brother was correct.

The present appeal has been ably argued by Mr. Dube, His argument was based largely upon a ruling in the case of The Secretary of State for India v. Judah (1). In that case the learned Chief Justice, Sir COMER PETHERAM, undoubtedly laid down that, under circumstances similar to those in the present case, a re-arrest of a judgment-debtor was not in accordance with law. He was clearly of opinion that " the Code only contemplates one arrest, and that if the defendant is to be remitted to jail, or if he is in custody now, he is in custody under the original arrest, and can be in custody under no other." It seems to us, with all deference, that the learned Chief Justice did not give a true interpretation to the language of section 341 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. That section provides that a judgment-debtor shall be discharged from jail in certain events, and amongst others, on the decree being satisfied, or at the request of the judgment-creditor, or on the judgment-creditor omitting to pay the allowance directed to be paid for diet, et cetera. It further prescribes that a judgment-debtor discharged under the section is not thereby discharged from his debt, but that he cannot be re-arrested under the decree in execution of which he was imprisoned.

In the present case the judgment-debtor was not discharged under that section. He obtained an interim discharge by the Court in the insolvency matter under section 349. It seems to us that the discharge so obtained by him cannot be deemed to be a discharge within the meaning of section 341 of the Code of 1882, as the learned Chief Justice seemed to think.

The case of The Secretary of State v. Judah, was the subject of consideration by a Bench of the Bombay High Court in the case of Shamji Deokaran v. Poonja Jairam (2). In that case [283] it was held by the learned Chief Justice, Sir LAWRENCE JENKINS and CROWE, J., that a judgment-debtor who has been arrested and imprisoned in execution of a decree and has obtained an interim protection order under section 13 of the Indian Insolvency Act, is liable to be re-arrested in execution of the same decree. In this case there was an appeal from a decision of STARLING, J., and the appeal came before JENKINS, C. J., and CROWE, J,. In his judgment the learned Chief Justice reviewed the authorities and criticised at length the judgment of PETHERAM, C. J., to which we have referred. The learned Chief Justice observed :—"I confess I do not follow the train of reasoning which led Sir COMER PETHERAM to the conclusion that the Code only contemplates one arrest, if by that is meant that there is anything in the Code, which forbids a second arrest apart from the express prohibition it contains. If the Chief Justice's proposition is correct, then it is difficult to see why a special prohibition was inserted in section 341. The mere fact that a general power of retaking the person is not expressly given by the Code cannot be a prohibition, for were it so, then a retaking of property in attachment would equally and by parity of reasoning be illegal; but that no one suggests." We entirely agree in the view thus expressed and in the conclusion arrived at by our learned brother against whose decision this appeal has been preferred. We therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

"A certain property was mortgaged to one Bhawani Das, ancestor of the plaintiff, in 1873. After his death his son, Nain Sukh Das, acquired proprietary rights in the property in his own name and that of his son, Madho Ram Subsequently Gulzari Lal, brother of Nain Sukh Das, brought a suit for recovery of a ¼ share in the property, and on the 7th of June 1888, obtained a decree. On the 10th of October 1891, Madho Ram conveyed the remaining ¾ share to defendant No. 1. After that date Naurang Mal, son of another brother of Nain Sukh Das, brought a suit for the recovery of a 1/12 share in the property and obtained a decree. The present suit has been brought by Chuttan Lal, brother of Naurang Mal, claiming a 1/12 share in the property. The suit was dismissed by the courts below on the ground that he was not born on the date of the alienation by Madho Ram, and that therefore he had no right in the property in suit. In second appeal it is contended that a member of a joint Hindu family born after alienation of the family property has taken place is entitled to have the alienation set aside if it is illegal for any reason. A passage from the Mitakshara is quoted in support of this contention:—'Those who are born, and those who are yet unbegotten, and those who are still in the womb, require means of support. No gift or sale should therefore be made.' Mitakshara, chapter I, section 1, clause 27. Further a passage from the ruling in Bunwari Lal v. Daya Shunker (3) is cited:—'It is well-settled that any co-parcener who was born at the time of the completion of an alienation would be entitled to sue to set aside the invalid alienation, and such alienation if invalid because made without the consent of all co-parceners then in existence can be set aside even at the instance of another co-parcener who was born subsequent to the alienation.' In the case of Hurodoot Narain Singh v.

Beer Narain Singh (1) it was found that the father had made a family arrangement which was not a legal one, and therefore the after-born son was entitled to share in the family property as if no such arrangement had taken place. There is, however, authority for an opposite view in Mayne's Hindu Law, 7th edition paragraph 342, that "a son cannot object to an alienation validly made by his father before he was born or begotten, because he could only by birth retain an interest in property which was then existing in his ancestor.' The right to sue to have an alienation set aside can scarcely be called a right to ancestral property In the present case the alienation was made not by the father but by a cousin of the plaintiff. The plaintiff's father took no steps whatever to have alienation set aside. The plaintiff, as it seems to me, must be content with his share in the family property as it actually stood at the time of his birth. In my opinion the Court below was right in dismissing the plaintiffs suit. I dismiss his appeal with costs.

Pandit Mohan Lal Sandal for the appellant :—

The sole question in the appeal is whether a subsequently born co-parceners can impugn the alienation made before his [285] birth. I rely on the following authorities :—Mitakshara Chap. I., Sec. I. Cl. 27. Bunwari Lal v. Daya Shanker (2), Hurodoot v. Beer Narain (1). The case of Chattarpal Singh v. Natha (3) is distinguishable, inasmuch as the mortgage was made by the father, and it was for the benefit of the family, in the present case, the alienation was made by a co-parcener who had no right to do so.

Mr. G. W. Dillon, for the respondents :—

The alienation was made so long ago as 1891 ; the father of the plaintiff did not object to it. The presumption is that the alienation had been made with the consent of all the co-parceners then living and that it was for their benefit. If such alienations made before the birth of a co-parcener in a joint Hindu family are to be impugned subsequently by such co-parcener, then it is very unsafe to get a sale-deed from the father of a Hindu family.

Pandit Mohan Lal Sandal, replied.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—The question raised in this appeal is whether a member of a joint Hindu family, who was born after the alienation of the family property by another member of that family can question the validity of that alienation. The facts are these :—One Bhagwan Das acquired certain property under a mortgage in 1873. He had four sons, Nainsukh Das, Gulzari Mal, Hazari Lal and Kishan Lal. Nainsukh Das, after the death of his father, purchased from the mortgagor his equity of redemption jointly with his son, Madho Ram. So that the absolute ownership of the property was aequired by Nainsukh Das and Madho Ram. Gulzari Mal, the brother of Nainsukh Das, brought a suit and obtained a decree for a fourth share of the property. After this, on the 10th of October, 1891, Madho Ram sold the remaining three-fourths share to the defendant No. 1. The plaintiff, who is one of the sons of Kishan Lal, brought the suit which has given rise to this appeal for a twelfth share of the property on the ground that the sale by Madho Ram was not binding on him.

[286] The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, holding that at the date of the sale impugned by the plaintiff he had no interest in the family property, he not having been born at that date, and that therefore he had no right of suit. This judgment was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court and on appeal to this Court the decree of the lower Appellate Court was affirmed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

33 A. 283=8 A. L. J. 15=8 I. C. 719.

The plaintiff has preferred this appeal under the Letters Patent. The learned vakil for the appellant in support of the contention that the plaintiff is entitled to maintain the suit, relies upon a passage in the Mitakshara to which reference is made in the judgment of our learned colleague. That passage in our opinion does not support the plaintiff's contention. He further relies upon a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Hurodoot Narain Singh v. Beer Narain Singh (1). That case in our opinion has no bearing upon the question before us. There it was held that a Hindu father had no power to settle ancestral property by conveyance in his lifetime or by a will to take effect after his death without the consent of all his sons living at the time; and where such a settlement was not assented to by the sons living at the time and another son was afterwards born, no subsequent assent of the former would be binding on the latter. That is not the case here. The learned vakil also relies upon a dictum of the learned Judges who decided the case of Bunwari Lal v. Daya Shunker (2). The dictum is to the effect that an alienation, if invalid, because made without the consent of all the co-parceners then in existence, can be set aside even at the instance of another co-parcener who was born subsequent to the alienation. The authority cited for this view is the case of Hurodoot Narain Singh v. Beer Narain Singh, to which we have referred. That case, as we have pointed out above, did not decide the question whether an alienation validly made at a time when a co-parcener was not in existence could be questioned by such a co-parcener. It seems to us to be clear that a plaintiff can question the validity of an alienation of such property only in which he had an interest at the date of the alienation. If his interest came into existence subsequently to the alienation, he cannot question the validity thereof. As Mr. Mayne observes in [287] his well-known work on Hindu Law, 7th edition, p. 449, "a son cannot object to alienations validly made by his father before he was born or begotten, because he could only by birth obtain an interest in property which was then existing in his ancestor." Hence, if at the time of the alienation there had been no one in existence whose assent was necessary, or if those who were then in existence had consented, he could not afterwards object on the ground that there was no necessity for the transaction. The same view was held by this Court in Chattarpal Singh v. Natha (3). In that case BLAIR and BURKITT, JJ., held that the plaintiffs, not being in existence at the date of the mortgage which was impugned in that case, had no right or interest in the property and were not therefore entitled to possession of it. As the alienation now in question was made so far back as 1891, the presumption would be, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that it was made with the assent of the other co-parceners then alive. This presumption is strengthened by the fact that the plaintiff's father, who is still alive, never questioned the validity of the transaction. Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the view taken by our learned colleague in this case is perfectly correct and is in accordance with Hindu Law. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

RAMA CHANDRA (Defendant) v. JOTI PRASAD AND OTHERS, (Plaintiffs).*

[November 1910]

Tort—Public nuisance—Closure of public road—Right of suit—Special damage.

Held that stopping a highway, and thereby rendering it necessary for a person to make a detour is such a special damage as would justify him in instituting a suit for removal of the obstruction. Hart v. Bassett (1) and Blagrave v. The Bristol Waterworks Company (2) referred to.

[Ref. 82 I. C. 659=46 All. 573.]

THE plaintiffs respondents were owners of the temple of Raghunathji at Rikhi Keshi. Beyond the grounds of the temple was a plot of land, marked R. S., on the survey maps of 1884. Round this plot ran a public road. Across the plot R. S., which belonged to the defendant, was a track which was used as [288] a short cut to the temple by pilgrims. The servants and tenants of the plaintiffs also were in the habit of using the track. In 1903, the defendants put up certain huts with fences around them and thus blocked the passage completely. Subsequently, he removed the fences, so that foot passengers could use the path thus left open, but wheeled traffic had to go by the modern and longer road, thus making a circuit of about half a mile.

The plaintiffs sued for a declaration of a right of way over the road R. S. and an injunction for demolition of the huts erected by the defendant on the ground that they inconvenienced them, their tenants, and servants in so far as they had to take a longer route than before.

The first Court found that the road R. S. had once been a public way and was still so, and dismissed the suit as no special damage had been made out.

The lower Appellate Court decreed the suit and its decision was affirmed by KARAMAT HUSAIN J., who delivered the following judgment :—

" This was a suit for an injunction and for the removal of the obstructions made by the defendant. In paragraph 4 of the plaint the plaintiffs stated as follows :— 'This unlawful act is likely to cause great loss to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs and their servants and tenants and the pilgrims are put to much inconvenience.' It is now admitted that the way regarding the obstruction of which the suit was brought is a public way and not a private one. The finding of the lower Appellate Court with reference to the particular damages suffered by the plaintiffs is in the following terms;— 'It appears that persons coming from the directions of Hardwar and bound for plaintiff's temple and dharamshala would, if cut off from access by the R. S. road, be obliged to go along the more modern road towards the Baghpur turning and then turn to the right and come back through the Rikhi Keshi village to their destination. It would be a longer and more circuitous route than that by R. S. The lower Court puts the difference at possibly half a mile, and although the inconvenience is perhaps not very great, still there is substaintial damage such as would entitle the plaintiffs to a decree." The learned advocate for the appellant argues that the finding does not show that the plaintiffs suffer any greater inconvenience than other members of the public and that therefore the plaintiffs have no cause of action. The plaintiffs, their servants and tenants are residing on the premises of the temple, and so far as the user of the public road is concerned, they have the same right as any other of His Majesty's subjects. But when the plaintiffs, their servants and tenants are obstructed in bringing their carts and ekkas from the short road, R. S., a greater inconvenience and a substantial loss of time must be caused to them, and these to my mind constitute a particular damage beyond that which is suffered by [289] other members of the public ; see Abzul Miah v. Nasir Muhammad (1) followed in Gopal Chandra Naskar, v. Gajadhar Man (2). See also Caledonian Railway Co. v. Walker's Trustees (3). where Lord Selborne observes:—'The obstruction by the execution of the work, of a man's direct access to his house or land whether such access be by a public road or by a private way is a proper subject for compensation'. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs."

The defendant appealed.

Mr. Sham Nath Mushran (with him the Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru), for the appellant :—

In so far as the road was a public one, no civil suit was maintainable unless special damages were proved. Mere inconvenience was no ground; Satku valad Kadir Sausare v. Ibrahim Aga valad Mirza Aga (4), Mahomed Alam v. Dilbar Khan (5), Siddeswara v. Krishna (6), Bhawan Singh v. Narottam Singh (7), Hubert v. Groves (8) and Ricket v. The Metropolitan Ry. Co. (9).

The little inconvenience that the plaintiff suffered here he suffered with the other members of the public. Special damage meant damage particular to the position of the plaintiff in his relation to the obstruction.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor (with him Mr. W. Wallach), for the respondent, was not called on.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent. The plaintiffs respondents are the managers of the temple of Lachmi Narain and of lands and shops appertaining thereto and also of another temple, all situate at Rikhi Kesh. The defendant appellant is Mahant of the Bharatji temple at Rikhi Kesh and the zamindar of Rikhi Kesh. There is a public road leading from the temple of the plaintiffs which was obstructed by the defendant, he having erected thereon some buildings. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted for the purpose of having the obstruction removed and of obtaining a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from obstructing the way in future. The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiff's claim, but upon appeal the lower Appellate [290] Court reversed that decision. A second appeal was then perferred which came before the learned Judge against whose decision this appeal has been preferred. He held that as the plaintiffs, their servants and tenants, who lived on the premises connected with the temple, were obstructed in bringing their carts and ekkas by the road in question, which was a shorter route, the plaintiff's thereby suffered greater inconvenience and more substantial loss of time than would be suffered by the ordinary members of the public.

The grounds upon which this appeal under the Letters Patent is supported are that it is not shown that the plaintiffs suffered any special inconvenience or injury from the obstruction. It is well-settled law that in the case of a public road a private action cannot be maintained in respect of an obstruction to it by a person, unless he suffers particular damage beyond what is suffered by him in common with all other persons affected by the nuisance ; see Bhawan Singh v. Narrotam Singh (7), also Gehanaji ban Kes Patil v. Ganpati bin Lakshuman (10). found by the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff did suffer special inconvenience and injury from the obstruction, and it is obvious that this is so; they occupy the premises belonging to the temple, and it is necessary for them to use carts for the supply of provisions and ekkas for their servants and tenants and the detour which they were obliged to make by reason of the obstruction caused to them not merely loss of time but particular inconvenience. In view of this we think that our learned brother was right in the decision at which he arrived. He upheld the view of the lower Appellate Court. The cases of Hart v. Bassett (1) and Blagrave v. The Bristol Waterworks Company (2) show that the stopping of a highway and thereby rendering it necessary for a person to make a detour was such special damage as justified him in instituting a suit for the removal of the obstruction. Before Sir John Stanley, Knight, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Banerji.

UMDA BEGAM (Plaintiff) v. MUHAMMADI BEGAM AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

Muhammadan law—Sunnis—Dower—No determination at marriage whether dower is to be prompt or deferred—Presumption—Civil Procedure Code (1908) order II, rule 2—Estoppel.

In the case of Muhammadans of the Sunni persuasion, where it is not settled at the time of the marriage whether the wife's dower is to be prompt or deferred, part will be prompt and part deferred, the proportion referable to each category being regulated by custom, or, in the absence of custom, by the status of the parties and the amount of the dower settled. Eidan v. Mazhar Husain (3) and Taufik-un-nissa v. Ghulam Kambar (4) followed.

A suit, therefore, brought by the wife during the lifetime of her husband for the recovery of the prompt portion of her dower will be no bar to a subsequent suit for the recovery of the deferred portion.

THIS was a suit brought by one Musammat Umda Begam, against the heirs of her husband to recover a portion of her dower debt. The plaintiff was the wife of one Muhammad Ali Bahadur Khan, and her dower had been fixed at Rs. 1,25,000, but it had not been determined at the time of the marriage whether such dower was prompt or deferred. In 1886, during the lifetime of her husband, the plaintiff had sued for the recovery of Rs. 25,000 out of her dower, which she said was payable to her as "prompt" dower. The defence was that the whole of the dower was "deferred," but this contention was overruled, and a decree passed in favour of the plaintiff upon the finding that, under the rules of Muhammadan law governing the parties, the amount claimed was recoverable. The present suit sought to recover a further sum of Rs. 30,000, the plaintiff relinquishing her claim to the balance. The suit was defended on the ground, amongst others, that the whole amount of the plaintiff's dower was recoverable at the time when she instituted her suit in 1886, and that, as she did not then claim the whole amount, the present suit was barred by the provisions of order II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. The Court of first instance (Subordinate Judge of Moradabad) accepted this contention and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff applied to the High Court.

[292] The Hon'ble Nawab Muhammad Abdul Majid, for the appellant.

Messrs. C. Dillon and Abdul Raoof, for the respondents.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises in a suit brought by the plaintiff appellant for a portion of her dower. She is the widow of Muhammad Ali Bahadur Khan, and it is admitted that the amount of her dower was Rs. 1,25,000. During the lifetime of her husband she brought a suit in 1886 to recover Rs. 25,000 out of her dower, which she said was payable to her ; as it had not been settled at the time of her marriage whether her dower was to be prompt or deferred. In answer to her claim her husband alleged that according to the contract entered into by the parties at the time of the marriage the whole amount of the dower was deferred. The Court overruled this contention and made a decree in the plaintiff's favour on the 26th of June, 1886, holding that the amount claimed was recoverable under the rules of Muhammadan law governing the parties. Muhammad Ali Bahadur Khan having since died, the plaintiff brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen to recover Rs. 30,000 out of the balance of her dower, and she relinquished her claim to any sum in excess of that amount.

The suit was defended on the ground, among others, that the whole amount of the plaintiff's dower was recovereble at the time when she instituted her suit in 1886, and that as she did not claim the whole amount of her dower in that suit the present claim is barred by the provisions of order II, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, which corresponds with section 43, Act XIV of 1882. This contention has found favour with the Court below, which has dismissed the claim.

This appeal is preferred by the plaintiff, and it is urged that the Court below has erred in holding that the whole amount of the dower was recoverable at the time when the suit of 1886 was instituted. In our opinion this contention is well founded, and the weight of authority is in support of it. In Eidan v. Mazhar Husain (1) Sir ROBERT STUART, C. J. and PEARSON, J., held that when at the time of marriage the payment of dower has not been stipulated to be deferred, payment of a portion of the [293] dower must be considered prompt ; and the amount of such portion is to be determined with reference to custom ; where there is no custom it must be determined by the Court with reference to the status of the wife and the amount of the dower.

The same view was held by PEARSON and OLDFIELD, JJ, in Taufik-un-nissa v. Ghulam Kambar (2). This is in accordance with what is stated in Mr. Ameer Ali's work on Muhammadan law, Vol. II, page 483. The learned author observes :—" Under the Hanafi doctrines, each case will be decided on its own individual merits. ' When it has been explained how much of the dower is prompt that much should be promptly paid. When this has not been done, regard should be had to the [qualifications of the] woman and the dower mentioned in the contract, with the object of determining how much of such dower should be considered prompt in the case of such woman; and the amount so determined is to be prompt accordingly, without regard to the proportion of a fourth or a fifth, but what is customary is also to be considered.'" In support of this view he refers to the Fatawa Kazi Khan, the Fatawa Alamgiri and the Radd-ul-Muhtar. He distinguishes the rule of the Hanafi School from that of the Shia School, under which the whole of the dower is considered prompt, when the nature of it is not mentioned in the contract of marriage, that is, how much of it is prompt and how much is deferred. The same doctrine of the Hanafi School is also stated in Baillie's Moohummudan Law (Hanifeea), p. 127, and in Shama Charan Sarkar's Tagore Law Lectures, 1873, p. 359.

The parties to this case are governed by the Hanafi doctrines, they being Sunnis. Therefore the rule referred to above applies to them and not the doctrine of the Shia School.

Mr. Dillon, the learned counsel for the respondents, relies on a passage in Sir William Macnaghten's Principles and Precedents of Muhammadan law, page 59 and also on the case of Mirza Bedar Bukht Mohummed Ali Bahadoor v. Mirza Khurrum Bukht Yahya Ali Khan Bahadoor (1). In Macnaghten's Muhammadan law it is stated that where it was [294] not stipulated at the marrige whether the dower was to be prompt or deferred, the whole amount of the dower should be regarded as prompt. This undoubtedly is the rule of the Shia School of Muhammadan law. As pointed out in the Tagore Law Lectures for 1873, no authority is cited in support of the view propounded in Sir William Macnghten's work, and it may be that the proposition which he lays down in the rule of the Shia School. In Mirza Bedar Bukht v. Mirza Khurrum Bukht their Lordships of the Privy Council after referring to the passage in Macnaghten's Muhammadan law at page 59, relied upon by the learned counsel for the respondents, held that when it is not stated whether the dower is to be prompt or deferred, the whole amount of the dower should be held to be prompt. That case was manifestly one governed by the Shia School of Muhammadan law. The parties to it were, as the judgment points out, members of the royal family of Oudh, and it is well known that the royal family of Oudh followed the Shia School of Muhammadan law; see introduction to Baillie's Moohummudan Law (Imameea). That case, therefore, must be regarded as an authority in the case of persons subject to the Shia School.

The ruling of their Lordships was followed by the Madras High Court in Masthan Sahib v. Assan Bivi Ammal (2). The arguments of counsel in that case clearly show that it was a case to which the Shia law applied. These rulings, therefore, do not support the respondent's contention.

In Inayat Husain v. Muhammad Husain (3), which is also relied upon by Mr. Dillon, a Bench of this Court held, following the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council to which we have referred and the dictum in Macnaghten's Principles and Precedents of Muhammadan law; that where it was not expressed whether the payment of dower was to be prompt or deferred, it must be held that the whole was due on demand. It does not appear from the report or from the paper book of the case, to which we have referred, whether the parties to it were governed by Shia doctrines or by the doctrines of the Hanafia School. If the learned Judges intended to lay down as a general rule applicable to all Muhammadans that the whole amount of the [295] dower in a case like this was to be deemed to be prompt, we are, with all deference, unable to agree with them. As we have pointed out above, the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council, which the learned Judges followed, related to the case of persons, governed by the Shia law, according to which the whole amount of the dower would, in such circumstances, be deemed to be prompt. But the weight of authority, as shown above, in the case of persons of the Sunni persuasion, is in favour of the view that the amount of dower payable to a wife, where it was not settled, at the time of the marriage whether it was to be prompt or deferred, would be regulated by custom, or in the absence of custom by the status of the parties and the amount of the dower settled. In this view the Court below was wrong in holding that the whole amount of the plaintiff's dower was payable to her when she instituted her suit in 1886, and that her present claim offends against the rule laid down in order II, rule 2.

We may also observe that the decision in the previous suit precludes the defendants from raising the contention which they put forward. One of the issues laid down in that suit was what was the amount of dower which the plaintiff could at time of that suit claim according to Muhammadan law, legal enactments and custom. The defendant's case was that the whole amount of the dower was deferred. The Court repelled the contention and held that the plaintiff was entitled to claim Rs. 25,000, i.e., one-fifth of the whole amount of her dower. This was the case of the defendants. In the face of that decision, it seems to us that it is no longer open to the defendants to dispute the correctness of the plaintiff's contention that the whole amount of her dower was not payable at the date of the former suit.

We accordingly allow the appeal and set aside the decree of the Court below, and, as the suit was erroneously decided on a preliminary ground, we remand it to that Court under the provisions of order XLI, rule 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure, with directions to re-admit it under its original number in the register and dispose of the other questions which arise in the case according to law. The appellants will have their costs of this appeal. Other costs will abide the event.

Appeal decreed: cause remanded.

property by a co-sharer, another co-sharer in the mouza can bring a suit for pre-emption. If he offers a low price then the vendor can sell the property to a stranger." The village was divided by perfect partition, into three mahals. New wajib-ul-arzes were drawn up after partition and the condition as to pre-emption in each ran as follows :—" Rights of co-shares inter se based on custom or agreement. The custom of pre-emption prevails. In case one co-sharer sells his share (hakikat), another co-sharer in the village (hissedar sharik mauza) can claim pre-emption. If he offers a smaller price the seller can sell it to a stranger." The plaintiff pre-emptor was a co-sharer in a different mahal from that in which the property sold was situate. The vendee was a stranger to the village. The entire body of co-sharers in the village were Muhammadans of the same stock, and continued so up to the time of partition.

Held, upon a construction of the language of the wajib-ul-arz and the circumstances of the case that the pre-emptor must succeed as against the stranger vendee, notwithstanding that a partition had taken place. Janki v. Ram Partab Singh (1) referred to.

A village was partitioned into three mahals in 1888. The wajib-ul-arzes prepared subsequently to the partition were exactly the same as the earlier wajib-ul-arz of the village. In that wajib-ul-arz a right of pre-emption was given to co-sharers " among themselves".

On a case of sale arising in one of the mahals a co-sharer in another mahal sought to pre-empt it and his claim was allowed by the Court below. The defendant vendee appealed to the High Court on the ground that being a co-sharer in a different mahal, the pre-emptor was precluded from bringing the suit by the provision in the wajib-ul-arz that the right was to be confined to co-sharers " among themselves."

Munshi Gobind Prasad, for the appellants :—

[297] The words of the wajib-ul-arz limited the right to co-sharers in the mahal ; Sahib Ali v. Fatima Bibi (2), Auseri Lal v. Ram Bhajan Lal (3), Dori v. Jiwan Ram (4), Badri Prasad v. Hashmat Ali (5) and Mathra Prasad v. Nem Chand (6).

Mr. B. E. O'Conor (with him Mr. M. L. Agarwala), for the respondent :—

No gradation in class of persons seeking to pre-empt was specified. The only idea was to keep strangers out, and the vendor was selling to a stranger. The actual word used was " mauza," which would include all the three mahals into which the village had been partitioned.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption of a share in the village of Mendla Patti in the district of Fatehpur. The vendee is a stranger to the village, while the pre-emptor is a share-holder in a mahal of the village, but not in the mahal in which the property which has been sold is situate. A partition of the village was effected in the year 1888, but prior to that partition, the wajib-ul-arz of the village had a provision in regard to pre-emption. The chapter in it dealing with pre-emption is headed " Rights of co-sharers as among themselves on the basis of custom or of agreement," and the custom is set forth as follows :—" The custom of pre-emption obtains. In case of sale of property by a co-sharer, another co-sharer in the mauza can bring a suit for pre-emption. If he offers a low price, then the vendor can sell the property to a stranger." Upon partition of the village three mahals were formed, and in one of these mahals the plaintiff is a co-sharer. This mahal however, is not, as we have said, the mahal in which the property sold is situate. Upon partition a new wajib-ul-arz was framed, and it is largely upon the language of this wajib-ul-arz that the arguments before us have been based. It is practically in identical terms with the older wajib-ul-arz of 1876, so far as regards the custom set forth therein as to the right of pre-emption. The chapter is headed "Rights of co-sharers inter se based on custom or agreement," and the material portion of the paragraph dealing with pre-emption runs as follows:—The [298] custom of pre-emption prevails. In case one co-sharer sells his share (hakiat) another co-sharer in the village (hissadar sharik mauza) can claim pre-emption. If he offers a smaller (sic) price, the seller can sell it to a stranger." Now it has been repeatedly held that the determination of an alleged right of pre-emption must depend upon the particular circumstances of each case and the evidence adduced in support of the pre-emptive right. We apply that rule to the case before us. It is clear that under the older wajib-ul-arz of 1876, upon the sale of a share in the village any co-sharer in the village had a right to pre-empt. There was, as it has been said, no gradation of parties to exercise the right. In the later wajib-ul-arz of 1888 the same right is maintained by the co-sharers in the mahal in respect of which the wajib-ul-arz was prepared. The language of the wajib-ul-arz is clear and explicit. It gives the right of pre-emption, in case of a sale to a stranger, to a sharer who is a sharer in the village, and to no other party. From its language we gather that it was the intention of the parties that the rule of pre-emption, as it had existed, should continue to prevail. In the column for observations are to be found the words "as before," which indicate that the old custom was to prevail. It has been stated by the learned counsel for the respondents, and not contradicted, that the co-sharers in the village in 1876 were Muhammadans, belonging to the same family, and that in 1888 the representatives of the same family were the sole proprietors of the village. If this be the case, then it seems to us to throw some light upon the wajib-ul-arz which is before us. As the entire body of co-sharers in the village were Muhammadans of the same stock and continued so up to the time of partition, it seems very probable that their intention in adopting the custom to be found in the earlier wajib-ul-arz was to exclude strangers, and to confine the right of pre-emption to the sharers in the village, whether they belonged to the same mahal or not. In view of the language of the wajib-ul-arz and of the circumstances, we think that the Court below rightly interpreted it.

It is very difficult to distinguish the case from that of Janki v. Ram Partap Singh (1). In that case in a village which [299] consisted of two pattis, or mahals, the wajib-ul-arz recorded a custom of pre-emption to the effect that in the case of a sale or mortgage by a shareholder, a claim for pre-emption might be brought by persons mentioned in several categories and ultimately by shareholders in the village. The village was subsequently divided into more mahals but no new wajib-ul-arz was framed. It was held by one of us and by RICHARDS, J., that a co-sharer in the village had a right of pre-emption as against a stranger, even though he did not own a share in the mahal in which the property sold was situate.

For the foregoing reasons we hold that there is no force in the appeal and we dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

LAKHAN SINGH AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. BISHANNATH (Plaintiff).*

[2nd December, 1910.]

Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-arz—Construction of document—"Apna shafi"—Muhammadan law.

A wajib-ul-arz provided that if any co-sharer of a patti in the khalisa wished to sell his share, he would do so paying due respect to his own pre-emptor (apna shafi), and if the latter refused and all the other pre-emptors of the village (aur sab shafian deh) refused then he might sell to a stranger. Held that the expression apna shafi connoted nearness in space and not a blood-relationship, and therefore where the vendor and pre-emptor were co-sharers in the same patti, the vendee being a co-sharer in a different patti, the co-sharer in the same patti had a preferential right.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

Property situate in mauza Pingri-Pingra was sold to the apellants. The respondent, who was a co-sharer in the same patti in which the property sold was situate, sued for pre-emption. The vendees were shareholders in the village in the same mahal but in a different patti. The pre-emptive clause in the wajib-ul-arz ran as follows :—"Agar koi hissedar kisi patti khalisa wah muafi bazuyafita," etc., wishes to sell his property, he should do so, "ba lehaz apna shafi ke" ; and "dar surat inkar uske aur sab shafian deh" he may transfer to a stranger. Both the Courts below decreed the plaintiff's suit.

Babu Sital Prasad Ghosh, for the appellants :—

There are two classes of pre-emptors mentioned in the wajib-ul-arz : "apna shafi" and then, "aur sab shafian deh." The terms used are very vague ; the word 'shafi' is not at all defined. The only reasonable construction to be placed on the terms of the wajib-ul-arz is that the term "apna shafi" means pre-emptors who are near to the vendor by blood-relation ; and the second category, that of "aur shafian deh," comprises pre-emptors who derive their title from nearness in space. But it is conceivable that the term "apna shafi" may be interpreted to mean pre-emptors who are near in space ; both meanings are possible. If there is such a doubt, then it is the position of the plaintiff, and not of the defendant, that gets worse ; for it is for the plaintiff, who seeks pre-emption, to establish his right to succeed, beyond a doubt. Unless and until he shows that the construction he wishes to put upon the terms of the wajib-ul-arz is the only reasonable construction, or at any rate, is a far more reasonable construction than that advanced by the defendant, he is not entitled to a decree.

Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq, for the respondent :—

As the wajib-ul-arz is silent as to the definition of the term "apna shafi," we have to look to the real meaning of the word 'shafi' for our guidance. The meaning of the word 'shafa' is conjunction and this signifies participation or contiguity in space. The word 'shafi' therefore primarily signifies a person who is near in space, and not one who is near in blood; indeed, relationship is never a ground for pre-emption under the Muhammadan Law, which is the original law of pre-emption.

Again, the term "apna shafi" is to be interpreted in connection with the use of a words "kisi patti" immediately after the words "agar koi hissedar"; the addition of these words clearly indicates an intention that "apna shafi" should refer to a pre-emptor within the same patti; relationship was not contemplated at all.

Babu Sital Prasad Ghosh, in reply:—

The original etymological meaning of the word 'shafi' as understood in Muhammadan Law, is not a proper guide. The [301] question is, what was the meaning intended by the framers of the wajib-ul-arz? Presumably they were quite ignorant of the original meaning of the Arabic word 'shafi.'

RICHARDS and TUDBALL, JJ.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect to a share in patti Munna Lal, mauza Pingri-Pingra, situated in the Shahjahanpur district. The vendor and pre-emptor were both co-sharers in the same patti. The vendee is a co-sharer in another patti, Bahadur Singh, of the same mahal. The sole question before us is whether on a true construction of the wajib-ul-arz the plaintiff respondent has or has not a preferential right over the defendant appellant. The court of first instance held that as the vendor and the pre-emptor were co-sharers in the same patti, the plaintiff had a right preferential to that of the defendant to purchase this property. On behalf of the vendee it was contended that the co-sharers in the village were divided into two classes, namely, those who were blood relations of the vendor, and those who were not. The court of first instance, however, held that the words apna shafi which occurred in the wajib-ul-arz, were equivalent to hissedar qaribi and that the plaintiff was entitled to pre-empt. The point was raised in the lower appellate court in grounds 3 and 4 of the memorandum of appeal. But as there is no mention whatsoever of the point in the lower court's judgment, it appears that it was not pressed to any extent in that court. The wajib-ul-arz runs as follows:—"If any co-sharer of a patti in the khalisa wishes to sell his share, he will do so paying due respect to his own pre-emptor (apna shafi), and if the latter refuse and all the other pre-emptors of the village (aur sab shafian deh) refuse, then he may sell to a stranger." The only other evidence in respect to the right of pre-emption is the judgment in a suit which was decided in 1902 which is of no use to us in construing the wajib-ul-arz as the point was not raised therein. On behalf of the appellant it is urged that it is for the plaintiff to clearly establish the custom upon which he relies, that the wajib-ul-arz now before the court is ambiguous in its meaning, and that it is impossible to say whether it gives a preferential right to one who is nearer in blood or to one who is nearer in space, and that the plaintiff has [302] therefore failed to establish any custom under which he has a preferential right, and that therefore the suit should be dismissed. In so far as the original meaning of the word shafi is concerned, it is quite clear that it never contemplated the question of blood relationship. It means a conjunction, and under the Muhammadan Law there are three classes of pre-emptors: co-sharers in the subject-matter of sale: co-sharers in its appurtenances, and contiguous neighbours. If the original meaning be applied to the word shafi in the present case, it is clear that the interpretation placed by the court of first instance upon this document is a correct one. It is true that there are instances in these provinces of blood relations having a prior right of pre-emption under customs existing in certain villages. But these instances are comparatively rare as compared to those in which the prior right of pre-emption depends upon nearness of space. It seems to us that the interpretation placed by the court below is justified. In addition to this it seems to us that the wording of this wajib-ul-arz, wherein it speaks of a co-sharer of a patti in the khalisa selling his right, indicated that his co-sharers in that same patti would be his pre-emptors (apna shafi). We see no reason to differ from the interpretation placed by the court below. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of KARAMAT HUSAIN J. The facts of the [303] case are fully stated in the judgment under appeal, which was as follows :—

"The facts of the case are these :—In 1881, one Achroo brought an action against Sheo Prasad for redemption of a mortgage. The judgment of the learned Munsif, dated the 30th September, 1881, a certified copy of which is on the record of this case, shows that the claim of Achroo was as follows:—Jhando, father and Purani uncle of the plaintiff, who were co-sharers in equal share in 3 pies, 16 krants, 7 jau, in pargana Jalalpur, mortgaged the property in suit in Sambat 1915, corresponding to 1859-1860 A. D , to Mohan, father of the defendants, under an oral mortgage, with this condition that the mortgagee during his possession would not be entitled to interest. One of the pleas in defence to that suit was that the transaction of mortgage was evidenced by the written mortgage deed of the 19th July, 1858. The following issues were framed by the learned Munsif :—(1) Was the mortgage in suit an oral or a written mortgage and, if it was written, was the mortgage deed produced by the defendant, the mortgage executed by the predecessors in title of the plaintiff? (2) Was the plaintiff bound to comply with the terms of the written mortgage produced by the defendant ? (3) If the mortgage was oral, then did the plaintiff offer to pay the money secured by that oral mortgage to the defendant for redemption, and if he did offer, did the defendant deny to take it? The court found that the mortgage deed produced by the defendant was a genuine document and dismissed the suit. The learned Munsif towards the end of his judgment says in effect 'when the mortgage deed (rehan-namah) is proved, it is not necessary for the court to adjudge upon other issues. As the plaintiff could not prove his claim, which under the circumstances he was bound to prove, his claim is dismissed with costs.'

" There was an appeal by the plaintiff Achroo to the lower appellate court, and the paper book of S. A. 390 of 1882, decided on the 9th March, 1883, shows that the following pleas among others were taken in the memorandum of appeal to the lower court :— (1) The evidence of the appellant's trustworthy witnesses sufficiently proves that the mortgage was effected verbally and that it was agreed upon that it should be redeemed upon repayment of the principal mortgage money. The respondent's father, as dakhilkar, has been in possession of the disputed share since the time of the mortgage alleged by the appellant, and in the Revenue Court records also he has been entered as dakhilkar, therefore the evidence of the appellant's witnesses is considered probable. The second plea attacks the genuineness of the mortgage deed. The fifth plea is as follows :—" Since the parties agree as to the amount of the principal mortgage money and the respondent admits the fact of the mortgage of the property, the dispute is only with the reference to the interest, therefore even if it be assumed that the document was correct, it was necessary to determine the rights of the parties and find the correct amount of interest, therefore the dismissal of the claim is legally improper.'

" The lower appellate court affirmed the decree of the first court. That court in its judgment said :—" The mortgage was effected between the predecessors of the present parties. Achroo says it was a verbal transaction that no interest was to be paid because the mortgagee took possession of the land and enjoyed [304] the profits. The defendant produces a deed of mortgage which he says was drawn up at the time. It is dated 19th July, 1858, and states that the land was mortgaged till Baisakh Sudi 15, 1915 (Sambat), and that Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem is payable. It is not stamped, but Sheo Prasad has paid the penalty on it. Achroo says that the deed is a forgery and that no interest was payable as the mortgagee was to enjoy possession of the land. The lower court has held this deed to be genuine and consequently dismissed the claim. In appeal, the plaintiff prays that the question of interest may be inquired into and settled, but this he should have stated to the lower court. As he contested the suit in order to redeem the land without paying interest, I do not consider myself authorized to enter now into the question of how much interest is payable. The terms of the deed produced by Sheo Prasad are not clear, and it seems strange that the mortgagee should both enjoy the profits of the land and also receive interest for his money. However, it is certain that some interest was payable and that perhaps only for the period during which the land was to be mortgaged. For the settlement of all these points, Achroo should bring a suit for settlement of accounts.'

" The plaintiff Achroo preferred a second appeal to this Court which was S. A. 390 of 1882. The point taken in the memorandum of appeal was that the lower appellate court was wrong in dismissing the appeal without finding whether or not the mortgage deed produced by the defendant was genuine. A Bench of this Court by the order, dated 13th December, 1882, sent down the following issue for determination by the lower appellate court :—' Is the mortgage deed produced by the defendant genuine or not ?' The lower appellate court submitted the following finding :—' After considering the whole of the evidence, I cannot but come to the conclusion that the deed is genuine.' Objections were taken to this finding. The first was to the effect that the finding was not based on good evidence. The second was that even if the mortgage deed was a genuine document, the learned Judge should have given the plaintiff a decree making him liable to pay interest at 24 per cent. per annum and that the Judge was wrong in referring the plaintiff to a fresh suit The appeal was dismissed by this Court by the following order :—' We accept the finding on remand and overrule the first objection. The second objection cannot be entertained now. We dismiss the appeal with costs.'

" After the above mentioned litigation, Achroo, under a sale-deed of 13th June, 1886, sold the equity of redemption to one Parichat. His widow .Mahrain, succeeded him. Niamat Ullah Khan in execution of a decree against Mahrain purchased the equity of redemption on the 21st November, 1898. His representatives are the plaintiffs in the present suit and they sue for redemption of the mortgage of the 19th July, 1858. One of the pleas taken in defence is that the suit is barred by section 13, Civil Procedure Code. The first portion of the first issue framed by the court of first instance is in these terms :—' Is the present suit barred by section 13 of the old Code in consequence of the previous suit of Achroo for redemption of the property being dismissed ?'

" The finding of the court on this portion of the issue is to the effect that the suit brought by Achroo was for redemption of the alleged oral mortgage and not for redemption of the mortgage evidenced by the deed produced by the father of [306] defendant No. 1, dated the 19th July, 1858, and that therefore the suit is not barred by the doctrine of res judicata.

" There was an appeal by the defendant to the lower appellate court which reversed the decree of the court of first instance. That court came to the conclusion that the present suit was to redeem the same mortgage, to redeem which the former suit was brought and that therefore it was not maintainable.

"The plaintiff comes here in second appeal and his contention is that the suit is not barred by the doctrine of res judicata. This contention is, in my opinion, sound. The history of the previous litigation very distinctly shows that. on the pleadings of the parties in the former suit, the basis of the claim was an oral mortgage executed between the years the 1859 and 1860, with terms different from the terms of written mortgage, dated 19th July, 1858, and the suit of Achroo was dismissed by the learned Munsif on the ground that he failed to prove his case. The former suit was not brought for redemption of the mortgage transaction embodied by the document of the 19th July, 1858. This being so, it cannot be said that the dismissal of the suit instituted by Achroo, upon an oral mortgage of a different date and with different terms, operates as res judicata in the present suit. The former suit was rightly dismissed, having regard to the ruling reported in I. L. R. 18 All. 403, and the present suit is not barred by the doctrine of res judicata. I therefore set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and remand the case under order XLI, rule 23, for trial on the merits."

The defendant appealed.

Mr. A. H. C. Hamilton, and Babu Piari Lal Banerji, for the appellant.

Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba, for the respondents.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent from an order of remand made by a learned Judge of this Court. The facts of the case are fully set forth in the judgment of our learned colleague. It is contended that the dismissal of the suit brought by the predecessor in title of the plaintiffs in 1881 is a bar to the present suit, which is one for the redemption of a mortgage of 1858. The former suit was brought for the redemption of an oral mortgage alleged to have been made at some time between 1859 and 1860. It was found in that suit that no such mortgage existed and the claim was accordingly dismissed. It was further found that the property in question was held by the defendant under a mortgage of 1858. It is this mortgage of 1858 which the plaintiffs now seek to redeem. We agree with our learned colleague that the second suit is not barred by the provisions of sections 13 and 43 of Act XIV of 1882 and of section 11 and order II, rule 2, of the [306] present Code. The learned counsel for appellant referred us to the case of Rangasami Pillai v. Krishna Pillai (1). That case has been overruled by the later Full Bench ruling of the same court in Thrikaikat Madathil Raman v. Thiruthiyil Krishnen Nair (2). This last ruling is clearly against the appellant and supports the view of our learned colleague. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

holder was responsible to the owner for their value; also that a suit by the owner against the decree-holder to recover the value of the crops and damages was not a suit cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. Goma Mahad Patil v. Gokaldas Khimji (1) followed. Mussamat Subjan Bibi v. Sheikh Sariatulla (2) not followed. Kisori Mohun Roy v. Harsukh Dass (3) referred to.

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of GRIFFIN, J. The facts of the case appear from the judgment under appeal, which was as follows : —

" The defendant, who is appellant in this Court, in execution of a decree held by him against one Tula Ram, attached, as the property of his judgment-debtor, the crops of the plaintiff Gaddar. The plaintiff filed an objection against the attachment. His objection was allowed and the attachment was removed. While the property was under attachment and in the custody of the shahna (or temporary bailiff) of the Court, most of the attached crops disappeared. The shahna was prosecuted and found guilty under section 406, I. P. C., and sentenced to imprisonment. The plaintiff has instituted the present suit to recover a sum of Rs. 457-8-0, which is made up of two items, namely, Rs. 417-8-0, the value of the crops which disappeared while under attachment and Rs. 40 as damages for the wrongful act of the defendant. The Court of first instance decreed the suit for Rs. 40, that is, for the damages claimed by the plaintiff, and dismissed [307] the suit for the value of the attached crops on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove that it was the defendant who removed them. On appeal by the plaintiffs the lower Appellate Court held that it was immaterial whether it was the defendant who had removed the crops or not. As he was a trespasser and had wrongfully attached the crops, he was responsible for the value, no matter who stole them. The learned District Judge found that the value of the crops was Rs. 92-8-0 and gave the plaintiff a decree for that amount in addition to Rs. 40, decreed by the Court of first instance. The defendant comes here in second appeal. A preliminary objection is raised that no appeal lies. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff respondent that the suit was one of a nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, and, the value being below Rs. 500, no second appeal lies. I was referred to various rulings by the learned advocates of both the parties, but it appears to me on a reference to the plaint itself that the suit is not one cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. So far as it is a suit for damages, it is clearly excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes, vide schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, clause 35 (j). As to whether the defendant appellant can be held liable for the value of the crops or not, the ruling relied on by the Court below in the case of Goma Mahad Patil v. Gokaldas Khimji (1) is a direct authority for the view taken by the learned District Judge. The facts of that case are on all fours with those of the case before me. On behalf of the appellant I am referred to the Privy Council decision in the case of Kissori Mohan Roy v. Harsukh Das (3), in which it was held that where the plaintiff's property was wrongfully attached by the defendant, the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the difference in the market value of the goods at the time of the attachment and their price when they were sold. The concluding portion of the judgment is relied on in support of the contention advanced on behalf of the appellant that he can only be held liable for the natural and necessary consequence of his act. It may be conceded that the theft or disappearance of the plaintiff's crops while under attachment was not in any sense the consequence of the wrongful attachment by the defendant. The fact remains that the plaintiff has suffered a loss for which he is entitled to compensation. His crops were wrongfully attached by the defendant appellant. He is entitled to get back his crops or their value if the crops themselves are not available. The plaintiff had a complete cause of action at the date of the wrongful attachment, and his right to the relief he was entitled to was not impaired by subsequent occurrences for which he was not responsible. In the case Kissori Mohan Roy v. Harsukh Das, referred to above, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the value of the property wrongfully attached as it stood at the date of the defendant's unlawful act. The principle to be deduced from that ruling is that the plaintiff is entitled to be restored to the statu quo ante the illegal act of the defendant. As to the ruling reported in 3 B. L. R, p. 16 quoted on behalf of the appellant, it appears that the learned Judges who decided it were largely influenced by the English law on the subject, as held in the case of Walker v. Olding. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held in Kissori Mohan v. Harsukh that the rule of law laid down in Walker v. Olding does not apply to India. This being the state of authority [308] on the question to be decided in this case, I prefer to follow the decision of the Bombay High Court in Goma Mahad Patil v. Gokaldas Khimji which is directly in point. I dismiss the appeal with costs."

The defendant appealed.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the appellant :—

Only such damages as flowed naturally from the wrongful act of the appellant could be assessed against him. That doctrine applied to cases of torts as well as of contracts; Hadley v. Baxendale (1). Reference was also made to Mayne on Damages, 7th ed. 49, 438, Mussamat Subjan Bibi v. Sheikh Sariatullah (2) and Kissori Mohan Roy v. Harsukh Das (3). It would not be in the contemplation of parties that the very man in whose custody they were would steal them.

Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq, for the respondent, was not called on.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI. J.—We are of opinion that the view taken by our learned colleague is correct. It is based on the ruling in Goma Mahad Patil v. Gokul Das Khimji (4) with which ruling we agree. The cases which have been relied upon by the learned advocate for the appellant appear to us to be distinguishable. The correctness of the decision in the case of Goma Mahad Patil v. Gokuldas Khimji has never, so far as we are aware, been questioned. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Landlord and tenant—Co-owners—Receipt for rent collusively given to tenant by one co-owner—Right of the others to sue tenant and remaining co-owner for rent.

W and others were co-owners of a shop which was let to U. The other co-owners, suspecting W's good faith, gave notice to U forbidding him to pay rent to W. They then commenced proceedings for partition of the shop. him not to pay the plaintiffs' share of the rent to Wajih-ud-din. Shortly after this notice, on the 24th of April, 1905, the plaintiffs brought a suit against Wajih-ud-din for partition and obtained a preliminary decree on the 29th of July, 1905. The final decree in the partition suit was made by the Court of first instance on the 20th of September, 1906. There was an appeal to this Court and the case was remanded for a fresh partition. This partition took place on the 9th of March, 1908. Under it the shop occupied by the defendant fell into the plaintiff's' share. It was after this partition that the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought on the 25th of March, 1908. After the preliminary decree for partition made by the Court of first instance, Muhammad Umar obtained from Wajih-ud-din, on the 31st of May, 1906, a receipt for Rs. 510, in full payment of the rent due up to that date and for an additional sum of Rs. 609-9-0 for rent in advance. The present suit relates to the period from the 1st of March, 1905, to the 29th of February, 1908. The claim was contested on the grounds that the plaintiffs were not competent to maintain the suit being part owners of the property, and further that payment to Wajih-ud-din was a full discharge for the rent due.

The Court of first instance (Subordinate Judge of Bareilly) held that no payment had actually been made, and that the receipt of the 31st May, 1906, was collusively given. Upon appeal the District Judge dismissed the suit altogether. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs appellants for recovery of arrears of rent against the first defendant who is the tenant of a house and shop belonging to the plaintiffs, and the defendant Wajih-ud-din. Wajih-ud-din owns a small share in the shop, but it is alleged that he used to collect the rent. On the 3rd of April, 1905, the plaintiffs served the first defendant, Muhammad Umar, with a notice stating that they suspected the good faith of Wajih-ud-din and directing him not to pay the plaintiffs' share of the rent to Wajih-ud-din. Shortly after this notice, on the 24th of April, 1905, the plaintiffs brought a suit against Wajih-ud-din for partition and obtained a preliminary decree on the 29th of July, 1905. It was after this partition that the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought on the 25th of March, 1908. appeal the learned District Judge without going into the various pleas raised by the appellant before him, held that the suit was "fundamentally bad" and that the plaintiffs as part owners of the property let to the defendant could not sue him for any portion of the [311] rent. In view of the circumstances of this case this opinion of the learned Judge is in our judgment erroneous. The plaintiffs served the defendant, Muhammad Umar, with a notice, forbidding him to pay their share of the rent to Wajih-ud-din. If in spite of this notice the defendant paid the rent to Wajih-ud-din, he did so at his own risk. It is manifest that if any payment of the plaintiffs' share of the rent was made to Wajih-ud-din after the issue of the notice referred to above, in spite of the plaintiffs' protest and at a time when partition proceedings were going on, such payment was made in collusion with Wajih-ud-din. This collusion is further manifest from the fact that payment is alleged to have been made not only for arrears of rent but also for rent in advance, a circumstance which is highly improbable. Under these circumstances the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit after making Wajih-ud-din a defendant to it. This case is similar to the case of Doorga Churn Surma v. Jampa Dassee (1), decided by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court. The learned counsel for the respondent has cited a number of cases, which in our opinion are distinguishable, inasmuch as in those cases no notice was issued to the tenant directing him not to pay the rent to the plaintiff's co-sharer, nor was there any collusion in those cases between the tenant and such co-sharer.

We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and restore that of the Court of first instance. The appellant will have his costs in this Court and in the court below.

Appeal allowed.

GAJADHAR PANDE AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. PARBATI (Defendant).*

[15th December, 1910.]

Act XV of 1877 (Indian Limitation Act), schedule II, article 141—Hindu law—Suit by reversioner for possession—Adverse possession by widow of predeceased son of last male owner—Limitation.

A separated Hindu died leaving him surviving two widows and a daughter-in-law the widow of his predeceased son. Upon the death of the survivor of the two widows the daughter-in-law took possession of the property and remained in possession thereof for more than twelve years, adversely to the reversioners. Held on suit by the reversioners to recover possession that their claim was time-barred, their cause of action having commenced from the death of the survivor of the two widows of the last owner. Sham Koer v. Dab Koer (2) referred to.

three sons, Pargash, Mulai and Har Dyal. Before his death he divided his property between his three sons. Mulai had a son, who predeceased him, leaving a widow Musammat Katwari Kunwar. He also left two widows, Musammats Hansrani and Sitla Kunwar. The second of these widows died in 1889, and after her death Katwari took possession of Mulai's estate and remained in possession for more than twelve years. The Court of first instance (Subordinate Judge of Azamgarh) dismissed the suit as barred by limitation, finding that more than twelve years had elapsed since the death of Katwari. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. A. F. Ryves, Munshi Govind Prasad and Babu Surendra Nath Sen, for the appellants.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor and Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq for the respondent.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen the plaintiffs claimed possession of shares in two villages as reversionary heirs of one Mulai Pande. They also claimed mesne profits. The property in dispute with other property belonged to one Ajudhia deceased. He left three sons, [313] Pargash, Mulai and Har Dyal. Before his death he divided his property between these three sons, and it is a matter not now in controversy that the three sons were separated Hindus. Mulai, accordingly, at the time of his death was entitled as a separate Hindu to his share. He had a son, named Janki, who predeceased him, leaving a widow, Musammat Katwari Kunwar. He also left two widows, namely Musammat Hansrani and Musammat Sitla Kunwar. The last of these widows died in 1889. A plea of limitation was set up by the defendants, and this plea was decided in their favour by the learned Subordinate Judge upon the ground that twelve years had elapsed before the institution of the suit from the death of Musammat Katwari.

It appears to us that in the circumstances of this case the time of the death of Musammat Katwari is immaterial, inasmuch as her husband predeceased his father, and she therefore acquired no interest in the estate of Mulai. The learned Subordinate Judge failed to appreciate the true rule of limitation governing claims by reversioners to possession of immovable property on the death of a Hindu female. The rule is to be found in article 141 of schedule II to the Limitation Act of 1877. That article provides a period of twelve years' limitation in a suit by a Hindu or a Muhammadan entitled to possession of immovable property on the death of a Hindu or Muhammadan female from the time when the female dies. In this case, on the death of the survivor of Hansrani and Sitla, the widows of Mulai, the right of the reversioners to possession of the property of Mulai accrued. As we have said, Masammat Katwari was not entitled to the estate of Mulai; and consequently, however she enjoyed possession of his property, it was not by right of inheritance as a Hindu widow.

It appears that upon the death of the survivor of Hansrani and Sitla an application for mutation of names was made to the Revenue Court, and on that occasion Kali Charan and Debi, the fathers of the present plaintiffs, objected to the name of Katwari being retained upon the record. They were referred to the Civil Court, but failed to institute any proceeding in the Civil Court to establish their title. The name of Musammat Katwari accordingly remained upon the record as owner of the property [314] of Mulai. The learned counsel for the appellant has failed to point out any evidence whatever which would go to establish that Musammat Katwari was permitted to enjoy the possession of the property by the reversioners. So far from her possession being with their consent, it appears from the documents on the record that they objected to her possession and to the receipt of rent by her from the tenants. In the absence, therefore, of any such agreement between Musammat Katwari and the reversioners, it seems to us clear that her possession must be regarded as adverse to them. If that possession was adverse to them, then the accrual of the cause of action of the plaintiffs commenced from the death of the survivor of Musammat Hansrani and Sitla and not from the death of Musammat Katwari. It is unnecessary, therefore, for us to determine the precise date of the death of Musammat Katwari.

It appears to us that inasmuch as, admittedly, Musammat Hansrani and Musammat Sitla died prior to or in the year 1889, limitation began to run against the reversioners, the present plaintiffs, in that year, and consequently the present claim is barred by limitation.

The case of Sham Koer v. Dab Koer (1) is very similar to the case before us. In that case the owner of property, Babu Nath Singh, died in November, 1862, possessed of considerable property, leaving no issue at his death, but leaving a widow and a daughter-in-law, the widow of his only son who had died in his lifetime. Immediately before, or on his death, these two widows obtained possession of the property in dispute. Sabawan Koer, the widow of Babu Nath Singh, died in 1879, and after her death Dab Koer remained in sole possession. In a suit by the reversioner it was held that possession as of right by the widow and daughter-in-law of Babu Nath Singh for twelve years barred the heirs of the deceased unless they could show that the possession was permissive. In that case the learned counsel for the appellants relied very strongly on what he suggested were the probabilities of the case, namely, that there was some arrangement between the reversionary heirs and the widows that they should take a life-interest in some villages in lieu of [315] maintenance. Their Lordships of the Privy Council repelled this contention, observing as follows :—"The learned counsel for the appellants relied very strongly on what he suggested were the probabilities of the case. He said that it was probable that there was some arrangement between the reversionary heirs and the two widows that they should take a life-interest in these villages in lieu of maintenance. If one were at liberty to guess, one might adopt that view. But their Lordships cannot say that there is any proof of any such arrangement, and the fact that the reversionary heirs did not procure the execution of the ekrarnama (which was relied on by the appellants) by the two widows, throws a certain amount of suspicion upon it". Now here in the present case, so far from there being evidence of any arrangement between the reversionary heirs and Musammat Katwari, whereby she was allowed to remain in possession in lieu of maintenance, the evidence shows that the reversioners objected to her possession and resisted the receipt of rent by her of the property.

Under all the circumstances we think that the suit fails by reason of limitation, but, as we have said, the rule stated by the learned Subordinate Judge is erroneous, inasmuch as limitation in this case ran from the death of the survivor of the widows of Mulai and not from the date of the death of Katwari. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

One Ram Autar Singh purchased a plot of land and built a house on the land. He died in 1892, leaving his son the appellant in this case a minor. The respondent, who was married to his daughter and was living with him, was appointed general attorney to his mother-in-law, the wife of the deceased, who in turn was appointed guardian of her son, the appellant in this case. The appellant came of age in 1902. Owing to some dispute a suit was then brought by Ram Kumar Singh against the respondent for accounts, and, on the 28th of November, 1902, by a registered deed the parties referred their disputes for decision to three named arbitrators. Among the matters so referred was the question of the ownership of the houses built by Ram Autar Singh. Sometime in 1903, the appellant gave notice to the arbitrators asking them not to make an award. The arbitrators took no further action after that, nor did the respondent. On the 19th of November, 1907, Jagmohan Singh brought a suit against Ram Kumar Singh under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, on the ground that he had been transferred from Allahabad and Ram Kumar Singh had taken exclusive possession of the house in his absence. The Subordinate Judge gave him a decree for joint possession with Ram Kumar Singh on the 27th of March, 1908. Thereupon, on the 31st of March, 1908, Ram Kumar Singh brought this suit for a declaration that he was the proprietor and as such in exclusive possession of the house. The defendant, Jagmohan Singh, set up a title under an oral gift from his father-in-law, said to have been made in 1890, also adverse possession, and pleaded the last clause of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act in bar. The first Court found that the plaintiff was the owner of the house, and overruled the defendant's pleas to the contrary, but held that the suit was barred by the provisions of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act, inasmuch as the plaintiff had not shown that he revoked the submission to arbitration for good cause. It accordingly dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court (F. A. No. 250 of [317] 1908). This appeal was heard by RICHARDS and TUDBALL, JJ., who delivered the following judgments :—

RICHARDS, J :—"This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for a declaration of his title to a certain house or part of the house. The plaintiff is the son of Ram Autar Singh, deceased. The defendant married a daughter of the said

Ram Autar and undoubtedly lived in the premises in dispute for a long time. The plaintiff claims that defendant lived in the house during the lifetime of Ram Autar Singh by the latter's permission and that on his father's death he (the plaintiff) was a minor. The defendant set up a title that the premises in dispute were a gift to himself and his first wife, the daughter of Ram Autar Singh. The Court below has decided on the merits of the case in favour of the plaintiff, but nevertheless dismissed the suit on the ground next hereinafter mentioned. The defendant pleaded that the parties by agreement, dated the 28th November, 1902, referred certain disputes (including the dispute as to the title of the house) to arbitration, that the plaintiff refused to perform his contract and that therefore the suit is barred by section 21 of the Specific Relief Act. There is no doubt that the contract was entered into and the agreement signed by the parties. The arbitrators were ready and willing to go on with the arbitration. Both parties at first attended before the arbitrators and produced their witnesses. The defendant says (at page 7 R) :—'The arbitrators gave Ram Kumar and myself a notice that on such and such a date there will be a meeting of the arbitraters and that we should attend. I attended the meeting regularly, but Ram Kumar did not attend I asked the arbitrators to make an award. They said that they would not make an award until both parties attended. Ram Kumar gave notice to the arbitrators not to make an award.' This evidence is not contradicted, and there can be no doubt that the award was not made because of the conduct of the plaintiff and the notice sent by him. The defendant suggests that the plaintiff sent the notice and refused to attend the proceedings because the arbitrators had intimated their opinion on one of the matters referred to them against the plaintiff. However this may be, the plaintiff has given no evidence of any kind that the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct.

"It is argued for the plaintiff that when he signed the agreement he had altogether performed the contract and that accordingly it cannot be said that he "refused to perform the contract" within the meaning of the section. It seems to me that such construction cannot be given to the section. In my opinion a contract to refer disputes to arbitration implies a contract to do all things necessary to making of a valid award so far as the parties are concerned If the contract was not rescinded, I would hold on the evidence that the plaintiff refused to perform his contract within the meaning of the section.

"It seems to me that it lay on the plaintiff to show that he had just cause for revoking the authority of the arbitrators. If the notice had any effect at all, it was to revoke the authority of the arbitrators and was itself a refusal to perform the contract. A contract once made can only be rescined by mutual agreement. Of course if after a contract to refer is entered into, nothing is done for a long time the Court might infer from the conduct of the parties that they had rescinded it by mutual consent. But this is not a necessary inference. In the present [318] case the defendant was clearly anxious to have the award. The only circumstances from which it could be implied that he agreed to rescind, was the fact that he never attempted to put in force the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure to force on the proceedings, As against the drawing of this inference it must be remembered that defendant was in possession and might well be content to rely on the strength of this position. I find it impossible to hold on the evidence that the defendant ever intended to rescind or did rescind the contract. It is lastly said that the contract to refer was not in existence" when the suit was instituted within the meaning of the section. It seems to me that if the contract was never rescinded it must be still in existence, and the mere fact that there might have been difficulty in applying the sections of the Civil Procedure Code does not render the contract non-existent. It is said that this means that the plaintiff may now be unable to have the question decided either by the Court or by arbitration. The answer is that he had his remedy until he contracted to refer and he had his remedy by arbitration until he refused to go on with the artibitration. In other words, it is his own fault I would dismiss the appeal."

TUDBALL, J :— 'The sole question which has been argued before us is whether the plaintiff's suit is barred by the provisions of the last clause of section 21, Specific Relief Act. The lower Court on the merits has held in favour of the plaintiff appellant, but has held that the suit is barred by the existence of a binding and subsisting contract to refer the dispute to arbitration. The suit was brought to obtain a declaration of the plaintiff's title to and possession of a portion of a house. The defendant respondent is the husband of the plaintiff's sister and is what is known in this country as Khana Damad, i.e., a son-in-law who resides in the house of his father-in-law. The plaintiff's father died when the plaintiff was a minor. When the latter had attained his majority a dispute arose between the parties under three different heads. In respect to one a civil suit was brought, and during the pendency thereof, the parties, on 28th November, 1902, executed an agreement in writing to refer the three matters to the arbitration of three persons. No period was fixed within which the arbitrators were to come to a decision. In regard to the matter then under litigation they passed a decision and the civil suit was decided in accordance with their award. It was in favour of the defendant. The plaintiff after that, i.e., 1903, sent a notice to the arbitrators revoking the submission to arbitration. Whether this was done with good cause has not been established in evidence, and for the purposes of this decision it may be assumed that the revocation was without good cause. The arbitrators then dropped the proceedings. It appears from the defendant's evidence that he attended the meetings of the arbitrators but they refused to go on unless the plaintiff also attended and then the latter wrote to say that he did not wish them to go to a decision. The defendant took no further action under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code to enforce a decision of the two remaining questions in dispute, one of which was the question raised in this very suit, i.e., the title to the house in dispute, which the plaintiff claims as being his ancestral property and which the defendant claims as having been gifted by the plaintiff's father to [319] his (defendant's) wife. The period of limitation for an application under section 523 (three years under article 178, Limitation Act) passed by, and neither party made any attempt to enforce a decision by the arbitrators. Then the plaintiff in the defendant's absence took possession of the house. Upon this the defendant brought a suit (November 1907), under section 9, Specific Relief Act, and obtained a decree on 27th March, 1908.

"On 31st March, 1903, the plaintiff brought the present suit. Three pleas have been raised on this appeal :—

1. That an actual submission to arbitration having been made by the parties, the plaintiff has fulfilled his contract to refer, and therefore there is no such contract in existence as would bar this suit under section 21, Specific Relief Act.

2. That the defendant not having proved that the revocation of the agreement was made without sufficient cause, the contract no longer exists.

3. That the contract to refer to arbitration has been broken up by the conduct of the parties and the bar of section 21 has ceased to be applicable.

"On the first plea, I agree with my learned brother that an agreement to refer to arbitration, implies an agreement to do everything necessary to enable the arbitrators to arrive at a decision on the question submitted to them. To hold the plaintiff had fulfilled his contract to refer merely by signing the documents of 20th November, 1902, is, I think, impossible. It is true that an agreement to refer may in this country be revoked for good cause, but until such revocation be made, it is the plaintiff's duty under this contract to do all that is necessary to enable the arbitrators to come to a decision. It cannot be said that he has fulfilled his contract to refer until he has, to the best of his power, placed before the arbitrator the material necessary for a decision.

"As to the second point, the burden of proving revocation for good cause was upon the plaintiff, and he has failed to put forward any evidence on the point. It was not for the defendant to prove the negative, i. e., the absence of good cause. On the third point, however, I think the plaintiff is entitled to a decision in his favour. In my opinion the conduct of the parties has broken up the contract to refer, and there was therefore no such contract in existence when the present suit was brought. When the plaintiff refused to go on with the arbitration, one of two courses was open to the defendant. It was open to him to take action within the period of limitation under the provisions of the law as contained in the Civil Procedure Code to enforce a decision by the arbitrators if the latter were still willing to act. If they were unwilling to act, then the arbitration was at an end, unless the Court were able to appoint other persons in their places. The other alternative open to the defendant was to drop his right to enforce a decision by the arbitrators and to leave the matter in statu quo, suing if he thought fit, for damages for breach of contract. The defendant has not elected to take the first of these two courses, nor has he sued for damages for breach of contract. As matters now stand neither party can enforce in a court of law the contract to refer. If, therefore, we hold that the jurisdiction of the ordinary court is barred by the last clause of section 21, Specific Relief Act, we shall hold that there is a cause of action which cannot be litigated between the parties either in the courts of justice or anywhere else [320] unless and until one of the arbitrators dies or is unable to act. The plaintiff has a cause of action ; he has suffered a wrong and is entitled to a remedy. In the circumstances, as they now are, he cannot, under the agreement of 20th November, 1902, enforce a decision by the arbitrators, nor can the defendant do so either. Unless the parties make a fresh contract to refer, the plaintiff cannot possibly obtain in any forum the relief to which he is entitled, if section 21 in the present circumstances is a bar. That the arbitration proceedings came to nothing is partly due to the plaintiff's action, no doubt, but it is also partly due to the inaction of the defendant, who has not taken any steps to enforce his rights under the Code of Civil Procedure. A contract which could otherwise be specifically enforced, but which by reason of the lapse of time no longer be enforced in a court of law, cannot be said to be in existence in the eye of the law. If in the present case the contract to refer were in existence, the plaintiff would be entitled to enforce even now a decision by the arbitrators under the agreement of 20th November, 1902. This he clearly is not now entitled to do, nor is the defendant so entitled. The law cannot contemplate with equanimity a state of affairs in which a party cannot resort to any forum to recover, within limitation, the relief to which he is entitled. The meaning of the last clause of section 21, Specific Relief Act, I take it, is that the law says to a party 'you have selected a forum of your own which is fully empowered to decide the issue between you and your opponent, therefore as long as that forum exists and is capable and willing to act, and you can enforce a decision therein, the ordinary courts are closed to you.' But whereby the action of both parties that other forum is now closed to both of them the law surely does not mean that the parties are not entitled to enter the ordinary forum established by it. In my opinion it is the action of both parties in the present case which has placed it beyond the power of the arbitrators to decide the issue between them. There is, therefore, no longer is existence a contract to refer and the suit is not barred. I would, therefore, accede to the appellant's contention and hear the case on the merits, but, as my learned colleague's opinion must prevail, this is not necessary."

BY THE COURT.—"The order of Court will be that the appeal be dismissed, and, as the Court is not unanimous, each party will abide his own costs of the appeal."

Against the judgment of RICHARDS, J., the plaintiff preferred an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent, which was referred to a Bench of three Judges.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, (with him Babu Balram Chandra Mukerji), for the appellant:—

Granting that the last clause of section 21, Specific Relief Act applies to the case of a submission to arbitration and the plaintiff did not revoke the submission for good cause, the plaintiff could not prevent the arbitrators from making an award. If the defendant did not acquiesce in the plaintiff's conduct, his [321] obvious remedy was to present an application to the court under section 523, Act No. XIV of 1882 (corresponding to paragraph 17, schedule II, Act No. V of 1908), and have an award made. This application should have been made within three years under Act No. XV of 1877, schedule II, article 178. If the plaintiff committed a breach of contract, the defendant should have sued him for damages. The evidence here shows that upon receiving a notice from the plaintiff, the arbitrators, who had held some meetings previously and examined witnesses, told the defendant that they had received such notice, and would not make an award until both parties attended. The defendant took no action, and the arbitrators made no award. More than six years have passed since. There is no subsisting and operative contract to refer to arbitration, it has been broken up by the conduct of all the parties concerned, it has lapsed by efflux of time. The plaintiff could not force the hands of the arbitrators, and, if there was a refusal on his part, the defendant has acquiesced in that refusal. Reference was made to Adhibai v. Cursandas Nathu (1), Tahal v. Bisheshar (2) and Atma Ram v. Sheobaran Rai (3).

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, for the respondent:—

The provisions of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, apply, for the plaintiff refused to perform his part of the contract, and revoked

the submission to arbitration without cause. He had submitted the dispute to arbitration; he then sent the notice to the arbitrators and did not appear before them. He thus refused to perform his part of the agreement by not placing the arbitrators in a position to make the award. That the arbitrators were unwilling to go on with the proceedings, and in fact did nothing for seven years, was because the plaintiff wished them to do nothing. Paragraph 22, schedule II, of the present Code of Civil Procedure, had repealed the last clause of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act for certain purposes, and applies to the present case. In the case in 8 Allahabad both parties had dropped the reference. Not so here, because the defendant was all along quite willing to abide by the decision of the arbitrators.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji was not heard in reply.

[322] STANLEY, C. J.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen the plaintiff sought a declaration of his title to a house situate in Allahabad. It appears that the house in question was built by the father of the plaintiff. He died in 1892, leaving the plaintiff his heir, at that time a minor. The defendant is married to the plaintiff's sister and he lived in the house with the plaintiff. He also, it appears, was the general attorney of the plaintiff's guardian up to the year 1902, when the plaintiff came of age. A dispute arose between the parties and a suit for accounts was instituted by the plaintiff against the defendant, and on the 20th of November, 1902, an agreement was entered into between the parties for the settlement by arbitration of their disputes, including a dispute as to the title to the house in question. Three arbitrators were appointed, but the proceedings proved abortive, by reason, it is said, of the conduct of the plaintiff. He served a notice upon the arbitrators calling upon them to desist from passing an award. In November, 1907, the defendant instituted a suit against the plaintiff under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act and obtained a decree awarding to him joint possession of the house in dispute. The present suit was then instituted, namely, on the 31st of March, 1908.

The defendant pleaded that he was entitled to the house under an oral gift from his father-in-law. This gift is said to have been made in the year 1890. He also set up a plea that he was entitled to the property by adverse possession.

The court below overruled both these pleas, but dismissed the suit of the plaintiff on the ground that it was obnoxious to the provisions of the last clause of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act. This section prescribes that certain contracts enumerated in the section cannot be specifically enforced, and concludes with this provision "that save as provided by the Code of Civil Procedure . . . no contract to refer present or future differences to arbitration shall be specifically enforced; but if any person who has made such a contract and has refused to perform it sues in respect of any subject which he has contracted to refer, the existence of such contract shall bar the suit." It appears that at the time of the settlement of issues the pleader for the [323] plaintiff intimated to the court that the plaintiff had issued a notice to the arbitrators asking them not to pass an award. As a matter of fact, the arbitrators did not pass any award, and it is contended that the notice to which I have referred was, within the meaning of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act, a refusal on the part of the plaintiff to perform the agreement to refer the disputes to arbitration.

An appeal was preferred from the decision of the lower court to this Court, and the learned Judges before whom it was argued differed in opinion. Consequently this appeal under the Letters Patent was preferred, and it is for us to say whether the conduct of the plaintiff was such as precluded him from successfully prosecuting his present suit. It is admitted that upon the merits he is entitled to succeed ; if the section in question does not bar the suit, then the decree of this Court and also of the court below must be set aside and a decree passed in his favour.

In addition to the statement of the pleader of the plaintiff to the court on the settlement of issues, to which I have referred, we have some evidence shewing what actually occurred. One of the arbitrators, Annoda Prasad Banerji, was examined, and the version which he gives of the plaintiff's interference with the arbitration is as follows :—" Badri Prasad," he stated, " told me not to make an award, as Balram Chandar, Ram Kumar Singh's pleader, was telling him not to make an award. So far as I remember, Jagmohan Singh, (the defendant) did not prevent us from making an award." Then in cross-examination he stated :—" The plaintiff, or his pleader, did not write to me a letter preventing me. The plaintiff did not prevent me. So far as I remember, Badri Prasad showed me Balram Chandar's letter."

The defendant's version of what occurred appears in his deposition. He stated that the arbitrators gave Ram Kumar (the plaintiff) and himself a notice intimating that on such and such a date there would be a meeting of the arbitrators and they should attend. He says :—" A meeting was held by the arbitrators and witnesses were also produced by him (the plaintiff) and me. The aribitrators gave Ram Kumar and myself [324] a notice intimating that on such and such a date there will be a meeting of the arbitrators and we should attend. I attended the meeting regularly ; but Ram Kumar Singh did not attend, I asked the arbitrators to make an award. They said that they would not make an award until both parties attended. Ram Kumar Singh gave notice to the arbitrators not to make an award." It seems to me apparent from this evidence that the arbitrators declined to proceed with the arbitration. It was open to them, despite any notice which may have been given to them by the plaintiff, to proceed with the arbitration and to pass an award. But for some reason or other they did not adopt this course. Further, it was open to the defendant to file the agreement under section 523 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, have an award made and a decree passed upon the award, but he did not choose to do so. Nothing was done for a number of years. The only inference that I am able to draw from the conduct of the parties is that the arbitration proceedings were abandoned. The defendant acquiesced in the inaction of the arbitrators and did not ask them to pass an award ; nor did he take the proceeding which was open to him under section 523. It appears to me that the arbitrators refused to proceed with the arbitration and with the acquiescence of the defendant, the proceedings were abandoned. In this view the judgment of my brother TUDBALL is correct.

In the case of Atma Rai v. Sheobaran Rai (1), in which an agreement had been entered into between the parties to a dispute over a piece of land to refer to arbitration, their differences on the 17th of April, 1877, and a suit was instituted on the 8th November, 1880, in regard to the land, nothing having been done under the agreement to refer to arbitration, the lower appellate court held that the agreement was a bar to the suit under section 21 of the Specific Relief Act, but upon appeal this decision was reversed by STRAIGHT and BRODHURST, JJ. They based their judgment on the fact that the submission to arbitration had been executed so far back as the 17th of April, 1877, and that at the time of the institution of the suit not only had nothing been done under [325] it, but the arbitrators had never met. They held that section 21 of the Specific Relief Act did not apply, observing that "the agreement was no bar to the present suit, that it had lapsed not having been acted upon within a reasonable time." The delay in that case was only three years, whereas in the case before us seven years were allowed to elapse without any steps being taken.

In Tahal v. Bisheshar (1) a somewhat similar question to the one before us arose. One of the parties to a contract to refer a controversy to arbitration brought a suit for part of the subject-matter so referred. The defendants pleaded as a bar to the suit the provisions of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act, but did not allege in their answer to the plaint that the plaintiff refused to perform his contract. It was held that the mere act of filing the suit on the part of the plaintiff was not tantamount to a refusal to perform his contract in the sense of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act, and the contract, the existence of which would bar a suit under the circumstances contemplated by section 21, must be an operative contract and not a contract broken up by the conduct of all the parties to it. In the course of their judgment the learned Judges say:— "The Judge in appeal held that the mere act of filing this suit on the part of the plaintiff is tantamount to a refusal to perform his contract in the sense of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act. We cannot take this view, and we hold that the contract, the existence of which would bar a suit under the circumstances contemplated by this section, must be an operative contract and not a contract broken up by the conduct of all parties to it."

Again in the case of Adhibai v. Cursandas Nathu (2), upon the question whether the actual submission of a subject in dispute to named arbitrators, followed by the attempt of one of the parties to such submission to withdraw from or to prevent an award being made upon the submission, falls within the concluding paragraph of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act, FARRAN J., in his judgment observed:—"It is not shown whether the plaintiff's withdrawal was justified or [326] not, but it appears that the defendant took no steps under section 523 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the agreement to refer filed in court, and thus render the plaintiff's attempt to withdraw from the arbitration nugatory, if it was in fact unjustifiable. This, under the ruling in Pestonjee v. Manockji (3), it appears, he might have done. There is nothing to show that they did not acquiesce in it, (i.e. the withdrawal), in which case the ruling in Tahal v. Bisheshar would apply."

It appears to me that in this case by mutual consent the contract to refer to arbitration was rescinded, and further, as I think, the arbitrators declined to proceed with the arbitration. Consequently the arbitration proceedings became abortive. Under the circumstances there is no bar to the plaintiff's suit and it ought to be decreed.

BANERJI, J.—I am of the same opinion. The plaintiff's suit would be barred by the provisions of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act, if at the date of the suit there was in existence a contract to refer the controversy between the parties to arbitration. The circumstances of this case clearly show that no such contract was in existence. As pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, the arbitrators refused to act and the defendant acquiesced in the reference becoming abortive. No action was taken for a number of years, and nothing was done to enforce the agreement. There was therefore no bar to the maintenance of the suit and the claim ought to have been decreed. I agree in the order proposed.

GRIFFIN, J.—In my opinion the inference to be drawn from the conduct of the parties and of the arbitrators, and more particularly from the lapse of time since the agreement to refer to arbitration, is that that agreement had ceased to be operative at the date of the institution of the suit. There was, therefore, no contract in existence which under the provisions of the last clause of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act would be a bar to the suit. I agree in the order proposed.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal [327] be allowed, the decree of this Court and also of the lower court be set aside, and the plaintiff's claim be decreed with costs in all courts.

Appeal decreed.

Act No. VII of 1889 (Succession Certificate Act), sections 2, 4—Certificate not to be given for collection of part only of a debt—Debt in part irrecoverable—Muhammadan law—Dower.

Held that no certificate could be granted to one of the heirs of a Muhammadan lady, who had died leaving her dower debt unrealized, for collection merely of a part of the dower debt of the deceased.

Muhammad Ali Khan v. Fultun Bibi (1) and Bismillah Begam v. Tawassul Husain (2) followed. Shitab Dei v. Debi Prasad (3) and Akbar Khan v. Bilkisara Begam (4) referred to.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—Musammat Kalandari Begam applied under section 11 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889) for a certificate to collect a debt valued at Rs. 9,387, being a part of the dower due to her deceased sister. The amount of the dower was Rs. 25,000 plus two gold dinars. The deceased lady left as her heirs her husband, her mother and her sister (the applicant). The applicant's share out of the dower amounted to Rs. 9,387. It was alleged in the application that the share of the mother, Musammat Sahibjan, was discharged by relinquishment or mutual agreement; the exact nature of the transaction was not set forth. This share was accordingly deducted from the amount of the dower, as was also the share which came by inheritance to the husband, against whom the dower was due ; and the application was made for the balance, namely, Rs. 9,387. Objections were taken that the whole of the dower debt was not included in the application and that duty had not been paid on the whole amount. The Judge found that the share of Musammat Sahibjan was irrecoverable, having become time-barred. He granted the application.

[328] Hence this appeal, which came up for hearing before KNOX and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ., who referred the matter to a Full Bench.

Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan (for The Hon'ble Nawab Muhammad Abdul Majid), for the appellant :—

The application is admittedly for a portion only of the dower debt. A certificate to collect a part of a debt cannot be granted. The object of the Succession Certificate Act is to safeguard the debtors of a deceased person. If certificates were granted for parts of debt piecemeal, the result would be to jeopardise the debtors and unnecessarily harass them by a multiplicity of suits. The Act therefore contemplates that only one certificate should be granted for the whole of a debt and the grantee of the certificate should become a trustee as it were for the co-creditors. There is an uniform course of decisions laying down that a certificate can be granted only for the whole of a debt. The first case is that of Shitab Dei v. Debi Prasad (1), the case of In the matter of the petition of Indarman (2) may appear to be somewhat against me; but the facts were different. Later cases are those of Muhammad Ali Khan v. Puttan Bibi (3) and Bismilla Begam v. Tawassul Husain (4). The last case is identical with the present one. If a portion of the debt is relinquished, it becomes irrecoverable, just as a portion which has become time-barred is irrecoverable ; there is no distinction of principle between the two cases.

Munshi Gulzari Lal, for the respondent.

The application covers the whole of that portion of the dower debt which is recoverable. No suit can be brought to recover the portion belonging to Musammat Sahibjan, which has become time-barred; nor the portion of the debt which has been inherited by the husband who himself is the debtor. The application specifically sets forth that the portion of the debt not included in it is irrecoverable for the reasons mentioned therein. The rulings of this Court do not lay down anything more than that the application should include the whole of the recoverable portion of the debt, and that the stamp duty should be paid on that amount. [329] In the case of Muhammad Ali Khan v. Puttan Bibi (5) it is clearly laid down that the duty is to be paid, not for the whole of the debt, but for that portion of it which at the date of the application is due and payable. In that case, the husband's share, "which he holds in his own hands," and a son's share, which was discharged, were directed to be deducted from the whole dower debt and duty to be paid on the balance. The duty being payable only on the recoverable balance, the amount to be entered in the application for the certificate would be that balance and not the whole of the original debt, for, under article 12, schedule I, of the Court Fees Act, the duty is payable on the amount entered in the application. The case of Akbar Khan v. Bilkisara Begam (6) is in my favour. In that case, too, the portion of the debt which had been remitted and discharged was deducted and duty was directed to be paid on the balance only. In the case reported in I. L. R. 32 All. it was not held that the duty should be paid on the whole of Rs. 57,000. That was a case in which there was a voluntary relinquishment of a portion; in the present case a portion has become extinguished by operation of law. The reason for the rule that a certificate should not be granted for a part of a debt is the avoidance of a multiplicity of suits and of unnecessary harrassment of the debtor by a number of proceedings which would arise if the debt were allowed to be collected piecemeal. But in the present case, there can be no further proceedings as the balance of the debt is irrecoverable and extinguished.

Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan replied.

KARAMAT HUSAIN, J.—The facts are these.—Musammat Kalandari Begam, one of the heirs of Musammat Gujrati Begam, deceased, applied for a succession certificate for the collection of a portion of the dower debt of Gujrati Begam. Her husband, Ghafur Khan, objected that no certificate for the collection of a portion of a debt could be granted. The learned District Judge overruled the objection and granted the certificate. In his order, dated the 18th of February, 1910, he said:—"I think the applicant is entitled to the certificate applied for by her for the balance of the dower debt after deducting the share of the same [330] to which the objector is entitled and which is in his hands and the share of Musammat Sahib Jan, another heir, which has become time barred." The objector preferred an appeal to this Court and repeated the plea he had raised in the court below. The case owing to conflict of authorities was heard by a bench of three Judges. It was urged for the appellant that a succession certificate for a portion of a debt could not be granted. In support of the contention reliance was placed on the following cases:— Muhammad Ali Khan v. Puttan Bibi (1) and Bismilla Begam v. Tawassul Husain (2). The contention of the respondent was that a Bench of this Court in Akbar Khan v. Bilkisara Begam (3) granted a succession certificate for portion of a dower debt and that the remarks of EDGE, C. J., in Muhammad Ali Khan v. Puttan Bibi (1) favoured the grant of a certificate for the collection of a portion of a debt. They are as follows:—"It appears to us that the applicant must pay the duty for a certificate entitling him to collect the whole of the dower debt which at the date of the application was due and payable. In calculating what the amount of that debt was, the son's share by inheritance which has been discharged and the husband's share which he holds in his own hand in satisfaction of his own share in the inheritance, will be deducted, and the duty will be payable on the balance."

The decision of the case turns upon the construction to be put upon section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act with special reference to the meaning assigned to the phrase "his debt" in that section.

Before dealing with the section the following points are to be noted. The Succession Certificate Act, 1889, as the preamble shows, has been enacted to "afford protection to parties paying debts to the representatives of a deceased person." The proceedings under the said Act are of a summary nature, in which the court either decides the right of the applicant to the certificate or grants it to one who appears to have the best prima facie title thereto (section 7). In certain cases the court must and in others it may require, as a condition precedent to the granting of a [331] certificate, a bond for indemnity of persons who may be entitled to the whole or any part of the debt (section 9). It is thus evident that the proceedings are in no way intended to determine the share of the applicant in the debt or to adjudicate upon the relative rights of the applicant and others therein.

This is not all. One debt creates one single and indivisible liability which gives rise to one single cause of action. One of the heirs of the obligee of a money bond may not, therefore, sue for his share in the money due under the bond—see Kandhiya Lal v. Chandar (1). The dower debt of a Muhammadan wife, whether prompt or deferred, is a "debt" within the meaning of section 2 of the Succession Certificate Act, 1889; Abdul Karim Khan v. Makbul-un-nissa (2). A debtor, again, ought not to be harassed more than once for one debt and the multiplicity of suits in respect of one cause of action must not be allowed. Some of the above mentioned points, among others not mentioned, brought into being Act XXVII of 1860, under which the Calcutta High Court in Waselun Huq v. Gowhuroonnissa Bibee (3) and Srimati Amir-un-nissa Barkat v. Srimati Afiatt-un-nissa (4) held that a certificate cannot be granted to different heirs according to their shares in the inheritance. Act XXVII of 1860 was replaced by the Succession Certificate Act, 1889, section 4 of which is as follows :—(1) " No court shall (a) pass a decree against a debtor of a deceased person for payment of his debt to a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person or to any part thereof... except on the production by the person so claiming of : —(III) A certificate granted under this Act and having the debt specified therein." The plain meaning of the phrase "his debt" in what has been quoted is the whole of the debt due by the debtor to the deceased. It cannot mean a portion of that debt. Such a meaning, firstly, is against the canons of interpretation, for the natural meaning of the term "debt" is not a share of some one in that debt; secondly, it is opposed to the scheme of the Act which has been enacted to afford protection to debtors and has nothing to do with the convenience of the applicant or his right to or share in the debt ; [332] thirdly, it will cause the splitting of an indivisible liability; and fourthly, it will lead to the harassing of a debtor more than once on one cause of action and to multiplication of suits thereon.

This Court, in view of the above reasons, held in Shitab Dei v. Debi Prasad (5) that separate certificates to different persons for partial collection of debts could not be granted, and in Muhammad Ali Khan v. Puttan Bibi (6) it was ruled that a certificate for the collection of a portion of a debt could not be given. EDGE, C. J. said: —"He (the father of the deceased wife) had applied for a certificate entitling him to collect debts to the amount of Rs. 1,50,000. It was necessary under section 4 of Act No. VII of 1889 that he should have a certificate. The Judge declined to grant such certificate unless the applicant paid the 2 per cent. duty on the whole debt, i. e., the debt of eleven lakhs odd, which was due to the Muhammadan lady. There has been a uniform series of decisions in this Court according to which a certificate cannot be granted to collect a part only of a debt. There is no decision of this Court or, so far as we know, of any other court which says that an applicant for a certificate either under this Act or under the former Acts, must apply for a certificate to collect all the debts due to the deceased. We think it would be against public policy that a certificate to collect part only of a debt should be granted, as it would tend to multiplication possibly of suits in respect of one liability and the harassment of debtors." The ruling in Shitab Dei v. Debi Prasad (1) was followed in Bismilla Begam v. Tawassul Husain (2). It is, however, argued that the remarks of EDGE, C. J., in Muhammad Ali Khan v. Puttan Bibi (3), which have been cited by the learned vakil for the respondent, favour the grant of certificate for the collection of a portion of a debt. There is no force in this. The point for decision in that case was whether a certificate for the collection of a portion of a debt could or could not be granted, and the decision thereon was that it could not. That being so, the remarks towards the end of the judgment are mere obiter dicta. [333] CHAMIER, J., in Akbar Khan v. Bilkisara Begam (4), doubts the correctness of the decision in Muhammad Ali Khan v. Puttan Bibi, and is of opinion that the word "debts" in section 6 (f) of the Succession Certificate Act, 1889, means debts due, i. e., alleged to be due from debtors to the person applying for the certificate. With due respect to the learned Judge there is nothing in section (6) (f) to show that the term "debts" means a portion of the debt to which the applicant is entitled. Neither that section nor any other section of the Act aims at determining the share of the applicant in the debt. Reading that term in the light of the phrase "his debt" in section 4 of the Act, it becomes clear that "debt" in section 6 (f) means the debt which is due to the deceased, i. e., the whole of the debt. An applicant for a probate or letters of administration, no doubt, is allowed to put a value on the amount of assets of the deceased. But he has to put a value on the assets as a whole and not on any portion thereof.

Article 12 of schedule I of the Court Fees Act does in no way support the view that a succession certificate for a portion of a debt can be granted. The note in that clause is in the following terms:—"The amount of a debt is its amount, including interest, on the day on which the inclusion of the debt in the certificate is applied for, so far as such amount can be ascertained." The ascertainment of the amount of the debt, in my opinion, is the ascertainment of the amount of the whole debt and not of the share of the applicant therein. It is the ascertainment which an accountant would make. Juristic facts which may affect the debt or any portion of it, such as the absence of right to the debt in the applicant, fraud, limitation, the absence of cause of action or the like, cannot be taken into account in ascertaining its amount for the purpose of obtaining a succession certificate. The determination of such facts is the exclusive function of a court of justice in a regular suit and may often involve intricate and difficult questions of law and facts which are not to be decided in a summary proceeding.

The only plea which favours the grant of a succession certificate for the collection of a portion of a debt is based on sympathy with the applicant. It is urged that it will be a great hardship [334] to make an applicant, who is entitled to a fractional share of a debt only to pay duty upon the whole of that debt. This, however, is a matter of pure sentiment and, in the absence of an express rule of law to that effect, courts of justice can take no notice of the hardship and the more so when there are considerations which point the other way. A person entitled to one-tenth of a debt has to pay the full court fee payable on the whole of the debt and the hardship involved cannot save him from such payment. One of the mortgagors whose share in the property mortgaged is 1/30, cannot, on the ground of hardship, be allowed to sue for the redemption of 1/30 of the property on payment of 1/30 of the full court fee. A plaintiff who sues for Rs. 20,000 and obtains a decree for Rs. 1,000 only cannot, on the basis of the hardship, claim a refund of the court fee on Rs. 19,000.

For the above reasons I would allow the appeal and dismiss the application for a succession certificate for collection of a portion of the dower debt with costs.

KNOX, J.—I fully agree with the above. It is matter for the Legislature to consider whether the hardship to which my learned brother has alluded should not be relieved by a change in the Statute.

GRIFFIN, J.—I agree.

Land-holder and tenant—Occupancy tenant—Usufructury mortgage—Relinquishment of tenancy during the term of the mortgage.

[Ref. 66 I. C. 376=1921 M. W. N. 615=15 L. W. 218=42 M. L. J. 161=45 Mad. 47.]

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

In this case, an occupancy tenant mortgaged his holding with possession to one Chotte Lal, and afterwards relinquished his holding in favour of the zamindar, who instituted a suit in ejectment in the revenue Court against the plaintiff. The occupancy tenant was not a party to the suit. Chhote Lal in that suit raised a plea that the relinquishment by the mortgagor in favour of the zamindar was a collusive transaction and could not effect his rights. While that suit was pending, Chhote Lal instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for a declaration that the relinquishment, dated the 25th of September, 1909, was collusive and fraudulent and made for the purpose of causing loss to him and was void as against him. The Subordinate Judge, coming to the conclusion that the suit was barred by res judicata, dismissed the claim, and that decree was upheld by the lower appellate Court (Subordinate Judge of Agra) on the ground that the relief sought was a relief in the discretion of the Court to grant or refuse. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

KARAMAT HUSAIN, J.—In this case, an occupancy tenant mortgaged his holding with possession to one Chhote Lal, and afterwards relinquished his holding in favour of the zamindar, who instituted a suit in ejectment in the Revenue Court against the plaintiff. The occupancy tenant was not a party to the suit. Chhote Lal in that suit raised a plea that the relinquishment by [336] the mortgagor in favour of the zamindar was a collusive transaction and could not affect his rights. While that suit was pending, Chhote Lal instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for a declaration that the relinquishment, dated the 25th September, 1909, was collusive and fraudulent and made for the purpose of causing loss to him and was void as against him. The learned Subordinate Judge coming to the conclusion that the suit was barred by res judicata dismissed the claim and that decree was upheld by the lower appellate Court on the ground that the relief sought was a relief in the discretion of the Court to grant or refuse. The plaintiff comes here in second appeal. Following the ruling in Rannu Rai v. Rafi-ud-din (1) which I followed in Ramdhari Rai v. Ramdhari Rai (2) I hold that the occupancy tenant, after mortgaging his holding with possession to Chhote Lal, had no power to relinquish it in favour of the zamindar. I would, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Courts below, and under the provisions of order 41, rule 23, send the case back through the lower appellate Court to the Court of first instance for trial on the merits. Costs will abide the event.

KNOX, J.—The facts are set out in the judgment of my learned brother, and in view of the course of rulings to which he has referred, I prefer not to adhere to the opinion which I have entertained and would have put forward at greater length had the matter been res integra. I was one of the Judges who in Khiali Ram v. Nathu (3) was prepared to hold and did hold that an ex-proprietary tenant could sublet the whole or any part of his holding, but I have always hesitated, with due respect to the learned Judges who decided the cases, in following the further step taken in Badri Prasad v. Sheodhan (4) and Rannu Rai v. Rafi-ud-din (5). The question arises—what will the decree-holder do with the decree when he gets it, and whether the Revenue Courts will pay any attention to it? These conflicts between Revenue and Civil Courts are to be regretted. It would be well if they could be put an end to by the Legislature. In view, [337] however, of the series of rulings abovementioned, I accept the view taken by my learned brother, and agree in his order, which will also be the order of the Court.

GHULAM NABI KHAN (Plaintiff) v. NIAZ-UN-NISSA (Defendant).*

Construction of document—Sale—Agreement to repurchase executed on same day—Mortgage by conditional sale.

When what purported to be an out-and-out sale was accompained by a contemporaneous agreement giving to the vendor a right of repurchase within five years at the same price, it was held that the transaction was what it purported to be, and could not be construed as a mortgage by conditional sale. Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1) followed. Vasudeo v. Bhau (2) referred to.

[Ref. 33 All. 585 ; 19 A. L. J. 423=43 All. 493 ; 42 All. 437=18 A. L. J. 478.]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

A sale-deed was executed in favour of the respondent on 12th August, 1894. On the same day another deed was executed between the parties which provided that if the purchase money, were paid within five years the transferee would reconvey the property to the vendor, and the sale would be deemed to be non-existent. This was a suit by the appellant vendor to redeem the property on payment of purchase money on the basis that the two deeds made the transaction a mortgage by way of a conditional sale. The Court of first instance (Subordinate Judge of Moradabad) dismissed the suit, and this decree was affirmed on appeal by the District Judge. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The Hon'ble Nawab Muhammad Abdul Mojid (with him Mr. B. E. O'Conor), for the appellant, contended that the two documents must be read together as constituting a mortgage by conditional sale. In the case of Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1) the vendees promised to reconvey as a matter of grace. Moreover that case was decided on principles of common law and did not apply. He cited Ali Ahmad v. Rahmat-ut-lah, (3) and referred to section 58, clause (c) of the Transfer of Property Act.

[338] Mr. G. P. Boys (with him Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba) for the respondent, relied on Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (4) and submitted that the case was exactly like the present. The parties intended to create a transfer out-and-out. He further relied on Vasudeo v. Bhau (2).

STANLEY, C. J, and TUDBALL, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of an alleged mortgage of the 12th of August, 1894. On that date a sale-deed was executed and a contemporaneous agreement whereby the vendee undertook to reconvey the property comprised in the sale-deed on repayment of the amount of the purchase money within a period of five years. The period of five years has long since elapsed, and consequently the agreement to reconvey is not capable of being enforced unless the transaction is regarded as in the nature of a mortgage by way of conditional sale.

Both the lower Courts dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the sale-deed represented an out-and-out sale, and that the agreement whereby the vendee undertook to reconvey the property on payment of the purchase money within a limited time did not convert the sale into a mortgage by way of conditional sale.

This second appeal has been preferred and reliance has been placed upon the language of section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is to be observed in this case that there are two documents to be interpreted and that the decision of it depends upon the true construction to be placed on those documents. If we come to the conclusion that the sale-deed represented, and was intended to be, an out-and-out sale, then it appears to us that, there being nothing illegal in the agreement of the parties, we should hold it to be an out-and-out sale, and that inasmuch as the purchase money was not paid within the time agreed upon, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover the property. It appears to us that the case is concluded by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1). In that case a document purporting to be one of sale was accompanied by a contract whereby a right was reserved to the vendor of [339] repurchasing the property sold on repayment of the purchase money within a certain time, and it was held that the transaction was not to be regarded as a mortgage by conditional sale. Their Lordships in their judgment quote a statement of the law pronounced by LORD CHANCELLOR CRANWORTH in the case of Alderson v. White (2) when dealing with the question whether or not what purported to be a deed of sale on its face was really a mortgage, and read the following passage:—"In every such case the question is, what upon a fair construction is the meaning of the instruments? Here the first instrument was on the face of it an absolute conveyance; the second gave a right to repurchase on payment, not of what should be due, but of the full amount of the purchase money of £ 4,739, exactly corresponding to the terms of the two documents in the present case, whereby the vendee gave the right to the vendors to take back the property if within the period of ten years they should pay the same amount, namely, Rs. 4,000. Was that, if taken according to its terms, a lawful contract? Clearly so. What then is there to show that it was intended to be a mere mortgage? I think that the Court after a lapse of 30 years ought to require cogent evidence to induce it to hold that an instrument is not what it purports to be, and I see but little evidence to that effect here." It seems to us that this language of the LORD CHANCELLOR is closely applicable to the facts of the present case. We find in the document which is described as a deed of sale, a recital that "the sale had become absolute and final, and that the contracting parties had no right to cancel the sale and to demand restitution of the consideration money, and that the vendor has no right to any share in the property sold." In view of this language can we say that what purports to be a sale is in reality a mortgage? A stipulation for repurchase will not of itself convert a case of sale into one of mortgage. To make a mortgage there must be a debt—Vasudeo v. Bhau (3). If there be a right to redeem property from a debt, there must also be the correlative right to enforce payment of the debt. Here there is clearly no debt. Whether a transaction is a bona fide sale with an agreement for repurchase or a [340] mere mortgage in the form of a sale must depend on the intention of the parties to be gathered from the language in which the transaction is carried out, supplemented, it may be, by oral evidence. If we attach their true meaning to the recitals which we have referred to above, it must, we think, be held that the transaction was intended by the parties to be an out and out sale with an agreement for repurchase. In view of the language used we are of opinion that the courts below rightly held that the plaintiff had no right to redeem the property. If he intended to rely upon the agreement for repurchase, he ought to have paid his money within the time limited by the document. Having failed to do so, he must abide the consequences. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

APPEAL from a judgment and decree (17th April, 1905) of the High Court at Allahabad, which reversed a decree (5th November, 1902) of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Aligarh.

The main questions for determination on this appeal were, (a) whether a deed of sale, dated the 27th of September, 1889, executed by the plaintiff (respondent) in favour of the appellants and another, embodied a genuine transaction, or was merely a fictitious deed ; and (b) whether or not the appellants should be allowed to give parole evidence for the purpose of showing that the executant of the aforesaid deed, which purported [341] to be, and was, a deed of sale on the face of it, did not intend to take the purchase money therein specified from the vendee.

The Subordinate Judge held that natural love and affection was the real consideration for the deed of sale, and that it was therefore, not fictitious, but "a real conveyance by which ownership with possession was transferred." He also held that the plaintiff was estopped from claiming any relief against the transferees. He accordingly made a decree dismissing the suit with costs. On appeal the High Court (SIR JOHN STANLEY C. J. and SIR W. BURKITT, J.) were of opinion that the defendants were precluded by the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) from giving oral evidence to show that the deed of sale was in reality intended by the executant to be a deed of gift : and they held that the

[15th February, 1911.]

Hindu Law—Widow—Payment by wife of husband's debts during his lifetime—Voluntary payment—Absence of proof of obligation to repay—Onus of proof.

In this case, which was an appeal from the decision of the High Court in the case of Himmat Bahadur v. Bhawani Kunwar (2) the Judicial Committee merely affirmed that decision on the ground that the appellant on whom the onus lay had not proved that there was any obligation on the part of the husband or his estate to pay the moneys which were paid by his wife, and dismissed the appeal.

APPEAL from a judgment and decree (1st May, 1908) of the High Court at Allahabad, which reversed a decree (11th August, 1905) of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur.

The question for determination in this appeal was as to the right of the respondents (plaintiffs) to recover from the appellant (defendant) certain property in her possession which the plaintiffs alleged had originally belonged to their maternal grandmother, and which they alleged had been sold by her without legal necessity to one Jiwan Sahai, the vendor to the appellant.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit with costs. On appeal the High Court (SIR JOHN STANLEY, C. J. and KARAMAT HUSAIN, J.) reversed that decree and gave the plaintiff a decree for possession of the property on certain terms. The facts of the case will be found fully stated in the judgment of Mr. Justice KARAMAT HUSAIN reported in I. L. R. 30 All. 352.

On this appeal:

W. A. Raikes, for the appellant, contended that there was abundant evidence of the legal necessity; that the respondents being daughter's sons the question of legal necessity did not really [343] arise, and the respondents were bound by the acts and transfers made by their grandmother and mother; that the respondents were also bound by the acts of their great-grandfather who was the head of a joint Hindu family; and that the grandmother and mother of the respondents (who were the reversioners) had complete power to deal with and transfer the property. Reference was made to Succaram Morarji Shetay v. Kalidas Kalianji (1); Chimnaji Govind Godbole v. Dinkar Dhondev Godbole (2); Karim-ud-din v. Gobind Krishna Narain (3), and Raj Bullubh Sen v. Oomesh Chunder Rooz (4).

DeGruyther, K. C., and Ross, for the respondents, contended that it was for the appellant to show legal necessity justifying the alienation of the property; and the power of a female manager of a joint family was very restricted.

Payment by a wife of her husband's debt in his lifetime was merely voluntary; such payment involved no obligation on the husband to repay it; nor, it was submitted, was there any assumption that there was a contract by him to repay it. Reference was made to Mayne's Hindu Law, 7th Edition, page 850, paragraph 653, and Sham Sundar Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (5). There was no sufficient evidence of legal necessity justifying the sale of the 30th of September, 1890; it was not binding on the respondents, and they were entitled to recover the poperty transferred by that deed on the conditions imposed by the High Court, whose decision should be upheld.

Raikes replied.

1911, February 15th:—The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Lord MACNAGHTEN:—

The facts of this case are very complicated in detail, but it seems to their Lordships that judgment can be given in a single sentence.

The appellant has not proved that there was any obligation on the part of Nityanand or his estate to pay the moneys which were paid by his wife. The obligation lay upon the appellant to prove that there was such liability, and she has not satisfied it.

[344] Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed, and the appellant will pay the costs.

Appeal dismissed.

UMRAO SINGH AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. LACHMAN SINGH AND ANOTHER (Defendants).

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh at Lucknow].*

Act No 1 of 1869 (Oudh Estates Act)—Will of taluqdar—Sanad executed by Taluqdar through the mediation of family friends—Whether document was testamentary or non-testamentary—Registration of document—Act No. III of 1877 (Indian Registration Act), sections 17 and 49—Instrument affecting immovable property—Ground not specifically taken in argument in Courts below—Costs.

A taluqdar in 1862, in compliance with the directions issued by the Government, made a declaration that, "I wish and file this application, that after my death Umrao Singh the eldest son (sic) my estate should continue in my family undivided in accordance with the custom of the raj-gaddi, and that the younger brothers shall be entitled to get maintenance from the gaddi-nashin."

Held (affirming the decision of the Courts in India) that it was a valid testamentary disposition by the taluqdar of his estate in favour of his eldest son.

The same taluqdar, having three sons, with one of whom he was on bad terms, executed in 1884 the following document, which he called a sanad:—"For Prithipal Singh, who is my son, I fix Rs. 300 annually, so that he may maintain himself. Besides this whatever I may give I will give equally to the three sons, except provisions, which they may take from my godown (kothar). The marriage and gauna expenses of the sons and daughters shall be borne by me. After me the three sons are to divide the property movable and immovable. This has been settled through the mediation of Thakur Jote Singh of Bihat, and Thakur Ratan Singh of Rojah."

Held (reversing the decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court) that it was a non-testamentary instrument. It was a family arrangement arrived at by the mediation or arbitration of two gentlemen, friends of the family and interested in its honour, and it was plainly intended to be operative immediately and to be final and irrevocable.

Held also that it required to be registered under section 17 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) in order to make it effective as regards immoveable property, being unregistered, was, so far, void.

[345] On an objection that it was not open to the appellants to contend that the document was not a will the fact that they had, throughout the proceedings in the Courts below, taken conflicting views as to the nature of the document, was held not to preclude their Lordships from considering and determining the real question in the case, and that they were bound to give effect to the real character of the document. Neither party had pursued a consistent course in the matter. Their Lordships permitted the appellants, therefore, to raise that contention, but in allowing the appeal on that ground they did so without costs to the appellants on this appeal or in the Courts below.

APPEAL from a judgment and decree (19th August, 1907) of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which reversed a judgment and decree (8th September, 1906) of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur.

The principal question for determination on this appeal was the right of succession to the estates of Ramkote and Hadipur, the last owner of which was one Kalka Bakhsh Singh; and to determine that it was necessary to decide which of several documents put forward was his last will and testament regulating the succession.

The Ramkote estate was settled with Kalka Bakhsh Singh at the second summary settlement after the confiscation of all proprietary rights in Oudh, and a sanad was subsequently granted him by Government, who also conferred upon him two villages forming the Hadipur estate in recognition of loyal services. On the passing of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869) Kalka Bakhsh Singh's name was entered in lists 1, 4 and 6 prepared under section 8 of that Act, and he consequently became the absolute owner of the property in suit until his death.

Kalka Bakhsh Singh died on the 14th of October, 1893, leaving his eldest son Umrao Singh, his third son Baldeo Bakhsh Singh (the present appellants) and two grandsons, Lachman Singh and Bharat Singh now respondents, the sons of his second son Prithipal Singh, who died on the 10th of November, 1892.

On the 9th of January, 1862, Kalka Bakhsh Singh, in reply to a letter from the Deputy Commissioner of Oudh asking him to declare the custom of succession obtaining in his estate, and saying that if the custom of gaddi-nashini did not obtain in his family, "it is necessary that you should write a will and enter [346] therein the name of your heir and register it," executed the following document:—

"As the British Government has conferred upon me, generation after generation, the proprietary rights in Ramkote estate, therefore I wish and file this application that after my death Umrao Singh, the eldest son, (sic) my estate should continue in my family undivided in accordance with the custom of raj-gaddi, and that the younger brothers shall be entitled to get maintenance from the gaddi-nashin."

and presented it with a petition in which it was stated that his wish was that his eldest son Umrao Singh should succeed him.

Prithipal Singh was on very bad terms with his father, so much sc that in May, 1884, Kalka Bakhsh complained to the Deputy Commissioner of the conduct of Prithipal, and subsequently lodged a formal complaint against him in the Criminal Court under sections 352, 448 and 506 of the Penal Code. Matters however, were settled between them by two of Kalka Bakhsh Singh's friends, Jote Singh and Ratan Singh, who eventually drew up the following document, which they induced Kalka Bakhsh Singh to sign on the 23rd of May, 1854 :—

"This sanad is executed by me, Thakur Kalka Bakhsh, taluqdar of Ramkote. For Prithipal Singh, who is my son, I fix Rs 300 annually so that he may maintain himself. Besides this whatever I may give I will give equally to the three sons, except provisions, which they may take from my godown (kothar). He may take six annas in Kharif (crop) and ten annas in Rabi (crop) out of my treasury (tahwil). The marriage and gauna expenses of the sons and daughters shall be borne by me. After me the three sons are to divide the property, moveable and immovable. This has been settled through the mediation of Thakur Jote Singh of Bihat and Thakur Ratan Singh of Rojah."

Though Kalka Baksh Singh was induced to sign that document in order to settle the quarrel with his son, he did not act upon it; and on the 15th of February, 1886, Prithipal Singh instituted a suit in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur to recover arrears of maintenance, and a sum of money equal to the amount alleged to have been given by Kalka Bakhsh Singh to his youngest son Baldeo Bakhsh Singh. That suit was dismissed on the 25th August, 1886, on the ground that the document of the 23rd of May, 1884, which contained the agreement to pay maintenance had not been registered.

On the 3rd of May, 1892, Kalka Bakhsh Singh brought a suit in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur for cancellation of the document of the 23rd of May, 1884; but Prithipal Singh died [347] before the first hearing of the suit, which was consequently withdrawn.

On the 4th of October, 1893, Kalka Bakhsh Singh executed a will by which he gave his estate to his two surviving sons, Umrao Singh and Baldeo Bakhsh Singh, and died ten days afterwards.

After his death there were disputes to obtain mutation of names in the Revenue Registers; and on the 14th of May, 1894, the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur made an order directing the name of Umrao Singh to be entered for one-third of the estate, the name of Baldeo Bakhsh Singh for another third; and the names of Lachman Singh and Bharat Singh, the sons of Prithipal Singh, for the remaining third.

On the 20th of June, 1894, Umrao Singh transferred his interest in the estate to his brother Baldeo Bakhsh Singh.

On the 30th of September, 1905, Umrao Singh and Baldeo Bakhsh Singh brought the present suit against Lachman Singh and Bharat Singh to recover possession from them of the one-third share of the estate which they had obtained under the order of the 14th of May, 1894: basing their claim either on the will of the 9th of January, 1862, or on that executed by Kalka Bakhsh Singh on the 4th of October, 1893. The plaintiffs alleged that the will executed by their father on the 23rd of May, 1884, was obtained by coercion and undue influence; and that it had been, moreover, revoked by their father in his lifetime.

The defence was inter alia that the document, dated the 9th of January, 1862, was not a will, and even if it was a will it was cancelled by the document, dated the 23rd of May, 1884, which they called a sanad and which they alleged was not executed under undue influence; and that Kalka Bakhsh Singh never duly executed the alleged will of the 4th of October, 1893, as he was on that day not of sound disposing mind, and incapable of executing such a will.

On the issues raised in accordance with the pleadings the Subordinate Judge held that the document of the 9th of January, 1862, was a will in favour of the first plaintiff, Umrao Singh; that the document of the 23rd of May, 1884, was not proved to have been executed by Kalka Bakhsh Singh "with his free will and consent", and that Kalka Bakhsh Singh was not shown to have [348] been capable of making a will on the 4th of October, 1893. He made a decree, therefore, in favour of the plaintiff.

The defendants appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, and the appeal was heard by Mr. E. CHAMIER, Judicial Commissioner, and MR. J. SANDERS, Additional Judicial Commissioner, who agreed with the findings of the Subordinate Judge that the document of the 9th of January, 1862, was a will in favour of Umrao Singh; and that Kalka Bakhsh was not capable of making a will on the 4th of October, 1893; but they dissented from his finding as regarded the document of the 23rd of May, 1884. They were of opinion that its execution was not obtained by threats or undue influence; that it was testamentary in its nature; had not been revoked, and that it operated as a valid devise to Prithipal Singh, the benefit of which passed on his death to his sons, the defendants.

As to the nature and effect of the document of the 23rd of May, 1884, the following was the material portion of the judgment of the Court which was delivered by MR. CHAMIER:—

"The point was not taken in the arguments before us, but it occurred to me afterwards that there might be room for doubt, whether the signature of Kalka Bakhsh is so placed on the document as to make it appear that it was intended thereby to give effect to the document as a will (see section 50 of the Succession Act, which is applied to the wills of taluqdars by section 19 of Act I of 1869) and we decided to hear counsel further on the question. The writing is on a strip of paper 18 inches long and 5¼ inches wides and the lines are about 4½ inches long leaving a very narrow margin on each side. The signature of Kalka Bakhsh, which is very large, is in the blank space at the top and is written at right angles to the body of the document. The signatures of the witnesses are in the space at the bottom and are close to the date. In some parts of India it appears to be the custom to sign all documents at the top and old sanads (grants) in this province are invariably found to have been signed at the top. In the case of documents written on stamped paper it is customary for the executant and the witnesses to sign at the right hand side where a large margin is left for the purpose. It would not have been possible to leave such a margin on the paper used for the document in question. The executant must have signed either at the top or at the bottom. Petitions are signed at the bottom; but a sanad, such as this purports to be, could not possibly have been signed at the bottom. I think it is clear that the signature is so placed as to make it appear that Kalka Bakhsh intended to give effect to the document, and as there is no rule requiring the signature of the executant of a will to be at the foot or end of the document, I think it must be held that the signature was intended to give effect to the document as a will if and so far as it is of a testamentary character. [349] Counsel for the plaintiffs took advantage of the opportunity offered by a further hearing to argue that the document could not operate as a will at all, because the executant calls it a sanad and because, in part, at least it is not of a testamentary character. The first part of this argument is met by the case of Thakur Ishri Singh v. Thakur Baldeo Singh (1) where a document called a tamliknama was held to operate as a will. The second part is met by the decision in Lali v. Murlidhar (2) and other like cases, in which it has been held that a part of wajib-ul-arz may operate as a will. Both parties throughout this case until the further hearing in this Court admitted that so much of this document as is of a testamentary character should take effect as a will if the document is not invalid on the ground of undue influence.

"The next question is as to the construction of this document. The plaintiffs urged that Kalka Bakhsh intended thereby to leave his estate to his three sons as joint tenants, and that as Pirthipal died in the life-time of his father the whole estate passed to the plaintiffs, the surviving sons, under this document. But it appears to me to be quite clear that Kalka Bakhsh did not intend to make his sons joint tenants. Pirthipal was living apart from his father and his brothers, and nothing could have been farther from the intention of Kalka Bakhsh than that his three sons should be joint tenants. He evidently contemplated a division of the estate between them, for he said :—'After my death my three sons will (or let my three sons) divide (taqsim) my moveable and immoveable property.' In my opinion, the devise was to the three sons as tenants in common. Under section 96 of the Indian Succession Act, which is applied to the wills of taluqdars by section 19 of the Oudh Estates Act, the devise to Pirthipal takes effect in favour of his sons, the defendants. The word used in section 96 of the Succession Act is 'bequest,' but the words 'bequest,' 'bequeath,' &c., are used in the Oudh Estates Act, in the sense of devise and under the latter part of section 19 of the Oudh Estates Act, the word 'bequest' in section 19 of the Succession Act must be given the same meaning as is attached to it by the Oudh Estates Act.

"The next question is whether the will, as it may now be called, of May, 1884, was revoked by the testator's written statement in Pirthipal's suit of 1880 (Exhibit 4) or by his plaint in a suit of 1892 (Exhibit 5). According to section 57 of the Succession Act, which is applied to wills of taluqdars by section 19 of the Oudh Estates Act, no unprivileged will or codicil nor any part thereof can be revoked otherwise than by marriage or by any will or codicil or by some writing declaring an intention to revoke the same and executed in the manner in which an unprivileged will is required by the Succession Act to be executed, or by burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying the same by the testatator or by some person in his presence and by his direction with the intention of revoking the same. It is admitted that if this section applies to the will of 1884, that will was not revoked either by the written statement of 1886, or the plaint of 1892, but it is contended by counsel for the defendants that section 57 of the Sucession Act applies only to wills made by taluqdars or grantees in favour of [350] persons who do not come within the second and third paragraphs of section 13 of the Oudh Estates Act. If this contention is correct then the sections of the Succession Act mentioned in section 19 of the Oudh Estates Act do not apply to the wills of taluqdars generally, but only to wills made in favour of persons who do not come within the second and third paragraphs of section 13 of the Oudh Estates Act. It seems to me to be impossible to accept this contention. Section 19 of the Act says that certain sections of the Succession Act shall apply to all wills and codicils made by any taluqdar or grantee under the provisions of the Act. It appears to me to be impossible to hold that these words apply only to one class of Wills. In my opinion they apply to all wills made by taluqdars under the powers conferred upon them by section 11 of the Act. I hold therefore that the will of May, 1884, was not revoked either by the written statement of 1886 or by the plaint of 1892 (1)."

On this appeal—

DeGruyther, K. C., and S. A. Kyffin, for the appellants, contended that the document of the 9th of January, 1862, was a valid will, and as such was an effective devise of the whole estate in favour of the first appellant Umrao Singh: that had been found by both Courts below [Sir R. Finlay, K. C. It is not disputed that that holding is a good decision in law]. It was then contended that the document, dated the 23rd of May, 1884, was not in fact or in law a testamentary disposition of the estate. It was not executed by Kalka Bakhsh Singh as a will, and was never intended by him to operate as a will. It was intended to, and did, come into operation immediately on its execution. Reference was made to In the goods of Robinson (2) where probate of such a document was refused and it was doubted whether the Court could treat as being a will a document which was only partly testamentary. [Sir R. Finlay, K. C. objected that it was not now open to the appellants to argue that the document was not a will. It had been all along treated as a will without any objection to that course being raised by the appellants]. There was always a question whether it was a will or not. Reference was made to the case of Tagore v. Tagore (3). The circumstances of the making of the document were discussed, and it was submitted that as it was shown that Prithipal Singh was at enmity with his father, and that the latter was obliged to bring charges against him in the Criminal Court, of assault or using criminal force, house trespass, and criminal [351] intimidation under sections 352, 448 and 506 respectively of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) there were good grounds for saying that the document in question was obtained from Kalka Bakhsh Singh by Prithipal by undue influence, if not by actual threats: and Hall v. Hall (4) was referred to, it being contended that the document was invalid on that ground, as not having been executed by Kalka Bakhsh Singh with his free will and consent, as the Subordinate Judge had held. Moreover, Kalka Bakhsh Singh had never acted upon it. If viewed as a contract too it was invalid for want of consideration under section 25 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872): and it was ineffective as regarded immovable property by the fact that it was not registered; sections 17, 23 and 49 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) were referred to. Reference was also made to section 19 of Act I of 1869 and the Succession Act (X of 1865), section 96, which had been wrongly applied to the case by the Judicial Commissioner's Court.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Ross, for the respondents, contended that the document of the 23rd of May, 1884, was not the less operative as a will as to the testamentary portion merely because the rest of it might be of a non-testamentary character; and referred to Thakuri Ishri Singh v. Thakur Baldeo Singh (1) and Lali v. Murlidhar (2) in which a tamliknama and a wajib-ul-arz were respectively considered to be effective as wills by the Privy Council. It was not, it was submitted, procured from Kalka Bakhsh Singh by undue influence or threats ; and was not void under section 25 of the Contract Act ; but was a valid will, under which the respondents were entitled to the one-third share of the property in respect of which mutation of names was effected in their favour after Kalka Bakhsh Singh's death. Registration of a will was optional under the Registration Act, section 18, and it was never legally revoked by Kalka Bakhsh Singh : section 57 of the Succession Act (X of 1865), made applicable to the wills of taluqdars by section 19 of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), and the definition of a " will" in the latter Act were referred to ; [352] and the case of Tagore v. Tagore (3) cited for the appellants was distinguished.

To show that the fact of the document being a will was not disputed in the pleadings and in the lower Courts it was pointed out that the appellants called it a will in their plaint, paragraph 11, and in paragraphs 33 and 34 of their replication, in which they said (paragraph 33): — "The arrangement on foot during the life-time of Kalka Baksh Singh may be called by any name, but whatever was written to take effect after his death is nothing but a will" and paragraph 34 :—" At all events Kalka Baksh Singh could and did render ineffectual the testamentary portion merely by an expression and course of conduct." No ground was taken that it was not a will either in the petition of objections on the appeal by the respondents to the Judicial Commissioner, nor in the grounds of appeal to the Privy Council ; and the document was dealt with as a will througout the judgments of both the lower Courts. The point that it was not a will, not having been raised before, could not be raised now. The judgment of the Judicial Commissioner upholding that document as a will should be affirmed. The due execution of the alleged will of 1893 was negatived by the concurrent judgments of the lower Courts on the facts.

De Gruyther, K. C. in reply referred to the pleadings to show that there had been a contest between the parties as to whether the document of the 23rd of May, 1884, was a will or not. In the plaint it was called both a " will " and a " deed ": and in the respondents' written statement, paragraphs 8 and 31 to 34, it was called a " deed " and a "sanad." It was called a " deed " and a "will" indiscriminately in the judgment of both the Courts below, and in fact throughout the proceedings in India. Had the ground been definitely taken, there would have been no evidence necessary ; it was a matter of law. The point, it was submitted was now open. Reference was made to the fact that in the suit by Prithipal against his father the document was rejected as evidence because it was not registered and section 17 and clause (d) of section 18 and section 49 of the Registration Act were referred to.

This is an appeal from a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reversing the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur.

The dispute between the parties relates to the right of succession to one-third of the estate of Ramkote, of which a Hindu gentleman named Kalka Bakhsh Singh was the last owner.

In the course of the discussion before this Board the controversy was reduced to two questions, and two questions only—

(1) Was a certain document executed by Kalka Bakhsh on the 23rd of May, 1884, a testamentary or a non-testamentary instrument?

(2) Is that question now open having regard to the course of the proceedings in the Courts below?

After the confiscation of Oudh the second Summary Settlement of the Ramkote estates was made with Kalka Bakhsh. He obtained a sanad from the Government. His name was entered in lists 1, 4, and 6, prepared under the provisions of section 8 of Act I of 1869. And he remained absolute owner of the property until his death.

Kalka Bakhsh died on the 14th of October, 1893. He had three sons, Umrao Singh, Pirthipal Singh, and Baldeo Bakhsh. Pirthipal Singh died in his father's life-time, leaving two sons, who were defendants in the suit and are the respondents to this appeal.

On the 9th of January, 1862, Kalka Bakhsh in compliance with the directions issued by the Government, declared that his wish was that after his death his estate should continue in his family undivided, in accordance with the custom of raj-gaddi, and that the younger brothers should be entitled to maintenance.

It is not disputed that this declaration was a valid testamentary disposition by Kalka Bakhsh of his estate in favour of his eldest son.

Kalka Bakhsh and his second son Pirthipal Singh were on bad terms, so much so, that Pirthipal Singh threatened personal violence to his father, and Kalka Bakhsh commenced criminal proceedings against his son. The quarrel, however, was for the [354] time composed by the intervention of two friends of the family, Jote Singh of Bihat and Ratan Singh of Rojah. At their instance the following document was drawn up and signed by Kalka Bakhsh in their presence on the 23rd of May, 1884:—

"This sanad is executed by me, Thakur Kalka Baksh, talukdar of Ramkote. For Pirthipal Singh, who is my son, I fix Rs. 300 annually, so that he may maintain himself. Besides this, whatever I may give I will give equally to the three sons except provisions, which they may take from my godown (kothar). He may take 6 annas in kharif (crop) and 10 annas in rabi (crop) out of my treasury (tehwil). The marriage and gauna expenses of the sons and daughters shall be borne by me. After me the three sons are to divide the property, moveable and immoveable. This has been settled through the mediation of Thakur Jote Singh of Bihat and Thakur Ratan Singh of Rojah."

Kalka Bakhsh, though he executed the document without demur, did not comply with its terms, if, indeed, he ever meant to do so. In February, 1886, Pirthipal Singh, who apparently was then in destitution, brought a suit to recover arrears of maintenance and a sum of money equal to an amount alleged to have been given by Kalka Bakhsh to his youngest son Baldeo Bakhsh. The suit, which was founded on the instrument of May, 1884, was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, and the dismissal was affirmed on appeal, except as regards arrears of maintenance then due, amounting to Rs. 412-8-0.

In May, 1892, Kalka Bakhsh brough a suit for cancellation of the instrument of May, 1884, Pirthipal, however, died in November, 1892, before the suit could be heard, and it was consequently withdrawn.

After Kalka Bakhsh's death there was the usual quarrel as to registration in the Revenue records. On the 14th of May, 1894, the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur, without pronouncing any opinion on the questions in dispute, made an order directing the entry of one-third of the estate in the name of Umrao Singh, one-third in the names of Baldeo Bakhsh, and the remaining third in the names of Pirthipal's two sons.

Umrao Singh then transferred his interest in the estate to his brother Baldeo Bakhsh, and they brought this suit as co-plaintiffs to recover the one-third of the estate entered in the names of the sons of Pirthipal Singh. They relied mainly on a will alleged to have been executed on the 4th of October, 1893, up to which date, as they contended, the testamentary instrument of the 9th of [355] January, 1862, was in force. They asserted too that the instrument of the 23rd of May, 1884, was obtained from Kalka Bakhsh by undue influence, and was wholly inoperative.

The Subordinate Judge gave effect to the plaintiffs' claim except so far as it was found on the alleged will of October, 1893. He decided against them on the issue as to the validity of that document, stating that the execution thereof "was not very clear to his mind." The decree was made without costs.

On appeal the Judicial Commissioners affirmed the findings of the Subordinate Judge in regard to the will of 1862 and the alleged will of 1893. But as regards the instrument of 1884 they held that its execution was not procured by undue influence, and that it operated as a valid devise to Pirthipal Singh, the benefit of which passed on his death to his two sons. In the result they reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit with costs.

Their Lordships agree with the Court of the Judicial Commissioner in thinking that the instrument of 1884 was not procured by undue influence. Indeed, there seems to be no ground whatever for such a suggestion On the other hand, it seems clear that that document is a non-testamentary instrument. It was a family arrangement arrived at by the mediation or arbitration of two gentlemen, who were old friends of the family, and interested in maintaining its honour. It was plainly intended to be operative immediately, and to be final and irrevocable. It fails of effect simply because it was not registered, as required by the Registration Act, III of 1877, section 17. It is therefore void as regards immovable property.

As regards the second question their Lordships must hold that they are not precluded by what took place in the Courts below from considering and determining the real question in the case. In the Courts below neither party pursued a consistent course. As long as the question of the validity of the alleged will of the 4th of October, 1893, was undetermined, the appellants contended that the instrument of May, 1884, was testamentary, while the defendants contended that it was a settlement and not a will. As soon as the alleged will of 1893 was successfully impeached, the defendants maintained that the instrument of 1884 was a will [356] and not a settlement, and the appellants changed their attitude. Their Lordships think that, notwithstanding the conflicting views presented by the appellants in the Courts below, they are bound to give effect to the real character of the instrument. At the same time they consider that the appellants, though successful in the result, ought not to be allowed costs on this appeal or any costs in the Courts below.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal ought to be allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored, and that any costs paid under the order of the Court of the KHUNNI LAL (Defendant) v. GOBIND KRISHNA NARAIN AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) AND TWO OTHER APPEALS CONSOLIDATED.

[14th, and 15th February and 23rd March, 1911].

[On appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad.]

Hindu Law—Change of religion—Converts—Effect of conversion of member of Joint Hindu family to Muhammadanism—Regulation VII of 1832, section 9—Act XXI of 1850—Compromise—Effect of compromise entered into by members of family in settlement of disputes as to right to property—Act No. XIV of 1859 (Limitation Act), section I, clause 12—Act No. IX of 1871 (Limitation Act), schedule II, article 142—Act XV of 1877, (Indian Limitation Act), schedule II, article 141—Suit by reversioner.

By Bengal Regulation VII of 1832, section 9, and Act XXI of 1850 the Legislature virtually set aside the provisions of the Hindu Law which penalize the renunciation of religion, or exclusion from caste.

Where, therefore, in a joint Hindu family consisting of a father and son, the father was converted to Mubammadanism in 1845, Held (reversing the decision of the High Court) that by the father's abandonment of Hinduism the son did not acquire any enforceable right to his father's share in the joint family property which he could either assert himself, or transmit to his heirs for enforcement, in a British Court of justice.

Semble whatever right the son acquired under the Hindu law to the share of his father came into existence on the conversion of the latter in 1845 ; and no suit could have been brought (even if Regulation VII of 1832 and Act XXI of 1850 had permitted it) to enforce that right after the lapse of 12 years from the [357] time the cause of action arose (section 1, clause 12 of Act XIV of 1859) and nothing in article 142 of Act IX of 1871, or in article 141 of Act XV of 1877 could revive a right which had already become barred.

Hari Nath Chatterjee v. Mothurmohun Goswami (1) referred to.

After the death of the father (who survived the son) and their widows, a compromise was in 1860 effected between the two daughters of the son on the one side and the grandson of the father on the other, under which an 8½ anna share was allotted to the daughters and a 7½ anna share to the grandson. The 8½ anna share eventually, on the death of the survivor of the two daughters in 1899, devolved upon the respondents, her sons. In a suit by them in 1904 for possession of the 7½ anna share alloted to the grandson, against the appellants who were his successors in title as transferees from him or his heirs, Held (reversing the decision of the High Court) that the compromise of 1860 was a family arrangement by the members then claiming title to the property in settlement of their disputes, "each one relinquishing all claim in respect of all property in dispute other than that falling to his share, and recognising the right of the others as they had previously asserted it to the portion allotted to them respectively." [See Lalla Oudh Beharee Lall v. Ranee Mewa Koonwer (2)]. The compromise was therefore, binding on the Respondents.

The true test to apply to a transaction which is challenged by reversioners as an alienation is whether the alienee derives title from the holder of the limited interest or life-tenant, which in this case the predecessor in title of the appellants did not do: for the compromise here was "based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties and the agreement acknowledges and defines what that title is" [See Rani Mewa Kuwar v. Rani Hulas Kuwar (1)].

THREE consolidated appeals, 9, 10 and 11 of 1910, from judgments and decrees (23rd April, 1907) of the High Court at Allahabad which reversed judgments and decrees (20th May, 1905) of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bareilly which had dismissed the respondents' suits.

The three suits out of which these appeals respectively arose were instituted on the 15th September, 1904, by the present respondents Gobind Krishna Narain and Kashi Krishna Narain against the respective appellants Khunni Lal (Appeal No 9), Kanhaiya Lal and others (Appeal No. 10) and Sarnam Singh and others (Appeal No. 11) and the object of the suits was to recover from the defendants three mauzas called Mahlpur (in Appeal No. 9), Khai Khera (in appeal No. 10) and Chandana (in Appeal No. 11), the title on which each of the properties sued for was claimed [358] being the same, namely, that the plaintiffs were the reversionary heirs to one Daulat Singh, their maternal grandfather.

The defendants derived their title through one Khairati Lal, the daughter's son of one Ratan Singh, who was Daulat Singh's father, and who had in 1845 become a Muhammadan. The property in dispute had been the joint property of Ratan Singh and Daulat Singh, and on the death of the latter in January, 1851, had remained in the sole possession of Ratan Singh until his death in September. 1851, when it was recorded in the name of his widow Raj Kunwar. Disputes as to the right to the property arose between her and the heirs of Daulat Singh (his widow Sen Kunwar, and his two daughters Chattar Kunwar and Mewa Kunwar,) in consequence of which the property was taken charge of by the Court of Wards in 1852. Sen Kunwar died in 1857 and Raj Kunwar in 1858, and on their deaths the title to the property was contested by the daughters of Daulat Singh on the one side and Khairati Lal on the other, the contest eventually resulting in a compromise made between the parties on the 21st of July, 1860, under which the property was divided, 7½ annas being allotted to Khairati Lal, and 8½ annas to Chattar Kunwar and Mewa Kunwar.

The mauzas the subject of the three suits out of which the present appeals arose were included in the 7½ anna share allotted to Khairati Lal, of whom (or of his heirs) the present appellants were vendees.

The principal question for determination on these appeals was as to the validity and effect of the compromise of July, 1860, the appellants contending that it was a family arrangement which the daughters of Daulat Singh had power to make, and which was consequently binding on the respondents as the reversionary heirs; and the respondents asserting that it was in the nature of an alienation which could not be made by the daughters without legal necessity, and which was therefore not valid beyond the lifetime of the survivor, and came to an end on the death of Mewa Kunwar in 1899.

The appellants also contended that Ratan Singh did not forfeit his interest in the property by reason of his conversion to Muhammadanism; and that even if any right to it had devolved [359] upon Daulat Singh in 1845 when Ratan became a Muhammadan, such right had become extinguished, because Ratan Singh had been in sole possession of the property after Daulat Singh's death up to his own death a few months later in 1851, and the heirs of Daulat Singh had not obtained possession of any part of it until the compromise of 1860, and the suits were therefore barred by limitation. They also set up sections 41 and 51 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) as supporting their title as bona fide purchasers in possession.

The Subordinate Judge found in favour of the defendants and dismissed the suits.

On appeal a Divisional Bench of the High Court (Sir JOHN STANLEY, C. J. and Sir WILLIAM BURKITT, J.) reversed those decisions and gave each plaintiff a decree.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the report of the cases before the High Court which will be found in I. L. R. 29 All. 487.

On these appeals :—

Cowell, for the appellants, contended that Ratan Singh did not, by becoming a Muhammadan, forfeit his right to the half share to which he was entitled in the property held by him and his son Daulat Singh, the effect of Bengal Regulation VII of 1832, section 9, and Act XXI of 1850 being to prevent any such forfeiture as would have occurred under the Hindu law by making it not enforceable by law. Reference was made to Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu (1). As to the compromise of 1860 it was contended that it was not an alienation by way of gift to Khairati Lal, but a family arrangement in settlement of doubtful claims, and that under it the daughters of Daulat Singh became possessed for the first time of property to which their father's title accrued in 1845, but had never been enforced; and any imperfection in that title was cured by the compromise. Karimuddin v. Gobind Krishna Narain (2) and Lalla Oudh Beharee Lall v. Ranee Mewa Koonwer (3) were referred to. It was also submitted that the daughters of Daulat Singh had full power with the concurrence [360] of Khairati Lal, then the only reversioner, to make such an arrangement. As to the power of compromise of a person in possession of property for

The cases of Imrit Konwur v. Roop Narain Singh (3) and Sheo Narain Singh v. Khurgo Koerry (4), relied upon by the High Court as cases where compromises by a widow had been set aside, were decided on a different state of facts, and were distinguished from and therefore inapplicable to the present case; and Baboo Lekraj Roy v. Baboo Mahtab Chand (5) was referred to.

The possession obtained of the property now in suit by Khairati Lal was in full proprietary right, and he and his successors in title held adversely to Daulat Singh's daughters, and to the respondents, whose suits were therefore barred by limitation. Reference was made to Rani Mewa Kuwar v. Rani Hulas Kuwar (6); Limitation Act XIV of 1859, section 1, clause 12, and section 11; Act XI of 1861, section 2; Limitation Act IX of 1871, schedule II, article 142; Limitation Act XV of 1877, section 2, and schedule II, article 141. No right of suit which had been extinguished under the Act of 1859 could be revived by Act IX of 1871 or Act XV of 1877: Hari Nath Chatterjee v. Mothurmohun Goswami (7). The respondents had not shown any title, therefore, to the properties in suit.

De Gruyther K. C. and B. Dube, for the respondents, contended that on Ratan Singh's conversion to Muhammadanism he forfeited his share in the property jointly held by him and Daulat Singh, and the latter therefore became entitled in 1845 to the whole of the property of his father. Neither Bengal Regulation VII of [361] 1832, section 9, nor Act XXI of 1850 was applicable to the present case; they did not affect the substantive Hindu Law, but only rendered it unenforceable in the Civil Courts. Regulation VII of 1832 treated of procedure only and repealed (by section 8) so much of Regulation VIII of 1795 as provided that "in causes in which the plaintiff was of a different religious persuasion from the defendant the decision was to be regulated by the religion of the latter" substituting for specified localities the rules contained in the 1st clause of section 16 of Regulation III of 1803, which do not apply here. Moreover, Act XXI of 1850 was not retrospective; a statute did not affect vested rights without express words. Mayne's Hindu Law, 7th edition, page 805, section 593, and page 866, section 643; Nanjammah v. Karebbasappah (8); and Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 3rd edition, pages 298, 299 and 322 were referred to.

As to the compromise of 1860 it was not binding on the respondents. The daughters of Daulat Singh had, at the time it was made, the limited estate of a Hindu female and were therefore in the same position as a Hindu widow, whose powers of compromise were not more extensive than her powers of alienation, which, on the principle laid down in Katama Natchiar v. The Rajah of Shivagunga (9), would only bind the reversioners

March 28th, 1911:—The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Mr. AMEER ALI:—

These appeals, which have been consolidated by an order, dated the 1st of November, 1910, arise out of three actions in ejectment, brought by the plaintiff in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bareilly, who dismissed the suits by one judgment on the 20th of May, 1905. His decision, however, was reversed on appeal by the High Court of Allahabad, which decreed the plaintiffs' claims, on the 23rd of April, 1908. The defendants have appealed to His Majesty in Council, and the point for determination is the same in each case.

The plaintiffs claim as next reversioners to their grandfather (mother's father) Raja Davlat Singh to recover possession of certain properties held by the defendants, on the allegation that the deed of compromise under which the latter purport to derive title is not binding on them. The defendants, on the other hand, are transferees from one Raja Khairati Lal, a grandson by a daughter of Raja Ratan Singh, the father of Daulat Singh, and a party to the compromise in question.

The history of Ratan Singh's family and the circumstances which led to the compromise have been twice before this Board, in Rani Mewa Kuwar v. Rani Hulas Kuwar (11); and Karimuddin v. Gobind Krishna Narain (12) and will be found summarised in the earlier of the two cases. It is unnecessary, therefore, to enter into them at any length. For the purposes of the present [363] appeals it is sufficient to state that Raja Ratan Singh, who appears to have held a high position in the Court of the then King of Oudh, owned considerable property within British territories, part of which is in suit, and that he and his son Daulat were members of a joint Hindu family and thus entitled in joint tenancy each to a moiety of the properties.

It may be taken now as established beyond dispute that in 1845 Ratan Singh abandoned Hinduism and adopted the Muhammadan faith. But although his renunciation of the Hindu religion involved, under the Hindu law, the forfeiture of civil rights to the extent of depriving him of his share in the joint estate, Daulat advanced no claim based on such forfeiture, and father and son remained joint until the latter's death in January, 1851.

Daulat left him surviving a widow named Sen Kunwar, and two daughters, Chhattar Kunwar and Mewa Kunwar. On the death of Ratan Singh some months later (September, 1851) the entire property, which had stood all along in his name in the Collector's Register, was recorded in the name of his widow, Rani Raj Kunwar.

Disputes then arose between the heirs of Daulat on the one side and Raj Kunwar on the other. Eventually, and in consequence of these disputes, the Court of Wards took over, in 1852, possession of the entire estate, making Raj Kunwar, who is stated to have been a person of weak intellect, an allowance of Rs. 500 a month. The rights of Daulat's heirs do not appear to have been admitted to any part of the property, as no allowance was made to them, and, in fact, it is alleged, they were referred to the Civil Courts for the establishment of their rights. Matters remained in this condition for several years. Sen Kunwar died in 1857 and Raj Kunwar, Ratan's widow, the following year. In 1860, under the advice of Mr. John Inglis, a well-known District Officer, then Collector of Bareilly, the daughters of Daulat and the grandson of Ratan, Khairati Lal, entered into the compromise which the plaintiffs now seek to set aside so far as it affects them.

By this compromise Daulat Singh's daughters, Chhattar Kunwar and Mewa Kunwar, obtained between them an 8½ anna share [364] taking the entire estate as 16 annas; whilst Khairati Lal received a 7½ anna share. Partition was effected in terms of the compromise, and the parties obtained possession of the respective shares allotted to them. Chhattar Kunwar died in 1866. There was litigation between Chhattar's husband and Mewa Kunwar as to the right to Chhattar's share, which was ultimately decided in Mewa Kunwar's favour, who thus obtained possession of the entire 8½ anna share received by the two sisters in 1860. Mewa Kunwar died in 1899 and the share held by her has devolved on the plaintiffs, her sons.

Their case is that, on the abandonment of Hinduism by Ratan Singh he forfeited his half share in the joint property, which vested in Daulat Singh, that they as his heirs are entitled to the entire 16 annas; and that they are not bound by the compromise of 1860, as Chhattar Kunwar and Mewa Kunwar, being mere life-tenants, had no authority, in the absence of legal necessity, to alienate the 7½ anna share in favour of Khairati Lal.

The defendants, who are transferees either from Khairati Lal or his heirs, contend inter alia that the compromise entered into by the two ladies was not an alienation; that it was a family arrangement for the settlement of disputes, under which they obtained more than they were legally entitled to; that in view of the British legislation (to which the defendants refer) the forfeiture on which the plaintiffs rely could not be enforced, and that, therefore, there was no divestment of the right of Ratan in respect of his half share, and that, even if any such right, as the plaintiffs allege, devolved on Daulat in consequence of Ratan's conversion in 1845, it became "extinguished" on the lapse of 12 years from the date of such devolution,

The Subordinate Judge in a well-considered judgmnt upheld the defendants' pleas and dismissed the suits. The learned Judges of the High Court, on appeal by the plaintiffs, arrived at a different conclusion. They were of opinion that on the conversion of Ratan Singh, Daulat became " sole and absolute owner of the whole estate," inasmuch as Regulation VII of 1832 did not abrogate the Hindu Law as to " the consequences of apostasy," and Act XXI of 1850 was not enacted until some five years after his adoption of the Muhammadan faith. With [365] regard to the compromise of 1860, although they considered it to be 'just and wise" and "perhaps the best arrangement that could be made," they felt pressed by authority to hold in effect that it amounted to an alienation which the ladies, in the absence of legal necessity, were not competent to make, and that consequently it was not binding on the plaintiffs. In this view of the question they reversed, as already stated, the decision of the Subordinate Judge, and decreed the plaintiffs' claims in all three suits. The learned Judges did not deal with the question of limitation raised by the defendants.

Their Lordships regret they are unable to concur in the judgment of the High Court.

In 1845, when Ratan Singh abandoned Hinduism and adopted the Muhammadan faith, the rule laid down in section 9, Regulation VII of 1832, for decision in civil suits where the parties ranged against each other belonged to different persuasions, was in force in the Bengal Presidency. It declared in express terms that in such cases.—

" When one party shall be of the Hindu and the other of the Muhammadan persuasion, or where one or other of the parties to the suit shall not be either of the Muhammadan or Hindu persuasions, the laws of those religions shall not be permitted to operate to deprive such party or parties of any property to which, but for the operation of such laws, they would have been entitled."

Act XXI of 1850 extended the principle of section 9, Regulation VII of 1832, of the Bengal Code, throughout the territories subject to the Government of the East India Company. After reciting the provisions of section 9, and stating that it would be beneficial to extend its principle to the rest of British India, it enacted that—

"So much of any law or usage now in force within the territories subject to the Government of the East India Company, as inflicts on any person forfeiture of rights or property, or may be held in any way to impair or affect any right of inheritance, by reason of his or her renouncing, or having been excluded from the communion of any religion, or being deprived of caste, shall cease to be enforced as Law in the Courts of the East India Company, and in the Courts established by Royal Charter within the said territories."

The intention in both enactments is perfectly clear ; by declaring that the Hindu or Muhammadan law shall not be permitted to deprive any party not belonging to either of those persuasions of a right to property or that any law or usage which [366] inflicts forfeiture of rights or property by reason of any person renouncing his or her religion, shall not be enforced, the Legislature virtually set aside the provisions of Hindu law which penalizes renunciation of religion or exclusion from caste.

The effect of the legislation of 1832 and 1850 was that on Ratan Singh's abandonment of Hinduism, Daulat Singh did not acquire any enforcible right to his father's share in the joint family property which he could either assert himself or transmit to his heirs for enforcement in a British Court of Justice.

In the view their Lordships take of this branch of the case it is not necessary to discuss the question of limitation raised by the defendants.

But it may be observed that whatever right Daulat acquired under the Hindu law to the share of his father came into existence in 1845 on the conversion of the latter to the Muhammadan religion. No suit could be brought, even if the enactments referred to above had permitted it, to enforce the right after the lapse of 12 years "from the time the cause of action arose" (Section 1, clause 12, Act XIV of 1859). Nothing in article 142 of Act IX of 1871 or in article 141 of Act XV of 1877 could lead to the revival of a right that had already become barred. In this connection their Lordships would refer to the judgment of this Committee in the case of Hari Nath Chatterjee v. Mothurmohun Goswami (1) where it was pointed out that "the intention of the law of limitation is, not to give a right where there is not one, but to interpose a bar after a certain period to a suit to enforce an existing right."

Such were the relative positions of the parties in 1860, when the compromise was entered into. The heirs of Daulat had no existing enforcible right to the share of Ratan Singh, and the entire property was recorded in the name of his widow. Under these circumstances the parties, under the advice of the District Officer, instead of engaging in a long litigation, arrived at a mutual settlement of their claims. The real nature of the compromise is well expressed in a judgment of the High Court of the North-West Provinces in 1868 in the suit of Mewa Kunwar against her sister Chhattar Kunwar's husband—Lalla Oudh [367] Beharee Lall v. Ranee Mewa Koonwer (2). The learned Judges say as follows :—

"The true character of the transaction appears to us to have been a settlement between the several members of the family of their disputes, each one relinquishing all claim in respect of all property in dispute other than that falling to his share, and recognising the right of the others as they had previously asserted it to the portion allotted to them respectively. It was in this light, rather than as conferring a new distinct title on each other, that the parties themselves seem to have regarded the arrangement, and we think that it is the duty of the Courts to uphold and give full effect to such an arrangement."

Their Lordships have no hesitation in adopting that view. The true test to apply to a transaction which is challenged by the reversioners as an alienation not binding on them is, whether the alienee derives title from the holder of the limited interest or life-tenant. In the present case Khairati Lal acquired no right from the daughters of Daulat, for "the compromise," to use their Lordships' language in Rani Mewa Kuwar v. Rani Hulas Kuwar (3) "is based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties, and the agreement acknowledges and defines what that title is."

In their Lordships' judgment the decisions on the authority of which the learned Judges of the High Court have held the compromise not to bind the plaintiffs, are not applicable to the present case.

On the whole, their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment and decrees of the High Court at Allahabad should be reversed and those of the Subordinate Judge restored, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The respondents will pay the costs of this appeal and of the appeal in the High Court.

RAHIM-UN-NISSA (Defendant) v. BADRI DAS (Plaintiff).*

[3rd January, 1911.]

Mortgage—Prior and subsequent mortgagees—Decree obtained on a prior mortgage satisfied by execution of a fresh mortgage in favour of decree-holder—Priority over an intermediate mortgagee.

A decree for sale upon a mortgage of 1895 was obtained in 1901. In 1903 the decree-holder accepted in satisfaction of the decree a sale-deed of a certain portion of the mortgaged property, but this adjustment was never certified to the Court. Subsequently the decree was put into execution and a sale was ordered, but before it was carried out the parties came to terms, and the judgment-debtor executed a fresh mortgage to secure the decretal amount. This was in May, 1904. Meanwhile, in April, 1904, another mortgage had been executed by the judgment-debtor. Held that the mortgage of May, 1904, being in satisfaction of the earlier mortgage of 1895 had priority over that of April, 1904. Kanhaiya Lal v. Chedda Singh (1) and Shyam Lal v. Bashiruddin (2) followed.

[Ref. 47 Cal. 446=30 C. L. J. 496=55 I. C. 189; 43 All. 204=61 I. C. 942=18 A. L. J. 1105.]

THIS was a suit brought to enforce a mortgage of date the 17th of May, 1904, executed under the following circumstances. The plaintiff mortgagee held a mortgage from the same mortgagor of the 6th of February, 1895. This mortgage was put into suit and a decree obtained on it, and eventually matters were arranged between the plaintiff and the defendant in this way that the plaintiff took a fresh mortgage for the decretal amount and the decree was entered up as satisfied. When the present suit was brought one of the defendants resisted it on the ground that she held a prior mortgage of the 25th of April, 1904. The Court of first instance, however, held that this was of no avail against plaintiff's mortgage, inasmuch as he was entitled to claim priority in virtue of the original mortgage of 1895. The defendant mortgagee of April, 1904, appealed to the High Court.

Mr. A. H. C. Hamilton, for the appellant.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the respondent.

RICHARDS and TUDBALL, JJ.:—This appeal arises out of a suit on foot of a mortgage dated the 17th of May, 1904. The plaintiffs stated in the plaint that the mortgage was made to satisfy a certain decree obtained on the 25th of February, 1901, [869] on foot of a mortgage, dated the 6th of February, 1895. They therefore claimed that their mortgage had priority over the defendant's mortgage. The defendant claimed under a mortgage, dated the 25th of April, 1904, made by the last male owner of the property in favour of his wife, who is the present appellant. It appears that when the decree, dated the 25th of February, 1901, had been obtained, the decree-holder accepted from the judgment-debtor a sale deed of a certain part of the mortgaged property in full discharge of the decree. Possession, however, it is said, was never given, and it is admitted that the adjustment of the decree was never certified to the Court. Subsequently, the decree-holder put the decree into execution. The judgment-debtor objected, pleading the adjustment. The Court refused to recognize the adjustment, because it had not been certified according to law, and directed the property to be sold. Before the property was sold, however, the judgment-debtor asked for sanction to prosecute the decree-holder for fraudulently executing the decree which had been satisfied. The result of all this was the mortgage of May, 1904, on foot of which the present suit has been instituted. The amount of the mortgage was the amount of the decree of February, 1901. The Court below has decreed the plaintiff's claim giving the plaintiff the priority which was claimed. In appeal here it is contended that the decree of the 25th of February, 1901, was fully discharged by the sale-deed of 1903, and that the plaintiff's mortgage is only entitled to the priority of its actual date. Reliance has been placed upon the case of Nakta Ram v. Moti Ram (1). In that case, no doubt, it was decided that where the decree-holder took a usufructuary mortgage in discharge of a mortgage decree, he could not fall back upon the original mortgage on foot of which he had obtained his decree. This decision was considered in the case of Kanhaiya Lal v. Chedda Singh (2), and a Bench of two Judges expressed their dissent. In the case of Shyam Lal v. Bashir-ud-din (3), it was held that where a third person advanced money for the purposes of satisfying a mortgage decree for sale of the property and took a mortgage for the amount so advanced, he was [370] entitled to the benefit of the prior incumbrance, as against the incumbrances which had been created between the original mortgage and the new security. The same view seems to have been taken by both the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras. Mr. Hamilton, on behalf of the appellant, contends that the decree was actually satisfied by the sale-deed, and that the subsequent mortgage was a new arrangement altogether in which not only the old mortgage debt was satisfied but also a criminal charge compromised. We cannot take this view. It is clear that owing to the fact that the adjustment of the decree was not certified the property could be sold in execution of the decree, notwithstanding any adjustment. If the sale had taken place and the property had been sold to a third party, the latter would have got a perfect title and the sale would have been considered to be free of all incumbrances. We feel that we must regard the position of the parties without considering the complication of the sale of 1903, that is to say, we must deal with the case on the basis that prior to the actual sale of the property on foot of the mortgage decree the decree-holder took from the judgment-debtor a fresh mortgage for the amount due on foot of the decree. In our opinion, under these circumstances and on the authorities, the mortgagee is entitled to the benefit of the prior mortgage at least to the extent of all moneys secured by that mortgage. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

RICHARDS and TUDBALL, JJ.:—The facts of the case out of which this appeal has arisen are as follows:—One Agar Singh was the owner of certain shares in seven villages, namely, Mania, Ramnapur, Kakrahu, Benipur, Belghata, Parsu, and Mahadani. His share in mauza Kakrahu was 14 annas. On the 9th of July, 1880, he mortgaged an 8 anna share in mauza Kakrahu and a share in mauza Mahadani to Sheo Charan Misra the predecessors in title of the present plaintiffs respondents for a sum of Rs. 555. On the 1st of December, 1883, he mortgaged an 8 anna share of mauza Kakrahu together with shares in mauza Mania, Ramnapur, Benipur and Belghata, to one Jiwan Das, for the sum of Rs. 11,500. On the 16th of June, 1885, he gave a second mortgage to Sheo Charan Misra of the whole 14 anna share in mauza Kakrahu and a share in mauza Parsu for the sum of Rs. 2,000. This Rs. 2,000 consisted of Rs. 1,500, due on the bond of 9th July, 1880, and Rs. 500, cash. Jiwan Das brought a suit on his bond of 1883 without making Sheo Charan Misra a party, and obtained a decree on the 15th of March, 1887. In execution of that decree, on the 20th of June, 1893, an 8 anna share in mauza Kakrahu, together with the shares in mauza Ramnapur and Belghata, was sold at auction and purchased by Musammat Karamraji Kunwari, the wife of Agar Singh, for the sum of Rs. 700. On the 10th of June, 1895, Karamraji Kunwari sold an 8 anna share in mauza Kakrahu to the appellant defendant for the sum of Rs. 4,100. The heirs of Sheo Charan Misra have now sued on the bond of 16th June, 1885, and have made the appellant defendant a party to the suit and seek to bring to sale the whole 14 anna share of mauza Kakrahu and the share in mauza Parsu. The actual amount due on their bond was over 3 lakhs of rupees. The amount due in respect of the sum of Rs. 1,500 (which was the debt due on the old bond of 1880) would come to over two lakhs of rupees. The plaintiffs, however, sued only to recover Rs. 30,000 and the lower Court has held that [372] this is a part of the debt due in respect of the old mortgage of 1880. The appellant defendant pleaded that the bond of 1883 was prior to that of 1885, and that therefore, the plaintiff could not bring to sale an 8 anna share of mauza Kakrahu unless they paid the whole amount due on the mortgage of 1883 or at least Rs. 4,100, the price which she had paid to Karamraji Kunwari, for this 8 anna share. The lower Court held that out of this 8 anna share mortgaged in 1883, 6 annas were not mortgaged in the bond of 1880, but that the remaining 2 annas formed a part of that 8 anna share which was mortgaged under that bond; decreed the plaintiff's claim, and made the sale of this six anna share in mauza Kakrahu conditional upon the plaintiffs paying the sum of Rs. 700, to the defendant appellant. The defendant appellant appeals and urges that she is entitled to receive the sum of Rs. 4,100 before her six anna share can be put to sale. In our opinion the lower Court's order in regard to the payment of Rs. 700 is clearly wrong. In the first place Rs. 700 is not the price which was actually paid at the auction sale for this six annas, but the price paid for 8 anna share in this village and shares in two other villages. In the second place the price paid at that auction sale is not a true measure, in our opinion, of what the plaintiffs respondents ought to pay in order to redeem the prior mortgage on the six anna share. The fact that Sheo Charan Misra was no party to the former suit which terminated in the decree of 15th March, 1887, left in Sheo Charan Misra the right to redeem the prior mortgage of the property. The right of the present defendant appellant is the right to have the mortgage redeemed. We fail to see on what principle she is entitled to receive merely the sum which was paid at the auction sale whether that was a high price or a low price. This was the view taken by a Bench of this Court in Dip Narain Singh v. Hira Singh (1), wherein it was held that a subsequent mortgagee is not entitled to redeem a prior mortgage by simply paying the price for which the prior mortgagee may have purchased the property at an auction sale held in execution of a decree obtained by him without joining the subsequent mortgagee as party; but such subsequent mortgagee must, if he wishes to redeem pay to the prior mortgagee the full amount [373] due on his mortgage. The only difficulty in applying this principle to the present case is due to the fact that the prior mortgagee Jiwan Das and all those persons who may have purchased the mortgaged property in execution of his decree have not been made parties to this suit. There is nothing on the record to show whether or not the decree of the 15th of March, 1887, has been satisfied or in what manner it has been satisfied, if at all. There is nothing to show whether the other properties mortgaged were sold or not, and if sold, to whom and for what amounts. No objection was taken by the defendant appellant in the lower Court as to the non-joinder of parties, and in this appeal she merely claims that she is entitled to receive the price which she paid to Karamraji Kunwari (not for the 6 anna share) but for the 8 anna share. In these circumstances it seems to us that the only equitable method of doing justice between the parties is to allow the plaintiffs respondents to bring this six anna share in mauza Kakrahu to sale conditional on their paying to the appellant that portion of the mortgage debt due on the bond of 1883, which can properly be attributed to the 6 anna share in dispute. In order to enable us to do this we must have findings by the lower Court upon the following points which we refer as issues under order 41, rule 25, of the Code of Civil

Rules of Court of the 4th April, 1894 rule, (1) proviso—Pleader's fees—Fee certificate not filed at or before the hearing—Fee not paid before hearing—Discretion of Court.

Held on a construction of rule 80 (1) of the rules of Court of the 4th April, 1894, that the proviso to rule 80 only gives a Court a discretion to accept a certificate for fees filed after the commencement of the hearing, but, whatever might have been intended, leaves no discretion as to the allowance, on taxation, of a fee which in fact was not paid on or before the first hearing.

[Ref. 61 I. C. 804.]

THIS was a suit for a declaration of the plaintiffs' title to certain moneys in the custody of the Bank of Bengal. The only question raised by the appeal was as to the disallowance by the Court of the fees of the pleader appearing for the Bank, which the Court considered itself unable to allow, having in view the proviso to rule 80 (1) of the rules of Court of the 4th April, 1894, by reason of the said fees not having in fact been paid at or before the first hearing, although it permitted a fee certificate to be filed after the first hearing. The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment of the Court.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor, for the appellants.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the respondents.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J. :—The only question in this appeal is concerned with the pleader's fee. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs to have a declaration of their title to certain moneys held by the Bank. The Bank was prepared to hand over the moneys to the persons entitled, whoever they might be, and only required to be satisfied that the plaintiffs were the parties so entitled. The case was taken up late on the afternoon of the 3rd of September, and on a representation by the pleader for the Bank that the agent of the Bank was not present and the certificate required by the rules of the Court as to the payment of fees could not be verified, the Court intimated that the certificate would be accepted afterwards. On the following day the case appeared on the list, and, after some formal matters were disposed of, was adjourned to the 17th of September. On the 16th of September the pleader's fee was [375] paid and a certificate filed, and the case was adjourned to the 21st of September when the arguments wer heared. Judgment was delivered on the 22nd of September. The result of the suit was that the claim was decreed but costs were awarded to the Bank. Only Rs. 2-8-0 were allowed in respect of costs; the pleader's fee not being allowed on the ground that it was not paid before the commencement of the hearing of the suit. This appeal has been preferred in respect of the pleader's fee, and it has been contended before us by the learned counsel for the Bank that inasmuch as the Court intimated that the certificate would be accepted after the first hearing that the fee ought to have been allowed. The Court below in its order in reference to the fee stated that in intimating that "the defendant would be justified in producing the required affidavit and certificate on the next following date" it did not undertake to condone the defendant's failure to file this document up to the 16th of September, 1909. The learned Suborninate Judge referred to the rules of the High Court on the subject and decided that he could not allow the pleader's fee to be included in the costs in the decree. Rule 80 (1) of the rules of the 4th of April, 1894, as amended, provides that "In drawing up a decree or order no fee to any legal practitioner, not appearing for the Crown * * * shall be allowed on taxation between party and party * * * unless the Munsarim, or, on application to the Judge, the Judge is satisfied that the fee was paid to such legal practitioner at or before the commencement of the hearing of the suit or application * * * and unless at or before such time there shall have been delivered by the Munsarim a certificate signed by the legal practitioner certifying the amount of the fee or fees actually paid to him * * * together with an affidavit made by such client or his authorized agent". This rule, we may observe, prescribes that the Court shall be satisfied that the fee is paid to the pleader at or before the commencement of the hearing of a suit, as also as to the delivery to the Munsarim of a certificate signed by the legal practitioner certifying the amount of the fee or fees actually paid to him. In this case the fee was not paid until the 16th of September, that nearly a fortnight after the commencement of the hearing [376] of the suit. Consequently the Court was justified in the course which it took in refusing to allow the appellant's pleader's fees. But it is said that the proviso to the rule in question meets this case. That proviso runs as follows:—"Provided that in any case the presiding officer may, for valid reasons to be recorded by him, accept a certificate for fees filed after the time mentioned above." It will be observed that this proviso only enables a presiding officer to exercise a discretion as to whether or not he will accept a certificate for fees filed after the commencement of the hearing. It gives him no discretion in regard to the allowance of a fee which was not paid at or before the commencement of the suit. It may be, when these rules were drawn up, that it was intended to give the presiding officer a general discretion in the matter of a fee tardily paid: but if this was intended, it is certainly not expressed in the proviso as it at present stands. In view of this rule we think that the Court below rightly refused to allow the pleader's fee in this case. We dismiss the appeal, but under the circumstances without costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL (Opposite party)
v. BISHAN DAT (Applicant).*
[5th January 1911.]

Act No. 1 of 1894 (Land Acquisition Act), sections 9, 25—Omission to attend in answer to notice—Owner not entitled to claim more than was awarded by the acquisition officer.

It is intended by section 9, clause (2) of the Land Acquisition Act that the owner of property about to be acquired should appear and state his claim in the manner provided by the clause so as to enable the acquisition officer to make a fair, reasonable and proper award based upon a proper inquiry after the proper means have been placed before him for holding such inquiry. Section 25, clause (2), makes the refusal or omission to comply with the provisions of section 9 (2) without sufficient cause an absolute bar to the obtaining of a greater sum than that awarded by the Collector.

THIS was an appeal arising out of a reference under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. The acquistion officer awarded Rs. 3,450 as the price of the land to be acquired. The owner [377] made no claim in compliance with section 9, clause (2), of the Act, but he applied for a reference to the District Judge claiming Rs. 12,830. The District Judge awarded him the sum of Rs. 6,668, including the 15 per cent. for compulsory acquisition. The Secretary of State appealed, mainly upon the ground that having regard to the provisions of section 9, clause (2), and section 25 of the Land Acquisition Act, the owner was not entitled to more than was awarded to him by the acquisition officer.

Mr. A. E. Ryves, for the appellant.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the respondent.

RICHARDS and TUDBALL, JJ. :—This appeal arises out of a reference under the Land Acquisition Act. The property is situated in Allahabad. The acquisition officer awarded Rs. 3,450 for it. The owner made no claim in compliance with section 9, clause (2), of the Land Acquisition Act of 1894. He, however, applied for a reference to the District Judge, claiming Rs. 12,830. He examined one witness, Mr. Acton, the Municipal Engineer, and no other. The learned District Judge awarded the sum of Rs. 6,668. The sum so awarded included the 15 per cent. for compulsory acquisition. The Secretary of State has appealed. The first ground of appeal is that having regard to the provisions of section 9, clause (2), and section 25 of the Land Acquisition Act, the ower can have no greater sum awarded to him than the amount awarded by the Collector, or in the present case the Land Acquisition Officer. The respondent contends that the notification of dissatisfaction with the award is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the Act. We are not prepared to take this view. In our opinion it was intended by clause (2) of section 9 that the owner of property about to be acquired should appear and state his claim in the manner provided by the clause so as to enable the acquisition officer to make a fair, proper, and reasonable award based upon a proper inquiry after the proper means have been placed before him for holding such inquiry. cause an absolute bar to the applicant in the reference obtaining a greater sum than that awarded by the [378] Collector. There is, however no reference in the judgment of the learned District Judge to this point having been raised before him. It is suggested that the point was waived. Even on the merits, we think that the order of the District Judge cannot be sustained. For the reasons given in our judgment in F. A. No. 294 of 1909, decided yesterday, we cannot approve of the conclusion of the learned District Judge in respect to so much of the property as was let to tenants. Furthermore, the evidence given by the Collector applies to this case as well as to the others, while the evidence given in the present case by the owner is confined to the evidence of Mr. Acton. With regard to the house No. 194-C, part of the property acquired, which is in the occupation of the owner himself, we find that the acquisition officer allowed the sum of Rs. 920. Mr. Aston, the sole witness examined by the owner, valued this property as a whole at Rs. 798. It thus appears, that the acquisition officer allowed the owner a larger sum than his sole witness valued it at. The learned Judge in arriving at his conclusion has, contrary to the evidence produced by the owner himself and contrary to the evidence of the Collector, awarded a still greater sum. In our opinion the appeal must prevail. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and award the applicant the sum of Rs. 3,450, namely, the amount awarded by the acquisition officer. The Secretary of State will have costs in both Courts to be paid by Bishan Dat.

Appeal allowed.

THE plaintiffs in this case sued the defendants for the price of goods sold. Two of the defendants, who contested the suit, denied having purchased any goods from the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit. Against this decree there was an appeal filed, on the 7th of January 1910, to the District Judge. and some railway receipts showing that it was not true that the plaintiffs had sold their entire stock-in-trade to the defendants, but that they had sent some goods to Cawnpore after the date of the alleged sale. No definite order was passed on the application, but in his judgment the learned District Judge referred to the defendants' prayer for additional evidence and in the end decided the appeal on the evidence as it stood on the record and affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Munshi Gokul Prasad, for the appellant, contended that the Judge had not passed any order on the application of the 28th of June. He was bound to pass some order. There was therefore no proper trial.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the respondent :—

The grounds of appeal contained a prayer for additional evidence, but it was not suggested what the nature of it was. [380] The Judge had exercised his discretion and refused to take additional evidence and his action could not be impugned ; Ram Piari v. Kallu (1). The defendants could have withdrawn the appeal and applied for review to the Court of first instance. The lower Appellate Court could not take additional evidence, order XLI, rule 27 ; Kessowji Issur v. G. I. P. Ry. Co. (2), Krishnama v. Narasimha (3), Ramappa bin Dareppa v. Dharma bin Rama (4).

Munshi Gokul Prasad, in reply :—

The defendants could not apply for review, as the appeal was pending before the District Judge ; Navivahu v. Turner (5). The learned Judge did not dispose of the application praying for additionol evidence to be taken. The nature of the evidence was disclosed in the application.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—The sole ground of appeal in this case is that the lower Appellate Court erred in deciding the appeal without taking additional evidence and that this irregularity prejudiced the appellant's case. The suit was for the price of stock-in-trade alleged to have been sold by the plaintiffs to the defendants. Some of the defendants did not dispute the claim, but the appellants, Durga Prasad and Sital Prasad, filed written statements in which they alleged that no cloth was received in the defendants' shop, nor had the plaintiffs any shop for the sale of cloth at any time. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiffs' claim, and an appeal was thereupon preferred by the defendants appellants. During the pendency of the appeal an application was made to the lower Appellate Court to have certain documents, including railway receipts and certain account books, sent for. This application was ordered to be put up with the record, no order having been made at the time upon the application. The learned District Judge, however, considered the application as is clear from the language of the judgment. In his judgment he says :— " Appellants take up a peculiar position. First, they say that they could put up a better defence than was actually made if they were now allowed to import fresh evidence into the case. Secondly, they take exception to the [381] character of the account books produced, apparently on account of their size." He did not allow the defendants to produce any further evidence, clearly believing that the defence was not a genuine and bona fide defence. He dismissed the appeal and confirmed the decree of the Court below.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

33 A. 379=8 A. L. J. 175 =9 I. C. 265.

This second appeal has been preferred, the sole ground of appeal being the alleged irregularity which we have already stated. The order under which an appellate court is empowered to allow a party to produce additional evidence is to be found in order XLI, rule 27. That order expressly forbids the court to allow additional evidence to be produced, except in a case in which the Court below has refused to admit evidence which ought to have been admitted, or the appellate court itself requires any document to be produced, or any witness to be examined, to enable it to pronounce judgment or for any other substantial cause. The learned District Judge in this case did not consider that any grounds had been shown sufficient to justify him in allowing the further evidence referred to in the application of the defendants to be adduced. He exercised his discretion in the matter, and, as it appears to us, impliedly, if not expressly, refused the application. This being so, the question arises whether or not the action of the court below is such as would justify us in allowing a second appeal. We think not. A similar question was considered in the case of Ram Piari v. Kallu (1). In that case one of us was a party to the judgment. It was there held that a refusal in the exercise of the discretion given to the court by section 568 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, which corresponds with order XLI, rule 27, to admit additional evidence was not an error or defect coming within section 584 of that Code. In the judgment in that case one of us remarked as follows:—"Under section 568 of the Code a party to an appeal is not entitled to produce additional evidence in the appeal as of right, but the court may in its discretion admit additional evidence. Where the court has exercised its discretion, and in the exercise of its discretion has refused to admit additional evidence, it cannot be said [382] that a substantial error or defect in procedure has taken place, which affords a ground of second appeal under section 584." This decision, which we are bound to follow, is conclusive against this appeal. The lower appellate court did, we think, exercise its discretion, and having exercised its discretion no second appeal will lie. For these reasons we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Held on suit for sale by the subsequent mortgagee that it was not open to the subsequent mortgagee to bring this portion again to sale upon the ground that the auction purchaser was merely a benamidar for the mortgagor. Ram Narain v. Mohanian (1) followed.

[Ref: 49 I. C. 907.]

THIS was a suit brought by the representatives of the original mortgagee to enforce a mortgage executed by one Bindeshri Bakhsh Pal Singh on the 20th August 1895, and comprising shares in several villages. So far as the share in one village—Rusia —was concerned, the suit was resisted upon the ground that it had been purchased at an auction sale in execution of a prior mortgage decree by Musammat Jairaj Kunwari, the wife of Bindeshri Bakhsh Pal Singh. The plaintiffs alleged that this purchase was made merely as the benamidar of Bindeshri Bakhsh Pal Singh. Musammat Jairaj Kunwari's defence was that this contention was not open to the plaintiffs in view of the provisions of section 317 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. The court of first instance (Additional Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur) dismissed the suit except as regards a very small portion of the mortgaged property. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, Munshi Gobind Prasad and Munshi Iswar Saran, for the respondents.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by the plaintiffs appellants, to enforce a mortgage of the 20th of August, 1895, made by the defendant, Bindeshri Bakhsh Pal Singh for himself and as general attorney of his brother's widow, Musammat Lakhpat Kunwari, in favour of Hari Singh, the predecessor in title of the plaintiffs. The property comprised in the mortgage consisted of a 6 anna 8 pie share in Rusia, and 2 anna 8 pie share in the village Tejpur and a 2 anna 8 pie share in a third village Nakahi Nagahi. There is no controversy in this appeal as regards the share in Tejpur. The court below has made a decree for the sale of that share and also of a $10\frac{1}{3}$ pie share in mauza Nakahi Nagahi. As regards the share in mauza Rusia, it has dismissed the claim. That share was purchased at auction in execution of a decree obtained on an earlier mortgage by Musammat Jairaj Kunwar, the wife of the first defendant. The share in Nakahi Nagahi was sold by the mortgagors to the respondent, Ram Kumar Naik, on the 5th of August, 1905. What we have to consider in this appeal is whether the plaintiffs appellants are entitled to a decree for sale of the share in mauza Rusia and of the whole of the 2 anna 8 pie share in mauza Nakahi Nagahi mortgaged under the mortgage deed executed in favour of Hari Singh. As regards the share in mauza Rusia, which was purchased at auction by Musammat Jairaj Kunwari, the allegation of the plaintiffs is that this purchase was in reality by Bindeshri Bakhsh Pal Singh and that Musammat Jairaj Kunwari was only his benamidar. They say that, as the real purchaser was Bindeshri Bakhsh Pal Singh, and he mortgaged it to them, they are entitled to a decree for sale of the share in the aforesaid village. On behalf of the respondent, Musammat Jairaj Kunwari, it is urged that the claim against her is barred by the provisions of section 317 of Act No. XIV of 1882, which was the Act applicable at the date of the institution of the present suit.

[384] We think that, in view of the ruling of the Full Bench in Ram Narain v. Mohanian (1), this contention must prevail. In that case it was held that a mortgagee who derived his title from his mortgagor is precluded by the provisions of the aforesaid section from bringing a suit for a declaration that the auction purchaser of the mortgaged property was the benamidar of the mortgagor and was not the beneficial owner. This is what the plaintiffs seek to do in the present suit. They seek to have it declared that Musammat Jairaj Kunwari is the benamidar of their mortgagor, Bindeshri Bakhsh Pal Singh, from whom they derive title as mortgagees. In view of that ruling the claim as against Mussammat Jairaj Kunwari is not maintainable, and this part of the decree of the Court below must be upheld, though not on the ground on which that Court has made it.

As regards the share in Nakahi Nagahi, it was mortgaged jointly by Bindeshri Bakhsh Pal and Musammat Lakhpat Kunwari. If the mortgage was made by both of them, Ram Kumar Naik purchased the share mortgaged subject to the mortgage, but assuming that the mortgage was not a valid mortgage on behalf of Lakhpat Kunwari, the plaintiffs are in our judgment still entitled to a decree for sale of the 2 anna 8 pie share mortgaged to them. The ground on which we think the plaintiffs are entitled to such a decree is that Bindeshri Bakhsh Pal purported to mortgage the 2 anna 8 pie share on the representation that he was authorised to mortgage that share. If Musammat Lakhpat Kunwari owned part of that share, her interests were admittedly those of a Hindu widow, who succeeded to her husband, and therefore amounted only to a life interest. She is dead and therefore the life interest has determined. Ram Kumar Naik, as purchaser from her, has no longer any right to the property acquired by him under his purchase from her. That property has passed to Bindeshri Bakhsh Pal as the next reversioner. As Bindeshri Bakhsh purported to mortgage the whole of the 2 anna 8 pie share on a representation that he was authorized to make the mortgage, and as he is at present the sole owner of the 2 anna 8 pie share, the mortgage will operate on the 2 anna 8 pie share under the provisions of section 43 of the Transfer of [385] Property Act. In this view the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for sale of a 2 anna 8 pie share in Nakahi Nagahi and the decree of the Court below must be varied as regards the share in that villge comprised in the mortgage.

We accordingly vary the decree of the Court below so far that we make a decree for sale of 2 anna 8 pie share of the village Nakahi Nagahi. instead of $10\frac{3}{4}$ pie as decreed by the Court below. The appellants will get their costs of this appeal and also in the Court below from Ram Kumar Naik, defendant. Musammat Jairaj Kunwari will get her costs of this appeal from the plaintiffs appellants. We extend the time for payment of the mortgage money for a period of six months from this date. In other respects we affirm the decree of the Court below. The objections preferred by Ram Kumar Naik necessarily fail and are dismissed with costs.

Decree varied.

Criminal Procedure Code, sections 462 (3), 537—European British subject—Jury—Jury not chosen by lot—Illegality.

Held that the provisions of section 460 (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure are imperative and if there is no choosing of the jury by lot, as provided for by the section, the result is that the whole trial is vitiated—Brojendra Lal v. King-Emperor (1) referred to.

[Diss. 1917 M. W. N. 1=36 I. C. 847=18 Cr. L. J. 15.]

IN this case one T. Bradshaw was committed to the Court of the Sessions Judge of Lucknow on charges under sections 474 and 417 of the Indian Penal Code. The date fixed for the trial was the 7th October, 1910. For that date ten European jurors were summoned to attend the Judge's Court at 10 o'clock, but up to 10-35 A. M., only three out of those summoned had appeared, and these were all empanelled without being chosen by lot. The accused was convicted, and appealed to the High Court, urging that the jury which tried him had not been constituted in the manner provided for by the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Mr. C. Dillon (with him Mr. R. F. Bahadurji), for the accused.

[386] The Government Advocate (Mr. A. E. Ryves) for the Crown.

KARAMAT HUSAIN, J.—In this case one Bradshaw, a European British subject, was committed to the Court of Sessions of Lucknow, for trial, for offences under sections 474 and 417, Indian Penal Code. He was convicted on both counts and sentenced to an aggregate term of one year's rigorous imprisonment. He appeals to this Court and one of the points taken is that there was no selection of jurors by lot as required by section 276 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and that, therefore, the proceedings resulting in his conviction are illegal.

He, as it appears from the record of the case, claimed to be tried as an European British subject and with a jury composed of Europeans or Americans (section (450). The last date fixed for the trial by the Court of Sessions was 7th of October, 1910, and the record of the case shows that for that date 10 European jurors were summoned to attend, and the remarks of the learned Sessions Judge, in his order, dated the 7th of October, 1910, are to the same effect. He, towards the end of that order, says:—"I further note that, including the two above gentlemen, only three European jurors have up to this moment (10-35 A.M.) appeared, out of 10 summoned to be present at 10 A.M."

According to Notification No. $\frac{1693}{VI-545-A-10}$ in trials by Jury before the Courts of Sessions in the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, the jury shall consist of five persons.

Section 462, clause (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, provides that from the whole number of persons returned, the jurors who are to constitute the jury shall be chosen by lot in manner prescribed in section 276, until a jury containing the proper number of Europeans or Americans or a number approaching thereto as nearly as practicable has been obtained.

Section 276 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that the jurors shall be chosen by lot from the persons summoned to act as such, in such manner as the High Court may, from time to time, direct.

Rule 102 of the rules and orders for Criminal Courts subordinate to the Court of Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, [387] gives the manner in which the jurors are to be chosen by lot. As the number of European jurors who appeared on the 7th of October, 1910, was only three and as all of them were empanelled, it is evident that the imperative procedure prescribed for choosing jurors was not followed. Jurors are the judges of facts, and in the absence of a properly constituted jury, the violation of the imperative procedure prescribed by the Code of Criminal Procedure is of such a serious nature as cannot be cured by the provisions of section 537 of that Code. See Brojendra Lal Sircar v. King Emperor (1).

For the above reasons I allow the appeal, set aside the sentence and conviction, and direct that the appellant be retried by a properly constituted jury. As the appellant is in the Naini Jail, I, on the application of his learned counsel, allow him to be admitted to bail to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate of Allahabad.*

Where of two properties belonging to the same owner one is mortgaged to secure one debt and then both are mortgaged to secure another debt, for the purpose of apportioning the liability of the respective properties in regard to the subsequent mortgage, the value of the two properties must be taken into account, and credit given for the amount due upon the earlier mortgage out of the value of the property comprised in the subsequent mortgage. without any reservation to one Gulzari Lal. On the 27th of April, 1896, he mortgaged to the same mortgagee all his rights and interests in the northern Mahal and a 2½ biswas share in the southern mahal together with its appurtenances. Gulzari Lal brought a suit for sale on both mortgages and obtained a decree on the 17th of April, 1905. The total amount decreed to him was Rs. 3,732-14-0. He assigned the decree to one Kamla Dat, who took out execution of it and caused the mortgaged property to be advertised for sale. On the 11th of September, 1907, Muhammad Amin made a usufructuary mortgage of his share in the northern mahal excluding the miscellaneous property appurtenant to that mahal in favour of the plaintiffs. The amount of the mortgage was Rs. 4,000, and it was agreed that this sum should be applied to part satisfaction of the decree of the 17th of April, 1905. The amount was paid, but as a further sum still remained due under the decree, the plaintiffs paid into Court Rs. 6,760-14-0, on the 18th of September, 1907, and thus averted the auction sale which had been fixed for the 21st of that month. The defendants Nos. 1—6 are purchasers of the southern mahal in execution of a money decree. The sale in their favour took place in 1902. The plaintiffs claimed contribution from them in respect of the southern mahal purchased by them and from the mortgagor Muhammad Amin in respect of the miscellaneous property which was not mortgaged to the plaintiffs.

The Court below has excluded from consideration the sum of Rs. 4,000 which was the amount for which the mortgage in plaintiff's favour was made. In so doing we think it was right. That amount was payable to the mortgagor and the payment of it must be deemed to be payment by the mortgagor himself. As to the remainder of the amount paid by the plaintiffs we fail to understand the method pursued by that Court in ordering [389] contribution. The decree which was passed in favour of Gulzari Lal was no doubt a decree for recovery of Rs. 8,730-14-0 from the mortgaged property, but it is urged on behalf of the appellants that the decree must be deemed to be a decree for sale of the property mortgaged under the first mortgage for realization of the amount due under that mortgage and of the remainder of the property for realization of the amount of the second mortgage. On the other hand Mr. O'Conor, for the respondents, contends that the decree directed the realization of the total amount decreed from all the property comprised in the two mortgages. We are unable to agree with Mr. O'Conor's contention. In the prayer in the plaint of Gulzari Lal what he asked for was that the 6¼ biswas share in the northern mahal should be first sold by auction and out of the sale proceeds the amounts of the first mortgage should be satified and that the remainder of the mortgaged property, namely, the southern mahal, should then be sold for the realization of the amount due under the second mortgage of 1896. It is this prayer of the plaint which was granted by the Court. There is nothing to show that the Court intended to award to the then plaintiff anything more than what he had asked for. In the decree it is provided that upon payment not being made on or before the date fixed, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof will be sold and in the specification of the mortgaged property reference is made to the relief asked for in the plaint. This reference clearly indicates that the Court awarded to the plaintiff what he had prayed for and no more, that is to say, it directed that the property comprised in the first mortgage should be sold for the realization of the amount due upon that mortgage and the property mentioned in the second mortgage should be sold for the realization of the amount payable under that mortgage. The decree contains a specification of the amounts severally due under the two mortgages. We think that in this respect the contention put forward on behalf of the appellants is correct.

This being so, it is urged that the Court below ought to have declared the amounts for which the respective properties were liable after taking into consideration the value of the property comprised in the first mortgage and the amounts due under that [390] mortgage. Reliance is placed on section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act. The second paragraph of this section provides that " where of two properties belonging to the same owner one is mortgaged to secure one debt and then both are mortgaged to secure another debt, and the former debt is paid out of the former property, each property is in the absence of a contract to the contrary. liable to contribute rateably to the latter debt after deducting the amount of the former debt from the value of the property out of which it has been paid." The value of the northern mahal including miscellaneous property appertaining thereto has been found by the Court below to be Rs. 3,636. The amount due under the decree of Gulzari Lal on account of the first mortgage of 1895 was Rs. 3,844-8-0. Therefore, when for the purpose of apportioning the liability of the respective properties in regard to the subsequent mortgage the value of the two properties is taken into account, credit must be given for the amount due upon the earlier mortgage out of the value of the property comprised in the subsequent mortgage. In this case the amount due upon the earlier mortgage exceeded the value of the property comprised in that mortgage. The necessary result is that the whole of the amount of the second mortgage was recoverable from the other property comprised in the mortgage, viz., the $2\frac{1}{2}$ biswas of the southern mahal and its appurtenances. The defendants respondents who are now the owners of the southern mahal, are therefore liable to the plaintiff for the amount which the plaintiff paid for saving that mahal from sale in execution of the decree obtained by Gulzari Lal, and the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the amount paid by them, viz., Rs. 5,760-14-0 with interest thereon from the defendants and their property.

We accordingly vary the decree of the Court below and make a decree in the plaintiff's favour for the recovery of Rs. 5,760-14-0, with interest thereon, at 6 per cent. per annum, from the date of suit up to the date of realization, to be recovered from the property in the hands of the defendants, namely, $2\frac{1}{2}$ biswas of the southern mahal together with its appurtenances. The parties will pay and receive costs in both Courts in proportion to failure and success. We fix the 1st of July, 1911, for payment [391] of the amount decreed and direct that the decree be drawn up in the terms of order XXXIV, rule 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

IN a suit for the recovery of possession of certain property the Court of first instance held that the suit was barred by the provisions of section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and dismissed it. There was then an appeal to the High Court. The High Court held that section 43 of the Code was not a bar to the suit, and accordingly remanded the case to the lower Court for a decision on the merits. The present application was made for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against this order of remand.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the applicants.

The opposite parties were not represented.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI J.:—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The suit out of which the case has arisen was brought by the plaintiffs for recovery of possession of certain property. It was held by the Court of first instance that the suit was barred by the provisions of section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. But upon appeal to this Court the decree of the Court below was set aside and the case was remanded to the Court below on the ground that the suit was not concluded by section 43 of the former Code, and [392] as the questions of fact had not been determined, the court below ought to re-admit the suit and decide it on the merits. From this order of remand the present application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council is made. We are of opinion that the application for leave to appeal is premature. The order of remand is not in our judgment a decree or final order within the meaning of section 109, of the present Code of Civil Procedure. In the case of Forbes v. Amir-oon-nissa Begum (1), their Lordships of the Privy Council treated an order of remand as an interlocutory order and held that no appeal lay on the ground that it did not purport to dispose of the cause. Again, in the case of Mahant Ishavargar Budhgar v. Caudasama Amarsang (2) the Bombay High Court also held that no appeal lay as a matter of right from an order of remand. Again, in the case of Saiyid Muzhar Hossein v. Mussammat Bodha Bibi (3), their Lordships of the Privy Council in their judgment, in regard to the question whether or not it was the practice of this Court to treat orders of remand as not final orders, observe that probably the practice referred to is quite correct. Again in the case of Radha Kishan v. The Collector of Jaunpur (1), in which this High Court passed an order under section 562 and remanded the case for disposal on the merits, on appeal their Lordships of the Privy Council observe of this order of remand that it is a purely interlocutory order directing procedure. In view of these decisions and of the language of section 109 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which refer to a decree or final order, we do not think that the present application is maintainable. The order which has been passed is an interlocutory order, and, as such, cannot be regarded as a decree or final order within the meaning of the section. It is contended on behalf of the proposed appellants by their learned advocate that section 105 of the Code gives the right of appeal in a case such as the present where an order of remand has been passed. That section, after providing for appeals in certain cases, prescribes in sub-section 2 that where any party aggrieved by an order of remand made after the commencement of the Code from which an appeal lies does not appeal thereform, he shall thereafter [393] be precluded from disputing its correctness. This section would no doubt justify the application which has been made if it were applicable to Privy Council appeals, but in our judgment it is not applicable to Privy Council appeals. Such appeals are dealt with in section 109 and following sections. It is further, we think, manifest from the language of section 108 that section 105 does not apply to Privy Council appeals.

For these reasons we reject the application, but without costs as the respondents are not represented.

Application rejected.

GANGARAI AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. KIRTARATH RAI AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs.)*

Mortgage—Redemption—Right to reedeem one of two properties separately mortgaged.

Two persons mortgaged certain property in 1879. In 1883 one of the mortgagors executed a mortgage comprising in part property subject to the mortgage of 1879 and in part other property in favour of the same mortgagees. This latter mortgage contained a stipulation that the mortgagor would redeem it before redeeming the mortgage of 1879. Certain property comprised in the first mortgage, but not in the second, was sold, and the purchasers sued for redemption of that mortgage alone. Held that in the circumstances they were not precluded by the covenant in the second mortgage from redeeming the first.

On the 6th of May, 1879, two persons, Ram Lakhan and Ram Baran, executed a mortgage of certain property in favour of Bharose Rai, Ganga Rai and Mahpat Rai. This mortgage contained the usual covenant allowing the mortgagors to redeem on payment in the month of Jeth in any year. A portion of the property comprised in this mortgage was afterwards sold to Kirtarath Rai and others. In the year 1883 Ram Lakhan alone mortgaged certain property—partly property other than that comprised in the mortgage of 1879—to the same mortgagees. That mortgage contained the following covenant: —" First I (the mortgagor) shall pay this money, and then the money borrowed on the security of fields (i. e. the amount of the former mortgage)." The purchasers above referred to sued for redemption of [394] the mortgage of 1879, but were resisted upon the ground that it was incumbent on them first to redeem the mortgage of 1883. The court of first instance (Subordinate Judge of Ghazipur) acceded to this contention and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal, however, the District Judge reversed this decree. The defendants mortgagees appealed to the High Court.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala and Munshi Parmeshar Dayal, for the appellants Babu Sital Prasad Ghosh and Babu Balram Chandra Mukerji, for the respondents.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J.:—This appeal arises under the following circumstances. The suit is one for the redemption of mortgage of the 6th of May, 1879. This mortgage was executed by two persons—Ram Lakhan and Ram Baran—in favour of Bharose Rai, Ganga Rai and Mahput Rai. It contained the following provision, namely, that " when in the month of Jeth in any year the mortgagees paid the principal with Government revenue paid by the mortgagees, the property will be redeemed." Portion of the property in this mortgage was subsequently sold to the plaintiffs by Ram Lakhan and by the heirs of Ram Baran who was then deceased. Having so purchased portion of the property, it is clear that the plaintiffs would, under ordinary circumstances, be entitled to redeem the mortgage. Their claim, however, to redeem, was resisted by the appellants on the ground that a subsequent mortgage of the 24th of October 1883, was executed, whereby the mortgagor undertook, as it is alleged, not to redeem the first mortgage, until the mortgagor had first redeemed the second mortgage. This second mortgage was executed by Ram Lakhan Rai alone and not by Ram Baran or his heirs. It also comprised different property from the property comprised in the mortgage of the 6th May, 1879 On turning to this mortgage we find the following provision upon which reliance has been placed by the learned counsel for the appellants, namely "First, I (the mortgagor) shall pay this money and then the money borrowed on the security of fields" (the fields representing the property comprised in the first mortgage). The contention is that, in view of the provisions of section 61 of the Transfer of Property Act, the plaintiffs, who are purchasers of a portion of [395] the property comprised in the first mortgage, which was not included in the second mortgage, are not entitled to redeeem the mortgage of the 6th of May, 1879, until they first redeem the later mortgage—a mortgage with which they have no concern. The court of first instance acceded to this contention and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

On appeal the learned District Judge reversed the decision of the court below, holding that upon a true construction of the agreement in the later mortgage, it did not amount to a consolidation of the two mortgages, but simply fixed the time when Ram Lakhan would pay the amount of the second mortgage.

We entirely agree with the lower anpellate court upon the view so adopted. By the second mortgage no charge whatever was created upon the property comprised in the first mortgage. This second mortgage was executed by Ram Lakhan alone and by the undertaking which Ram

Lakhan gave, he could not in any way prejudice the rights of Ram Baran or his heirs. Moreover, the agreement is not an agreement whereby the mortgagor deprived himself or purported to deprive himself of the right to redeem the first mortgage. It is simply an agreement on his part to pay the money secured by the second mortgage first, and then the money secured by the first mortgage. This is nothing more than a provision fixing the time for payment. There is no agreement in the second mortgage on the part of the mortgagor that he would not be entitled to redeem the first mortgage, without paying the money due under the second mortgage. Mr. Agarwala strenuously relies upon the language of section 61 of the Transfer of Property Act, but we think that he puts a forced construction upon that section. If we turn to the illustration to the section, we get a clue as to the true meaning of it. The illustration is as follows :—

A, the owner of farms Z and Y, mortgages Z to B for Rs. 1,000. A afterwards mortgages Y to B for Rs. 1,000, making no stipulation as to any additional charge on Z. A may institute a suit for the redemption of the mortgage to Z alone.

Here, Ram Lakhan and Ram Baran executed a mortgage of one property, and subsequently one of the mortgagors, Ram Lakhan alone, mortgaged separate property, making no stipulation as [396] to any additional charge of the first property. This illustration discloses the intention of the Legislature in enacting section 61 and exactly meets the present case. Therefore this ground of appeal is without force.

It is further contended that under the first mortgage the mortgagors agreed upon redemption to pay the principal amount of the mortgage debt, together with any Government revenue which might have been paid by the mortgagees, and that the sum deposited in court under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act fell short of the amount due uuder the mortgage by a sum of Rs. 25; which, it has been found, the mortgagees paid on account of revenue. It is contended that in view of this fact the mortgagors have a right to be deprived of the costs of the litigation. We are unable to accede to this contention. The sum is a very small sum and the mortgagors had no knowledge that the mortgagees had paid this amount. In fact, in their statement of claim they alleged that no revenue was paid by the mortgagees. On the other hand the mortgagees asserted that they had paid a sum of Rs. 246 in respect of revenue, whereas, as a matter of fact, they only paid Rs. 25. In view of this we do not think that the order passed by the Court below in the matter of cost, was unreasonable. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[Ref: 1 Pat. L. J. 298=37 I. C. 487.]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

THE applicant got an ex parte decree against two persons in the court of Small Causes at Calcutta, on the 5th of May, 1909, got the decree transferred to the Munsif's Court at Phaphund and applied for execution. The judgment-debtors objected that the decree was obtained by fraud. The Munsif overruled the objection on the ground that he, as the court executing the decree, could not go behind it. The judgment-debtors thereupon brought a suit in this same Munsif's court praying that the decree may be declared null and void and that the property attached in execution should be released. This suit was referred to arbitration and the arbitrator gave his award that the decree was fraudulently obtained and judgment was passed by the Munsif in accordance with the award on the 9th of September, 1909. On the 18th of October, 1909, the Munsif acting under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, issued an order calling upon the decree-holder to show cause why he should not be tried by a criminal court on a charge falling under section 210, Penal Code, and on the 15th of March the Munsif ordered the prosecution of the decree-holder. The decree-holder applied to the High Court in revision.

Babu Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the applicant, contended that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to take proceedings under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, inasmuch as there were absolutely no judicial proceedings before him. His passing a decree in accordance with the award was not sufficient to make the proceedings "judicial." The offence was not brought to his notice in a judicial proceeding as the suit as brought was not within his jurisdiction. He relied on Umrao Singh v. Hardeo (2). If the matter had been brought to his notice in execution proceedings, Girwar Prasad v. King-Emperor (1) might have been applicable. Moreover, the delay in taking proceedings against the applicant was not satisfactorily accounted for.

[398] The Government Advocate (Mr. A. E. Ryves) for the Crown, submitted that the case first came before the Munsif in execution proceedings. Such proceedings are "judicial" as held by the Calcutta High Court in Barindra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (4). The Munsif distictly found that a fraud had been committed, and under the circumstances he had jurisdiction in the matter. He relied on Banke Bihari v. Pokhe Ram (3) which laid down that where there was any further relief asked for in addition to getting a decree passed by another court declarad null and void, the court would have jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

Babu Satya Chandra Mukerji, in reply:—

In the case in I. L. R. 25 All. 48, the prayer was one for an injunction, that made the suit cognizable. In the present case the prayer was quite different.

criminal court on a charge falling under section 210 of the Indian Penal Code. We are asked to reverse this order on two grounds ; first, that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to pass the order, and secondly, that if he had jurisdiction, the Munsif had improperly exercised this jurisdiction.

The decree out of which all these proceedings have arisen was a decree passed by a Court in Calcutta. Execution proceedings were taken out and the decree was transferred to the Court of the Munsif of Phaphund. Upon the Munsif of Phaphund taking action, the judgment-debtors appeared before him and stated that the decree had been obtained by fraud. The learned Munsif held the view that, as a court executing a decree, he had no alternative but to proceed with the decree, as it stood. He overruled the objection of the judgment-debtors. The judgment-debtors then instituted a suit in the court of the Munsif of Phaphund, praying that the decree in question might be declared null and void and that an injunction might be issued staying further proceedings in execution. It appears that this suit was referred to arbitration. When the arbitrator returned the [399] case, judgment was passed by the Munsif in accordance with the award on the 9th of September, 1909. This was followed by proceedings under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Kamta Prasad was called on to show cause why he should not be prosecuted, and on the 15th of March, 1910, the order now under revision was passed.

It will be seen from the above statement of facts that the first plea taken in revision is hardly correct. The Munsif took action upon what had been brought under his notice in his own court, viz., the suit filed by the judgment-debtor ending in the decree of the 9th of September, 1909. An attempt has been made to contend that in passing judgment in accordance with the award the Munsif had not before him a judicial proceeding. He had merely to give judgment in accordance with the award and had nothing before him on which to exercise his judicial mind. We do not think that this is so. The proceedings before the Munsif were judicial proceedings, and the alleged offence was brought to the notice of the Munsif in the course of judicial proceedings. This Court has already held, in Girwar Prasad v. King Empreor (1), that the words contained in section 476 " brought under its notice " are wide enough to cover an offence which may have been committed in another forum and on some previous occasion. We do not find that in the exercise of his jurisdiction the learned Munsif has acted either illegally or with material irregularity. The contention relating to this plea was based on what this Court held in Umrao Singh v. Hardeo (2), but, as pointed out in Banke Bihari Lal v. Pokhe Ram (3), where a plaintiff asks that a compromise be declared null and void and an injunction issues restraining execution of a decree, the Court has jurisdiction to try the suit. The learned judges in that case drew a distinction between the case before them and the case of Banke Bihari Lal v. Pokhe Ram, where the plaintiff asked only a declaration that the decree has been obtained by fraud and not for any further relief.

We find no reason to interfere and dismiss the application with costs.

MAZHAR HUSAIN KHAN (Defendant) v. ABDUL HADI KHAN (Plaintiff).*

Muhammadan law—Waqf—Charitable object—Expenses of fatiha of executant—Burning lamps in mosque—Salary of Hafiz.

Held by BANERJI, J., (STANLEY, C. J., dubitante), that a waqf by which a substantial portion of the income of the endowed property was appropriated for (1) expenses of the annual fatiha of the waqif, of her husband and members of her family; (2) the annual expenses of burning lamps in a mosque, and (3) the salary of Hafiz and readers of the Quran, was a valid waqf, and that there was a substantial dedication of the property to religious or charitable purposes. Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhri v. Amarchand Kundu (1), Luchmipat v. Amir Alum (2), Phul Chand v. Akbar Yar Khan (3), Biba Jan v. Kalo Husain (4) referred to. Kaleeoola Sahib v. Nuseerudeen (5) and Fakhr-ud-din Shah v. Kifayat-ullah (6) doubted.

Per STANLEY, C. J. The general dedication of villages in the name of God is not sufficient to render the waqf valid, in respect of so much of the property as has been dedicated expressly for specific objects which are not proper objects of waqf; fatiha ceremonies and the reading of the Quran in private do not seem to be such objects.

THIS was a suit to recover certain immoveable property by right of inheritance to one Muhammad Altaf Ali Khan, who had died in 1875. Since Altaf Ali Khan's death the property in suit had been in the possession of his widow Barkat-un-nissa, who had made a waqf of it. The plaintiff, on the 21st June, 1898, impeached the deed of waqf, alleging that Musammat Barkat-un-nissa had no power to make the endowment, and that it was fictitious and colourable and was executed under undue influence. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that Barkat-un-nissa entered into possession of her husband's property for the purpose of satisfying her dower thereout and that she was therefore incompetent to make a waqf of it.

The court below held that Barkat-un-nissa had been during her life in proprietary possession of one-fourth of her husband's [401] properties by right of inheritance and that in respect of this one-fourth share she was competent to make a waqf. As to the remaining three-fourths it held that her possession was in lieu of dower, and that she had no right to dispose of her interest in this share of the property. It held that the waqf was valid as to one-fourth of the properties and gave a decree to the plaintiff for mesne profits.

The defendant appealed, and the main contention advanced on his behalf was that Barkat-un-nissa's possession of the entire estate of her husband was proprietary and not to any extent in lieu of dower, and that the waqfnama was valid and effectual as regards all the property comprised in it.

33 A. 400=9 I. C. 753=8 A. L. J. 162.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor (with him Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba), for the appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal (with him Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq), for the respondent.

STANLEY, C.J.—The plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen claims possession of 286 out of 512 sihams of zamindari property situate in the villages of Mawaya and Surahi in the district of Shahjahanpur and also mesne profits. The property claimed belonged to Muhammad Altaf Ali Khan, the cousin of the plaintiff, who died so far back as the 27th of November, 1875. He had no issue, and on his death the following were his heirs: Abdulla Khan, father of the plaintiff, Husain Raza Khan, uncle of the plaintiff and Musammat Barkat-un-nissa, his widow, who was step-sister of the plaintiff. The dower of Musammat Barkat-un-nissa is said to have been Rs. 1,25,000. On the death of her husband she entered into possession of his property, and, amongst others, of the villages of the Mawaya and Surahi. On the 21st of June, 1898, Musammat Barkat-un-nissa executed a deed of endowment of the lands situate in these villages and appointed herself mutawalli during her life, and after her death she directed that her sister's son, the defendant, Mazhar Husain Khan, should be mutawalli of the property in mauza Mawaya and Muhammad Nur-ul-Haq of the property in the village of Surahi. Abdulla Khan, father of the plaintiff, [402] died on the 27th of May, 1880 leaving Abdul Baqi Khan, brother of the plaintiff, Musammat Muhammadi Begam, mother of the plaintiff, Musammats Barkat-un-nissa and Naim-un-nissa, his daughters, together with the plaintiff as his heirs. Husain Raza Khan, uncle of the plaintiff, died during the lifetime of Barkat-un-nissa, leaving Abdul Baqi Khan, brother of the plaintiff, Raiz-ul-Raza Khan and Ali Raz Khan, his nephews, Musammat Moti Begam, his widow, and the plaintiff as his heirs. On the 2nd of February, 1906, and 5th of June, 1908, Abdul Baqi Khan trasferred to the plaintiff his interest in the estate of his father and of Barkat-un-nissa; and Muhammadi Begam, the mother of the plaintiff, also transferred to him her interest by a deed of sale of the 4th of June, 1908. Thus the plaintiff claims to be the owner of 286 sihams of the estate of Muhammad Altaf Ali Khan. In his plaint he impeached the deed of waqf of the 21st of June, 1898, alleging that Musammat Barkat-un-nissa had no power to make the endowment, and that it was fictitious and colourable and was executed under undue influence. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that Barkat-un-nissa entered into possession of her husband's property for the purpose of satisfying her dower thereout and that she was therefore incomptent to make a waqf of it.

The Court below held that Barkat-un-nissa had been during her life in proprietary possession of one-fourth of her husband's properties by right of inheritance and that in respect of this one-fourth share she was competent to make a waqf. As to the remaining three-fourths it held that her possession was in lieu of dower, and that she had no right to dispose of her interest in this share of the property. It held that the waqf was valid as to one-fourth of the properties and gave a decree to the plaintiff for mesne profits.

This appeal was preferred and the main contention advanced before us on behalf of the appellant is that Barkat-un-nissa's possession of the entire estate of her husband was proprietary and not to any extent in lieu of dower, and that the waqfnama was valid and effectual as regards all the property comprised in it.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

33 A. 400=8 I. C. 753 = A. L. J. 162.

[403] A cross appeal, namely, F. A. No. 315 of 1909, was filed by Abdul Hadi Khan, and in that appeal he disputes the correctness of the court below in regard to the volidity of the waqf contending that the objects for which the waqf was created are not proper objects of waqf.

The suit was not instituted until the 22nd of January, 1909, that is, nearly three years after the death of Barkat-un-nissa, which took place on the 17th of June, 1906. It is not denied that Barkat-un-nissa was in possession from the death of her husband up to the time of her death, that is, upwards of 30 years, but the contention of the plaintiff respondent is that she was put into possession for the purpose of satisfying her dower, and that the dower having been satisfied out of the usufruct, her husband's heirs are entitled to recover the property.

The defendant appellant met this case by the production of a number of documents which according to the arguments of his learned counsel, abundantly show that from the death of her husband the possession of Barkat-un-nissa of his property was adverse and proprietary, and that the members of the family treated her ownership as proprietary. I shal deal with these documents.

The plaintiff, as we have said, impeached this deed of endowment as being fictitious and executed under undue pressure and influence. There is no evidence worthy of the name to indicate that any undue influence was exercised over Barkat-un-nissa or pressure brought to bear upon her in the matter of the waqf. The court below held that Barkat-un-nissa endowed the property of her own free will without any undue pressure being brought to bear upon her, and in this I agree with the court below.

It also held that the objects of the waqf were valid, but that, inasmuch as Barkat-un-ntssa was in possession and enjoyment of the property merely in lieu of dower, the waqf was only good as regards the one-fourth share to which she was entitled as an heir of her husband. Now the expenses directed [404] to be met out of the property by the deed of waqf include, as I have said, the expenses of the fatiha ceremony of private individuals including the fatiha of the executant. There is also a provision of Rs. 60 annually as a salary for Hafiz and readers of the Quran. It has been contended that these are not proper objects of waqf. There is also a direction that a certain annual sum should be applied in the expenses of lighting a mosque, offerings on the occasion of the celebration of the birth of the Prophet and offerings to the great Piran Pir, and on the tenth day of Muharram and Cheblum; also for the salary of the head teacher of a school established by the executant and the salary of a Hafiz and servant employed in the school and the lighting and carpeting of the school. As to these last mentioned objects they appear to me to be clearly valid objects of waqf. But as regards the expenses of fatiha ceremonies and the salary of Hafiz and readers of the Quran, I am disposed to think that these are not proper objects of waqf. Generally speaking, a waqf is valid if it be for pious or charitable purposes, as for instance. construction of bridges and musjids, the building of a madrasa providing books for a library, the building and maintaining of mosques, the providing of shrouds for the dead, and the providing and maintenance of burial grounds. As regards a waqf for fatihat in its popular sense. my brother KARAMAT HUSAIN has expressed the view that it is neither religious nor charitable in the sense of charity for the benefit of the poor. which they may claim as a matter of right. If he be right in his views, a waqf for a fatiha cannot be a valid waqf. I quote from my learned brother some of his observations on the fatiha ceremony. After explaining what the orthodox fatiha ceremony is, he remarks :—

"The superstitious tendency of the human mind has added to it (i. e. the fatiha ceremony) innovations which are not sanctioned by the Muhammadan Law and seem to have been borrowed from non-Moslem communities and cannot possibly be regarded as part and parcel of Islam. They, in fact, are stains on the purity of Islam. One of them with which I am concerned is that during the first year of Muhammad's death his fatiha ceremony is performed on the third day of his death (sometimes the second day), tenth day, the twentieth day, fortieth day, and so on. After the first year it is performed, if performed at all, annually. There is, however, nothing in the Muhammadan Law to sanction such [405] a periodical fatiha. Another innovation is that instead of reading the Surat fatiha and offering the reward to the deceased on the fatiha day some food is prepared, a priest or a Maulvi is asked to repeat the Surat fatiha on the food which is distributed among the relatives and friends of the person who spent the money for the preparation of the food Some of it sometimes, as a matter of usage is given to the poor also, but they have no claim to it as a matter of right."

He later on observes that :—

"From what has been said it follows that the fatiha ceremony in its popular sense means the preparation of food or sweets at the death anniversary of a deceased Muhammadan, which, after the recital of a fatiha, is distributed among the friends and the relation of the person who spent the money over it without any regard to the poverty of the recipients. No one who is familiar with the Hanafi Law can say that a waqf for spending the income of endowed property in preparing food, which after the reading of the Surat fatiha over it, is given to people without any regard to their poverty is a waqf for a religious or charitable purpose. The preparation of food and the reading of the Surat fatiha over it cannot possibly be a religious act, and the giving of such food to persons who are not poor and who cannot claim it as a matter of right is no charity in the sense in which that term is used in the case-law of waqf."

Then he refers to the case of Kaleloola Sahib v. Nuseerudeen (1) as supporting his view that a waqf for the annual fatiha ceremonies of an ordinary deceased Muhammadan, although those ceremonies necessarily involve the distribution of charity, is illusory and void (7 A. L. J. R. 1095).

The view so stated seems to me to be in accordance with the tenets of Muhammadan schools. Fatiha ceremonies do not seem to fall within any definition of a charitable or religious use and tend to no public advantage. They closely resemble masses for the repose of the souls of deceased persons, which have been held in Ireland to be contrary to public policy and invalid. Then as regards the Rs. 60 set apart annually for the salary for Hafiz and readers of the Quran, it seems to me that this also is not a proper object of waqf. The reading of the Quran in private serves no purpose of public utility and comes within the principle of the Muhammadan Law applicable to fatiha ceremonies. If the expenses of fatihat and the salary of Hafiz and readers of the Quran directed to be discharged annually in the deed of waqf are eliminated from the endowment as being invalid, it seems to [406] me to follow that the portion of the endowed property devoted to these expenses must be exempted from the operation of the waqf. The general dedication of the villages in the name of God in my opinion would not be sufficient to render the waqf valid in respect of so much of the property as has been dedicated expressly for specific objects which are not proper objects of waqf. Income to the extent of about Rs. 200 a year has been, as I am disposed to hold, directed to be applied for purposes which are not valid. The provision in the document that the mutwallis shall be competent to apply the income in other charitable expenses if the income of the endowed property permit the same to be done, would not, I think, allow of their so applying the income expressly devoted to the expenses of fatiha and salary of Hafiz and readers. This provision appears to me to be intended only to meet a case in which the annual income exceeds the amount required for the expenses specifically mentioned in the waqfnama. If the dedication of the property for the fatiha and other ceremonies in question are valid, then the mutawalli is bound to apply the income to meet these expenses and not other expenses. If my view as to this be correct, so much of the property as represents the income directed to be applied for objects which are not legal, should be treated as unendowed property. When immovable property is given for mixed purposes, partly valid and partly invalid, the beneficial interest in the invalid portion passes to the heirs. I do not understand that the Privy Council have laid down any contrary ruling. What their Lordships laid down in Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak v. Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhri (1) was that provision for the dedicator's family out of appropriated property might be consistent with the making of a valid waqf where the appropriation is substantially for a pious or charitable purpose. They did not hold that where property is dedicated partly for invalid purposes and substantially for valid objects, the portion appropriated for invalid purposes should not go to the heirs. In view, however, of the rulings which are referred to in the judgment of my brother BANERJI, which I have had an opportunity of [407] reading, particularly the judgment of my brothers RICHARDS and GRIFFIN in Biba Jan v. Kalb Husain (2), in which they held that the expenses of fatiha, barsi, et cetera, of the members of the waqf's family were legitimate objects of waqf, I do not feel justified in recording a dissentient judgment on this question.

It remains to determine whether Barkat-un-nissa was in possession of the endowed property at the date of the execution of the deed of waqf merely in lieu of dower. It appears to me idle to contend that she was so in possession. The documents to which I have referred show that from the death of her husband she set up a claim to possession of the property as its absolute owner. There is nothing to show that either she or the other heirs of her husband regarded her possession as referable to dower, and there is nothing to indicate that she was put into possession in lieu of her dower.

There is only one piece of evidence which, if at all, supports the plaintiff's contention in this respect. In a lease of certain villages, which was executed by Barkat-un-nissa on the 14th of December, 1881, there is a statement that the property, the subject matter of the lease, was owned by her without any one's partnership by virtue of its being her property and "by virtue of her dower." This it is contended is an admission by Barkat-un-nissa that she was in possession in lieu of her dower, but I am unable to accede to this contention. In the first place we do not know the circumstances under which this lease was prepared. It does not appear that it was ever read over or explained to Barkat-un-nissa, and it is quite possible that the words in reference to dower were inserted without her knowledge. The document was signed by the pen of her nephew, Riaz-ul-Raza, and was witnessed by, amongst others, Hasan Raza Khan, the brotner of Altaf Ali Khan. She was identified before the Commissioner by Hasan Raza Khan and Riaz-ul-Raza Khan, and it does not appear from the registration endorsement that the document was read over or explained to her. Moreover, the words " by virtue of my dower" (bazarya den-mahar) are equivocal. They do not [408] necessarily mean that she was in possession in satisfaction of her dower. The property is described as being owned by the Musammat by virtue of its being her property and by virtue of her dower, and the expression would be applicable if the property had been given to her by her husband in satisfaction of her dower, as is not uncommon. I think that the learned Subordinate Judge attached too much weight to the recital in this document in view of the fact that Barkat-un-nissa dealt with the property as her own absolute property for over 30 years, and that none of the heirs of her husband ever, prior to this litigation, set up the case that she was not in full proprietary possession of it, but on the contrary showed by their acts and conduct that they recognized her ownership. I am of opinion that the decision of the Court below is erroneous. I therefore concur in the order proposed by my brother BANERJI.

BANERJI, J.—Two questions have to be determined in this appeal : first, what was the nature of the possession of Barkat-un-nissa in respect of the property left by her husband Altaf Ali Khan, at his death ; and, second, whether the waqf made by her on 21st of June, 1898, is valid or not.

As regards the first question, the allegation of the plaintiff is that Barkat-un-nissa was in possession of her husband's property for the realization of her dower. The Court below has held that she was in possession of one-fourth of the property in her own right as heir to her husband and of the remainder in lieu of her dower. It is contended that this latter finding is opposed to the evidence on the record and that Barkat-un-nissa was in adverse proprietary possession. The weight of evidence, in my opinion, supports this contention. The evidence on the point is set forth in detail in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, and it is unnecessary to recapitulate it. After the death of Altaf Ali Khan the name of Barkat-un-nissa was recorded in the revenue papers as his heir under the management of the plaintiff's father, Abdulla Khan, who was one of the heirs of Altaf Ali Khan. In the mutation proceedings no mention was made of her dower. Subsequently she obtained partition of a portion of her husband's property as the owner thereof and in partition [409] proceedings held at the instance of Ali Raza she was made a party as one of the proprietors. Later on a reference was made to arbitration, and under the award of the arbitrator she was given her husband's share. After her death in 1906 the plaintiff and his brothers divided her property, and in all these proceedings she was treated as absolute owner and no reference was made to her dower, and it was never alleged that she was in possession for the realization of her dower. The learned Subordinate Judge has given undue weight to a recital contained in a lease granted by her in 1881, as pointed out by the learned Chief Justice. She was alive for more than thirty years after her husband's death, and the total amount of her dower was realized from the usufruct long before her death. Had she been in possession for her dower the heirs of her husband would undoubtedly have taken back the property from her possession. If it be assumed that her dower was due, that fact alone would not raise any presumption in favour of the contention that her possession was in lieu of her dower. A Muhammadan widow may, no doubt, be allowed to take possession for the realization of her dower, but it does not follow from the mere fact of her taking possession that she did so for her dower. For these and other reasons I fully agree with the learned Chief Justice in holding that Barkat-un-nissa was in adverse proprietary possession after her husband's death.

In regard to the second question, namely, that of the validity or otherwise of the waqf, the Court below has held it to be valid in respect of Barkat-un-nissa's own one-fourth share. The correctness of this conclusion is impugned in the connected First Appeal No. 335 of 1909, and it is urged that some of the objects of the waqf are not valid. In my judgment this contention has no force. The deed of waqf contains the following recital :—

"I, while in a sound state of body and mind and of my own free will and accord, have made an endowment of the villages, lands, groves and houses detailed above, in the name of God. I have divested myself of possession of the property and have endowed it in the name of God."

She then declares herself to be the first mutawalli and directs that after her death two mutawallis would be appointed, one for each of the two villages which are the subject of the [410] waqf. The document proceeds to give a detail of the expenses to be incurred and the duties to be performed by the mutawallis and among these details are—

(1) The expenses of the annual fatiha of the waqf, of her husband and of other members of her family and of two spiritual guides : (2) annual expenses of burning lamps in a mosque; (3) the salary of hafiz and readers of the Quran.

It is in regard to these expenses that the plaintiff urges that they are unlawful. The details of each item of expenditure under the above heads are given in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, and I consider it unnecessary to repeat them here. They amount to Rs. 212 out of a total of Rs. 527.

According to the well-known decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council a valid waqf, is created if the owner of the property, the subject of the waqf divests himself of it and appropriates it to religious or charitable purposes. Their Lordships held that in order to constitute a valid waqf there must be a substantial dedication of the property to religious or charitable uses at some time or other ; Mahomed Ahsan-ul-la Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (1). In this case the maker of the waqf completely divested herself of the ownership of the property. The question is whether there was a substantial dedication for religious or charitable purposes. It is said that a provision for the fatiha ceremony of the appropriator and members of her family is not a religious or charitable object, and in support of this contention the dictum of our learned colleague, KARAMAT HUSAIN, J., in Fakhr-ud-din Shah v. Kafayat-ul-lah (2), is relied upon. In the view taken by the Bench which heard an appeal under the Letters Patent from the judgment of our learned brother the question of the validity of a waqf for fatiha ceremonies did not arise. However, any expression of opinion by our learned colleague on a question of Muhammadan Law is entitled to great weight. He holds that a waqf for the performance of fatiha ceremonies is invalid, not because it is so under the strict rules of Muhammadan Law but because in his opinion fatiha is not a charity "in the sense in which that [411] term is used in the case-law of waqf." He observes in the course of his judgment that "the word 'charitable' has no doubt a wider significance in Musalman Law. But now, under the rulings of the Privy Council 'charity' means 'charity to the poor'." I am unable to agree with my learned brother in the view which he takes of the decisions of Their Lordships of the Privy Council. All that Their Lordships lay down is that there must be a substantial and not a merely colourable dedication of the property, and that the religious and charitable purpose should not be so unsubstantial and illusory as to give to the settlement merely a colour of piety, the real object being the aggrandisement of the family. See Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak Chowdhri v. Rasamaya Dhur (1). They nowhere held that no waqf would be valid unless its object is charity to the poor only. For instance, the establishment of a school or a caravan serai, which are availed of both by the rich and the poor, are admittedly objects of a valid waqf. Fatiha, as our learned colleague points out, is " the offering up of prayers to the Almighty for the remission of sins and the acceptance into heaven of the individual in whose name it is desired." This undoubtedly is a religious act, and expenses for such an act cannot but be regarded as expenses for a religious purpose. The weight of authority is in favour of the view that a waqf for the performance of fatiha ceremonies of the donor and of the members of his family is valid. In Luchmiput Singh v. Amir Alum (2) a waqf for fatiha at the tomb of members of the dedicator's family was held by the Calcutta High Court to be valid. In Phul Chand v. Akbar Yar Khan (3) a Bench of this Court held that a waqf for the performance of fatiha ceremonies, which involve according to the custom of this country the distribution of alms, is a good waqf. Similarly in the recent case of Biba Jan v. Kalb Husain (4) RICHARDS and GRIFFIN, JJ., held that expenses of the death anniversaries (fatiha, barsi, etc.) of the members of the waqi's family are legitimate objects of waqf. Original authorities [412] of Muhammadan Law were cited in the argument in support of this view and are set forth on page 7 of the Appendix to the report of the case. The only case in which a contrary view was held is that of Kaleloola Sahib v. Nuseerudeen Sahib (5) which was followed by KARAMAT HUSAIN, J., in the case to which I have already referred. I have expressed my dissent from the view of COLLINS, C. J., and PARKER, J., in that case in my decision in Sayed Mustafa v. Amina Begam (6), and I see no reason to alter my opinion. That case was, it is true, followed by TAYABJI, J., in Zooleka Bibi v. Syed Zynulabdin (7), but not on the question of fatiha. TAYABJI, J., approved of that ruling in so far as it laid down that a valid dedication could not be made for the maintenance of a private tomb, but he expressed no opinion on the question of fatiha. That question did not also arise in Muhammad Munawar Ali v. Rasulan Bibi (8). Referring to the ruling of the Appellate Court in Kaleloola Sahib v. Nuseerudeen Sahib, Mr. Ameer Ali remarks (Mahomedan Law, Vol. I, p. 390, 3rd Edition) that "under Mahomedan Law there could not be the faintest doubt that the waqf in this case was absolutely valid." Among the objects of the waqf in that case were the salaries of repeaters of the Quran, and the expenses of the annual fatiha of the deceased, and as to all these Mr. Ameer Ali is of opinion that they are valid objects of waqf. No authority was referred to by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court for holding a contrary opinion, and I see no reason to accept it. I hold that fatiha expenses are a valid object of waqf.

As for the expenses of burning lamps in a mosque and the salary of Hafiz and readers of the Quran they are, according to Mr. Ameer Ali, valid objects of waqf. That the lighting of mosques and the reading of the Quran are meritorious acts cannot admit of any doubt. The authorities cited on pages 5 and 6 of the Appendix to the report of the case of Biba Jan v. Kalb Husain (1) show that what Abu Hanifa considered as repugnant was the reading of the Quran at graves, but that [413] the payment of remuneration to readers or repeaters of Quran generally is not illegal or improper. I may observe that on the above questions no authorities were cited at the hearing by the learned advocate for the plaintiff.

Furthermore, the deed of Waqf in this case gives full power to the mutawalli to defray "other necessary charitable expenses if the income of the endowed property permits the same to be done." If, therefore, the objects referred to above, are not proper objects of waqf the mutawalli has the power to devote the income to other charitable objects which are not open to objection. I have pointed out above that the total amount of expenses mentioned in the deed of waqf is Rs. 527, out of which exception is taken to items amounting to Rs. 212 only. There was therefore a substantial dedication of the property to religious or charitable purposes within meaning of the rulings of Their Lordships of the Privy Council and the waqf is valid. For the above reasons I am of opinion that the decision of the Court below on this point is correct.

The result is that in my judgment the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed in its entirety, the appeal of the defendant (No. 256 of 1909) should be allowed and the plaintiff's appeal No. 315 of 1909 should be dismissed. I would order accordingly.

BY THE COURT:—The order of the Court is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below is set aside and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs in this Court and in the court below.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

33 A. 414=8 A. L. J 199 =9 I. C. 935.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

One Durga Shankar Bhattacharji was one of the executors to the will of one Musammat Shib Kali Debia. He obtained probate from the District Judge of Benares on the 12th of June, 1899. On the 21st of June, 1899, an administration bond was executed by Durga Shankar and the defendants, Syed Al-i-Nabi and Syed Shah Tasadduk Husain, as his sureties for the due administration of the estate of Musammat Shibkali. The plaintiff, who is the step-son of Musammat Shibkali, came into court alleging that the assets of the deceased were misappropriated, and consequently the plaintiff had to apply for letters of administration with the copy of the will annexed, which were granted to him on the 16th August, 1904, by the District Judge of Benares. Therefore the plaintiff applied for assignment of the administration bond, and the bond was transferred to him on the 10th of April, 1907. The plaintiff brought the present suit on the 16th June 1907, to recover from the representatives of Durga Shankar (who had since died), viz, his brother's nephew and widow, and also from the sureties, the [415] amount of the assets which had been misappropriated by Durga Shankar.

The District Judge of Benares decreed the plaintiff's claim as against the sureties and also against the widow of Durga Shankar to the extent of Rs. 4,891-8-0, but dismissed the suit as against the brothers and nephew of Durga Shankar, on the ground that they were neither the legal representatives of Durga Shankar nor in possession of any of his property.

The plaintiff appealed against the decree of the court below dismissing his claim as against the brothers and nephew of Durga Shankar.

Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri (with him Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, Babu Satya Chandra Mukerji and Babu Surendra Nath Sen), on behalf of the appellant, contended that the evidence on the record proved that the brothers and nephew are in possession of the assets of the deceased Durga Shankar, that the agreement of compromise, which was on the record, and which was made the subject of a decree of court long before the present suit was brought, in the course of a litigation between Durga Shankar and his brothers, provided that in the event of the death of any of the brothers without male issue, his property would devolve on the surviving brothers in equal shares, subject to certain conditions, and as Durga Shankar had died without male issue, his brothers and nephew were his heirs and legal representatives. He relied mainly on Ram Nirunjun Singh v. Prayag Singh (1), and also on the definition of the words "legal representative" as given in section 52 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru (with him Babu Beni Madhub Ghosh), on behalf of one of the brothers and the nephew of Durga Shankar contended that the provision in the compromise was repugnant to the Hindu law of succession and that the brothers and nephew of Durga Shankar had not been properly sued, inasmuch as they did not represent Durga Shankar's estate. He further contended that the provision in the agreement of compromise relied on by the plaintiff appellant purported to be a [416] transfer of a mere expectancy and was in contravention of section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.:—This appeal arises under the following circumstances :- One Musammat Shib Kali Debia of Benares made a will on the 11th of January, 1891, and thereby bequeathed her property for certain purposes and appointed six persons executors. She died on the 8th of April, 1897, and thereupon an application for probate was made by one of the executors, Durga Shankar, now deceased, and probate was granted to him on the 12th of June, 1899. On the 21st of June 1899, an administration bond was executed by Durga Shankar and the defendants, Syed Al-i-Nabi and Syed Shah Tasadduk Husain, as his sureties for the due administration of the estate of Musammat Shib Kali Debia. In this bond the executants undertook responsibility for the due administration of the estate by Durga Shankar, and it was provided by it that the obligation under the bond was to remain in force until Durga Shankar had discharged the duties of the administration of the estate. Durga Shankar did not administer the assets as he had undertaken to do, but misappropriated them, and in consequence the plaintiff, who is the step-son of Musammat Shib Kali Debia, applied for letters of administration of her esate with the will annexed, and such letters were granted to him on the 16th of August, 1904. He further applied to the District Judge for an assignment of the administration bond executed by Durga Shankar and his sureties, and this bond was transferred to him on the 10th of April, 1907.

The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was then instituted by the plaintiff to recover from the representatives of Durga Shankar, including his widow, and also from the sureties, the amount of the assets which had been misappropriated by Durga Shankar.

A defence to the suit was filed by both the sureties and also by Bishnu Shankar, one of the brothers of Durga Shankar.

The court below decreed the plaintiff's claim as against the sureties and also as against the widow of Durga Shankar to the extent of Rs. 4,891-8-0. The decree was passed against the defendants 1 and 2 as sureties only and as against the widow of Durga Shankar as his heir. The claim was dismissed as [417] against the defendants 3—6, who are three of the brothers and a nephew of Durga Shankar.

This appeal has been preferred by the plaintiff, and the contention put forward on his behalf is that the court below was wrong in dismissing the suit as against the defendants 3 to 6. These defendants, as we have said, are the brothers and a nephew of Durga Shankar, and liability is sought to be fixed on them by reason of the following facts. Prior to the 11th of October, 1890, Durga Shankar and his brothers and a nephew had disputes in regard to family property. They entered into a compromise whereby the ancestral property was divided between them and this compromise was subsequently embodied in a decree. One of the terms of the compromise was that if Durga Shankar or any of his brothers should die without leaving male issue, then the surviving brother would by division in equal shares take possession of and enjoy and appropriate the share of the person so dying. Durga Shankar having died without male issue, the allegation of the plaintiff is that his share of the property comprised in the aforesaid compromise and decree passed to his brother and nephews and that the defendants, the brothers and one of the nephews of Durga Shankar, are actually in possession of Durga Shankar's share of the family property.

In the written statement of Bishnu Shankar it is denied by him that he is in possession of any property left by Durga Shankar. He states that after the death of Durga Shankar he, along with the other members of the family, paid debts due by Durga Shankar and had been paying Rs. 25 per mensem to the widow of Durga Shankar, namely, the defendant, Musammat Sarojini Debia, for her maintenance; and he put forward the defence that if any portion of the property possessed by him were considered to be of the estate of Durga Shankar, having regard to the above facts he could in no wise be held responsible to pay the amount claimed.

The surety Al-i-Nabi was examined, and he in his evidence, which has not been controverted, alleged that the property which belonged to Durga Shankar was still in the possession of his heirs, namely, Bhikari Shankar, Bishnu Shankar, Sarat Shankar, and Addiya Shankar, his brothers, [418] and Musammat Sarojini Debi, his widow. This evidence was as we have said, not controverted, and it shows that the property of Durga Shankar did pass under the compromise upon his death into the hands of his brothers.

The question, then, for our determination is whether or not the Court below was right in exempting the brothers and nephew, defendants 3 to 6, from the operation of the decree. It is contended on their behalf that the provision in the compromise which provided that on the death of any brother without male issue his share shall go to the other brothers is repugnant to Hindu Law being repugnant to the ordinary rule of succession to property and that the defendants 3 to 6 have not been properly sued, inasmuch as they do not represent Durga Shankar's estate. It is said that the parties are governed by the Dayabhaga School of law and that the widow of Durga Shankar is his heir, and, as such, entitled to the estate of Durga Shankar. It is further contended that the provision to which we have referred above purports to be a transfer of a mere expectancy and is in contravention of section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act. We are of opinion that there is no force in this contention. Durga Shankar was not dealing with an expectant interest in property. He and the other parties to the agreement of compromise were dealing with the property, which at the time belonged to them, and we are unable to hold that a provision, whereby, upon a family settlement, such as this was, brothers agreed that upon the death of any of them without male issue the share to which he should be entitled, should go to the other brothers, is in contravention of Hindu Law, or obnoxious to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act.

This is very case similar to the case of Ram Nirunjan Singh v. Prayag Singh (1). In that case two or four brothers had disputes in regard to the property of their father. They entered into a compromise for themselves, and one of them also as guardian of his two minor brothers, whereby it was agreed that with the exception of certain trust property the estate of their father should be divided equally between the four brothers, [419] with this provision superadded that "if any of the brothers should die without any issue, then the surviving brothers should succeed to his heritage in equal shares, none of them having any claim or contention against the other on the score of commensality of joint tenancy." It was contended in that case that this provision was repugnant to Hindu Law and could not therefore be enforced. MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ., held that there was nothing in the Hindu Law which made such an agreement illegal. The provision in the present case is similar to that which was considered in the case just cited, and we see no good reason for disagreeing with the views of the learned Judges who decided it. Defendants 3 –6 ought not, therefore, to have been exempted from liability as representatives of Durga Shankar.

It may be that they have not received any portion of the assets of Durga Shankar, and it may be that they will not recover any portion of his assets ; but if this be so, they will not be damnified by the decree which we propose to pass against them. These defendants are representatives of the deceased Durga Shankar within the meaning attached to that term by the Code of Civil Procedure. A representative means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of a deceased person. Section 52 of the Code prescribes the mode of execution of a decree against such a representative. A plaintiff has a right to sue the representatives of his deceased debtor and to obtain a decree against them, although it is not proved that assets have come into their hands. It is sufficient to prove that there are assets of which they may become possessed. In this case the existence of assets is not denied. We, therefore, upon this question, overrule the decision of the Court below.

The only remaining question is raised in the connected cross appeal. It is an appeal on the part of one of the sureties, Syed Al-i-Nabi, and the only ground of appeal which has been pressed before us in argument is the first, namely, that the suit is time-barred. The contention of this defendant is that one of the provisions of the bond was that an [420] inventory should be exhibited within a certain time, and that on a breach of this condition of the bond time began to run as against the sureties and the suit is time barred. We do not think that the date on which one of the conditions of the bond was broken is the starting point from which limitation is to be calculated in a case such as the present in which the plaintiff's case is that Durga Shankar in his lifetime failed to administer the assets of the deceased. The bond itself, as we have pointed out, expressly provides that the obligation undertaken in it was to remain in force until Durga Shankar fulfiled the duties of the administration of the estate, probate of which had been granted to him. Durga Shankar died on the 12th July, 1903. Time did not begin to run against the plaintiff until his death, and six years did not elapse between the date of the death of Durga Shankar and the bringing of the suit.

The appeal therefore of Syed Al-i-Nabi must be dismissed. We vary the decree of the Court below, and we give a decree to the plaintiff for Rs. 4,891-8-0 against the defendants 1 and 2 as sureties, to be satisfied by them jointly and severally, and against the defendants 3 —7, to be satisfied out of any assets of Durga Shankar which have come to or may hereafter come to their hands. The costs of this appeal will be borne by the defendants 3—6. Those defendants and defendant No. 7 will bear their own costs in both Courts. In other respects we affirm the decree of the Court below

Mahomedan law—Dower—Agreement between husband and wife as to satisfaction of wife's dower—Construction of document—Mortgage—"Mahabat."

A Muhammadan made over to his wife, to whom a dower of Rs. 1,25,000 was due, certain property. In the deed of transfer it was stipulated (1) that the wife was to take possession of the property in lieu of her dower and enjoy the usufruct; (2) that the property was to revert to the husband if the wife predeceased him, the dower debt being deemed to have been discharged; (3) that if the husband predeceased the wife the property was to become hers absolutely.

Held that the transaction was neither a mortgage by conditional sale nor a mahabat, but the wife obtained a right to enjoy the usufruct during her husband's lifetime, with the possibility of the interest developing into full ownership if the husband predeceased her.

[Fol. 21 M. L. J. 958=(1911) 2 M. W. N. 412; Dist. 3 Pat. L. W. 232=43 I. C. 196.]

		Mansub Hasan Khan, plaintiff 1.
Maulud Hasan Khan, defendant 4.	Mamnun Hasan Khan, plaintiff 2.	Maujud Hasan Khan, defendant 5.
		Mashud Hasan Khan, defendant 6.

Masnad Hasan Khan transferred certain properties to his wife, the appellant, by a deed of tasfia-nama, dated the 22nd of September, 1883, in which he admitted that Rs. 1,25,000 was due to her as dower. The tasfia-nama provided :—

"That the property shall be put in possession of the wife in lieu of the dower debt with the conditions that during her lifetime she shall collect and enjoy the profits of all the properties in lieu of the dower debt ; that if she dies before the husband the dower debt shall be deemed paid up, no matter whatever portion thereof is realized by that time ; that the dower debt being deemed as satisfied, the properties shall revert to the husband; that in such a case the wife's possession shall be deemed to be (one under) a bil mukta theka; that the annulment of this lease and the satisfaction of the debt shall be deemed from that time in the year of the wife's death in which she may make the last collection before her death of any portion of the profits from any property; and that if the husband dies before the wife the properties shall be owned by the wife in lieu of [422] the dower debt remaining due at that time, no matter whatever amount it may be, and the husband's proprietary rights shall become extinct."

On the 7th of April, 1892, both husband and wife executed a deed whereby a greater portion of the property comprised in the tasfia-nama was declared to be waqf. In the year 1898 Masnad Hasan Khan inherited some property from his mother, which, along with some other property, passed into the hands of the wife as the result of a compromise between the two, by which the wife was to hold the property affected on the terms of the tasfia-nama of 1883, except that a life-interest was given to him. On the 15th of August, 1903, the husband and wife executed a tauliat-nama appointing defendants 2 and 3 as mutawallis of the waqf property after the death of the wakifs. On the 9th of September, 1903, Masnad Hasan Khan executed a deed of relinquishment in favour of his wife by which he relinquished the life interest reserved to him under the compromise, in favour of his wife. Masnad Hasan Khan died on the 1st of March, 1905. This suit was brought by the plaintiffs respondents for their share in the property left by Masnad Hasan Khan at his death, on the allegation that the deed of waqf was invalid, and that the dower debt of the appellant had been satisfied out of the usufruct of the property. The lower Court allowed the claim, holding the possession of the widow to be one analogous to that of a mortgagee. It further held that the waqf was an invalid one, executed chiefly to defeat the claims of the heirs after the death of Masnad Hasan Khan. The defendant appealed.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal (with him Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq), for the appellant :—

Masnad Hasan Khan did not leave any estate at the time of his death. By the tasfia-nama of 1883 in case of the death of Masnad Hasan Khan the transaction was to be treated as a sale of the property comprised in the deed in lieu of the amount of the dower that might happen to be due then. It was an ordinary contract, and as a result of that the property became the wife's absolutely at the time of the husband's death. Again, both the husband and wife joined in executing a waqf of the whole of the zamindari property for certain purposes. They supplemented this waqfnama by the tauliat-nama of 1903. The waqf is quite [423] valid and the heirs have no right to claim a share in the property thus dedicated to pious uses. Thirdly, when the property subsequently acquired by Masnad Hasan Khan was made the subject of arbitration proceedings, the award only reserved a life interest to the husband, and as he effected a deed of relinquishment with reference to this and what had not formed part of the waqf of 1892, there was nothing left in him which the heirs could claim. On principle there is no difference between this and an ordinary sale. Either had the chance of enjoying the property free in case the other died. In a conditional sale the main object is the payment of money, It is not so here. As to the waqf, it is a perfectly valid one. The fact that the executant wanted to deprive their nephews is no argument against the validity of the deed of waqf. A good portion of the property has been endowed ; Kaleloola Sahib v. Nuseerudeen Sahib (1), Delroos Banoo Begum v. Nawab Sayad Asghar Ali Khan (2), Nizamudin Gulam v. Abdul Gafur valad Mainudin (3), Muzhurool Huq v. Puhraj Ditarey Mohapattur (4), Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (5), Deoki Prasad v. Inaitullah (6) and Luchmiput Singh v. Amir Alum (7).

There was nothing to prevent the waqifs from including the small items for the support of their family. A waqf in favour of a waqif's children is held to be valid by some writers.

The Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru (with him Babu Durga Charan Banerji and Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba), for the respondents.

The deed of 1883 created a usufructuary mortgage by way of conditional sale. The essence of a usufructuary mortgage is that possession is security for the debt and not the property itself. A usufructuary mortgagee has no right to bring property to sale. If a creditor is to pay himself out during his lifetime, it would not prevent the transaction being a mortgage. The parties could make its termination depend on any contingency they liked. It could not be anything else. Both parties retained their life interest with the expectancy of an absolute interest in the event [424] of one surviving the other. Neither party, however, could enforce his or her right till after the death of the other. Here the case is stronger than that in Mussumat Bebee Bachun v. Sheikh Hamid Hossein (1). On the one hand there is a right to retain possession till payment—all that a mortgagee can do; on the other there is a right to account—all that a mortagagor can claim. If the wife predeceased the husband, it was to be a zar-i-peshgi lease. If he died before the wife, she was to remain in possession. He did not part with his interest in præsenti. He continued to be the owner of the property; Khajooroonissa v. Rowshan Jehan (2).

Having regard to Muhammadan law the transaction was a "mahabat." Certain principles of Muhammadan law had to be borne in mind. (i) A transfer or disposition in præsenti made in health (gift or sale or "mahabat") was valid. (ii) A disposition which took effect after death in whatever form, was a bequest and valid only to the extent of $\frac{1}{3}$rd if made to a stranger and not valid at all if made to an heir without the consent of other heirs. (iii) A transfer in præsenti made on death-bed, had the same effect as a bequest. (iv) A transfer for inadequate consideration was a "mahabat," i. e., it was a sale to the extent of the property covered by the consideration and a gift as to the excess. (v) Mahabat could be so made as to take effect immediately or after death, (a) if immediately and not made on death-bed, it was valid. (b) If after death, or immediately, but on death-bed it was valid only as to the property covered by consideration plus $\frac{2}{3}$rds of the excess: if it was in favour of an heir it was wholly void. Here the wife was to become owner on death of husband in return for whatever was left due to her of the dower debt. That balance could be in excess of the value of property or fall short of it. In the former case there was no "mahabat", and she took possession of the whole, in the latter case it was a "mahabat"; Hidaya p. 258 (Printed at the Haidri Press, Bombay); Kifaya.—A commentary on Hidaya p. 289; Durrul Mukhtar, Part v. p. 667 (margin), Chapter of Emancipation in (mortal) illness; Ruddal Mukhtar, p. 667; Hidaya (edn. as above), p. 267; Bailey's Hidaya, Book 52, Ch. 2, pp. 676, 685.

[425] The gift here was void:—Wilson's Muhammadan Law, section 313, page 332. It was not a gift in præsenti, for the rights of the wife were not to be complete till the death of the husband. His case was that either it was a mortgage or a testamentary disposition: Saiad Kasum v. Shaista Bibi (3). Any disposition to take effect after death was a testamentary disposition. There was no present gift: the husband continued in possession. Ownership was not to accrue to wife till his death. Even a sale for full consideration was a testamentary disposition under Muhammadan law if it took effect after death. But the Muhammadan law did not apply to sales in India. The value of the transaction was to be determined by circumstances as they prevailed at the time of death, it would be a sale if there was any dower due and it would be valid as the law governing sales was not Muhammadan law. But if the dower due was less than the value of the property, it would be a gift as to the excess and the Muhammadan law of gifts would apply, provided, of course, it was to take effect after death: Wilson's Muhammadan Law, section 283, page 309; ibid., section 285, page 310; Bailey's Muhammadan Law, page 651.

As to validity of the waqf it was no substantial dedication of the property. The Privy Council had decided that point. There was no intention that the interest should be paid. The case of Hamira Bibi v. Zubeda Bibi (1) only placed dower debt on footing of an ordinary contract. It did not award interest in all cases of dower debt.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, in reply: —

The word used in the deed was * * * (exchange). Property went in exchange for the debt. The wife acquired an interest in the property which was equivalent to a right of present enjoyment plus the right of ownership on death of the husband. It was a sale of property liable to be defeated if she died before him.

The question of "mahabat" did not arise. A present interest would be given to the wife which would not be the case in a "mahabat."

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.,: —The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the plaintiffs respondents for [426] possession of a share of certain property which originally belonged to their deceased uncle, Masnad Hasan Khan. They claim as his heirs the share to which they are entitled under the Muhammadan law. They also pray for mesne profits.

Masnad Hasan Khan died on the 1st of March, 1903, leaving him surviving as his heirs, the first defendant Musammat Mubarak-un-nissa, his widow and five nephews' two of whom are the plaintiffs. It is common ground that the dower of Musammat Mubarak-un-nissa was Rs. 1,25,000, and that this amount was due to her. In order to provide for the payment of the dower, Masnad Hasan Khan executed a document in her favour on the 22nd of September, 1883, by virtue of which she is admittedly in possession of his estate. The construction of this document is the principal question to be determined in this appeal. Whilst it is asserted in the plaint that the instrument was a lease granted to Mubarak-un-nissa for the realization of her dower and that she is bound to surrender the property on her dower being discharged, it is urged on her behalf that she has acquired an absolute interest in the property under the provisions of the document. The plaintiffs allege that she has realized the whole amount of her dower from the usufruct of the property, and they are therefore entitled to obtain possession of their share.

On the 7th of April, 1892, Mubarak-un-nissa and Masnad Hasan Khan jointly executed a deed of waqf in respect of a portion of the property, and by a later deed of the 15th of August, 1903, they provided for the management of the waqf and appointed the second and third defendants as their successors in the office of mutawallis. It is asserted by the plaintiffs that this waqf is nominal and fictitious that Masnad Hasan Khan continued to be the owner of the property till his death, and that the waqf is also invalid under the Muhammadan law.

Upon the death of Masnad Hasan Khan's mother a reference to arbitration was made by him and Mubarak-un-nissa for the settlement of their claims in regard to the property inherited from the mother, and an award was delivered by the arbitrator on the 10th of October, 1898. This was made a rule of Court on the 30th of November, 1898. Subsequently on the 9th of September, 1903, Masnad Hasan Khan executed a deed of relin- [427] quishment in favour of his wife. These transactions are alleged by the plaintiffs to be fictitious and collusive and made with a view to deprive them of the property.

The Court below has held that under the instrument of the 22nd of September, 1883, Masnad Hasan Khan made a usufructuary mortgage in favour of his wife for the amount of her dower; that the transaction was at least analogous to a mortgage; that Mubarak-un-nissa was in possession in lieu of her dower; that the waqf is invalid and that the plaintiffs are entitled to possession on payment of the balance of dower due to Mubarak-un-nissa. It has accordingly made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for possession of their share of the property (except movables and house property, in respect of which they abandoned their claim), on condition that they do pay to Mubarak-un-nissa their proportionate share of Rs. 43,482 which it has found to be the balance of dower due to her.

The defendant, Mubarak-un-nissa, has preferred this appeal. The plaintiffs have filed the connected appeal No. 21 of 1908 in which they question the correctness of the finding of the Court below as to the amount of the dower due to the defendant.

The decision of this appeal hinges mainly on the construction of the instrument, dated the 22nd of September, 1883, mentioned above. That document was executed both by Masnad Hasan Khan and Mubarak-un-nissa, and the material portion of it is thus translated :—

"In order to make arrangement for repayment of the dower debt and to shake off the liability of the husband both in this and the next world, the husband and the wife have made settlement as follows :—That is to say, all the properties detailed below, now possessed by the husband, shall be put in the possession of the wife in lieu of the dower debt, with the conditions that during her lifetime she shall collect and enjoy the profits of all the properties in lieu of her dower debt; that if she dies before the husband, the dower debt shall be deemed paid up, no matter whatever portion thereof is realized by that time; that the dower debt being deemed as satisfied, the properties shall revert to the possession of the husband, that in such case the wife's possession shall [428] be deemed to be (one under) a bil makta theka (lease for a fixed sum); that the annulment of this lease and the satisfaction of the debt shall be deemed from that time in the year of the wife's death at which she may make the last collection before her death of any portion of the profits from any property; and that if the husband dies before the wife, the properties shall be owned by the wife in lieu of the dower debt remaining due at that time, no matter whatever amount it may be, and the husband's proprietary rights shall become extinct."

The scope of the document is three-fold : (1) the wife is to take possession of the property in lieu of her dower and enjoy the usufruct; (2) the property is to pass to the husband, if the wife predeceases him, and the dower debt is to be deemed to be discharged; and (3) if the husband predeceases the wife, she is to become absolute owner of the property, whatever may be the balance of dower due. It is claimed on behalf of the wife that as her husband is dead, she has acquired the absolute ownership of the property. We are unable to agree with the Court below in the view that a mortgage was effected. The property of the husband was not made security for the wife's dower, and it was not pledged for the dower. The mere fact that possession was delivered to the wife did not create an hypothecation of the property for the amount of the dower. This, in our opinion, is the effect of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Mussumat Bebee Bachun v. Sheikh Hamid Hossein (1), and we do not think the learned Subordinate Judge has correctly appreciated it. Their Lordships observed : —" The claim of Musammat Bebee Bachun to hold the property to satisfy her dower cannot be founded upon an original hypothecation of the estate for her dower—for such a right does not arise under the Muhammadan Law as a consequence of the gift of dower, nor was there any agreement on the part of the husband to pledge his estate for the dower." In the document before us we fail to find any provision which may be construed to be a hypothecation or pledge of the property. The learned advocate for the respondent contends that the document must be deemed to be a will. We cannot accede to this contention. [429] There was no disposition of the property to take effect only after the husband's death. Nor do we think the transaction was of the nature of what is known in Muhammadan Law as muhabat. In our opinion the property was, by the instrument in question, vested in Musammat Mubarak-un-nissa in præsenti in lieu of her dower, subject to the condition that in the event of her predeceasing her husband it should go to her husband alone to the exclusion of her other heirs. It was a conveyance which has not happened and to a condition the validity of which we are not called upon to determine. The interest created, was, as Mr. Sundar Lal aptly put it, a right to enjoy the usufruct of the property during the lifetime of the husband, which was to develope into full ownership on the happening of a contingency, namely, the death of the husband in the lifetime of the wife. That contingency having happened and the husband of Musammat Mubarak-un-nissa being dead, she has become the absolute owner of the property and the plaintiffs as some of the heirs of her husband are not entitled to recover any portion of it from her.

In this view it is unnecessary to consider whether the waqf created by her is or is not valid under the Muhammadan Law. Even if it is invalid, the plaintiffs have no right to question it.

Furthermore by the deed of relinquishment executed by Masnad Hasan Khan on the 9th of September, 1903, property of all descriptions was vested in Mubarak-un-nissa. The plaintiffs' suit must therefore fail.

We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and dismiss the suit with costs in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

SHEORAJI (Defendant) v. RAMJAS PANDE AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs.)*

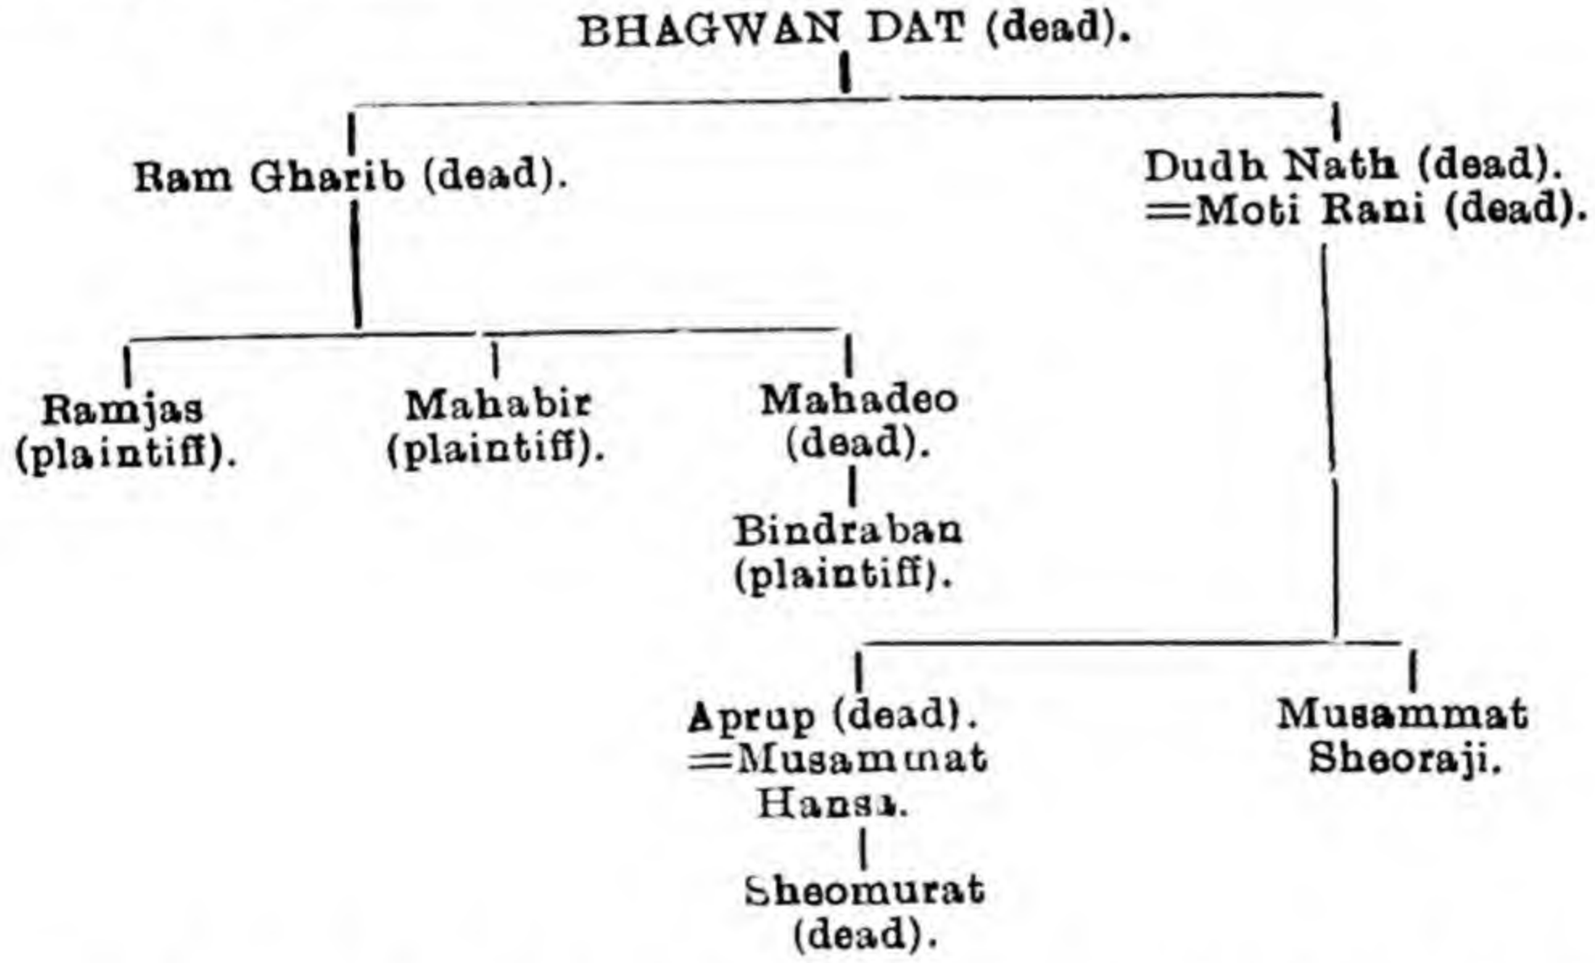
[26th January, 1911.]



Act No. I of 1877 (Specific Relief Act), section 42—Hindu Law—Reversioner—Suit for declaration of title—Cause of action—Will made by Hindu widow in possession——Limitation.

D, a separated Hindu, and his son A died in 1891 on the same day, the father dying first. A's son, S M, died a week later, leaving his mother H and his grandmother M. The property was then recorded in the names of M and H; but M got possession, and in 1908 executed a will in favour of her daughter S. The reversioners of D brought a suit in 1908 for a declaration that the will would have no effect on their reversionary right. S set up her right to the property, ignoring that of H. Held that even during the lifetime of H, the plaintiffs were entitled to institute a suit for a declaration only under the provisions of section 42, Specific Relief Act.

Held, further that the suit was not barred by limitation. Mutations of names in M's favour was more or less an equivocal act and might possibly have given a cause of action, but when in 1908 M. specifically declared that the heir to the property was S and S herself asserted her title, the plaintiffs acquired a cause of action sufficient to entitle them to sue.

[Ref. 1912 M. W. N. 70=13 I. C. 489.]

THE parties to this case were related in the manner shown in the subjoined pedigree :—

Dudh Nath, who was separated from his brother Ram Gharib, died in 1891, and his son Aprup died later on the same day. Sheomurat the grandson died a week later. After the death of Sheomurat the names of Moti Rani and Hansa were recorded [431] in respect of the property of Dudh Nath. In 1908 Moti Rani made a will, in which she declared that Sheoraji was the heir to the whole property in dispute. The surviving members of the other branch of the family of Bhagwan Dat thereupon brought the present suit asking for a declaration that the will of Moti Rani did not affect the succession to the property after the death of Hansa. The Court of first instance (Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur) decreed the claim and this decree was affirmed in appeal by the District Judge. Sheoraji then appealed to the High Court, the main ground of appeal being that the plaintiffs could not sue for a declaration so long as Musammat Hansa was alive.

Munshi Hari bans Sahai, for the appellant.

The respondent was not summoned.

RICHARDS and TUDBALL, JJ.:—The following pedigree will show the relationship of the parties:—

BHAGWAN DAT (dead).

Ram Gharib (dead).

Ramjas (plaintiff).

Mahabir (plaintiff).

Mahadeo (dead).

Bindraban (plaintiff).

Dudh Nath (dead). =Moti Rani (dead).

Aprup (dead). =Musammat Hansa.

Musammat Sheoraji.

Sheomurat (dead).

The plaintiffs are the sons and grandson of Ram Gharib. The defendants are Musammat Sheoraji and Musammat Hansa. The Court below finds that Ram Gharib and Dudh Nath were separate, that Dudh Nath died in the year 1891. that his son died next on the same day and that his grandson, Sheomurat, died a week after. These findings of fact are binding on us in second appeal. After the death of Dudh Nath, Aprup and Sheomurat, the names of Moti Rani and Musammat Hansa were recorded. In the year 1908, Moti Rani purported to make a [432] will declaring that Sheoraji was heir to the whole property in dispute. The plaintiffs then sued, amongst other things, for a declaration that the will did not affect their reversionary rights. Primarily the plaintiffs claimed actual possession on the ground that the family was joint, but this has been found against the plaintiffs. The main question which has been urged in the present appeal is as follows. It is said that, on the findings of the Court below, Musammat Hansa is entitled to possession of the property according to Hindu Law for her lifetime. Neither Moti Rani nor Musammat Sheoraji have any title whatsoever, and accordingly Mr. Haribans Sahai, while admitting that plaintiffs would be the heirs on the assumption that Musammat Hansa was now dead, argues they cannot bring a suit for a declaration of title against Sheoraji in respect of anything that she has done or put forward in respect of the property, so long as Musammat Hansa lives. Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is as follows:—

"Any person entitled to any legal character or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right; and the court may in its discretion make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the plaintiff need not in such suit ask for any other relief."

1911 JAN. 26.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

33 A. 430= 9 I. C. 501=8 A. L. J. 454.

The defendant, Musammat Sheoraji, who is appellant here, in her written statement expressly alleged that Moti Rani was entitled to the property as heir to her husband, Dudh Nath, who was the last male owner. She claimed that on the death of Moti Rani she had become entitled to the property by right of succession to her father, and that the plaintiffs had no interest whatsoever in the property. This contention necessarily includes a denial of Musammat Hansa's right to possession as the mother of Sheomurat. In our opinion the case, unless there is good authority, is just one of those cases in which a suit for declaration of title is not only permissible but also desirable. It may be that Musammat Hansa may live for a very long time. At her death it would probably be extremely difficult to produce the evidence which was available when the present suit was instituted. There can be no doubt on the facts as found by the court below and on the allegation in the written statement of the appellant herself that she was a person who was denying or at least was [433] interested in denying the title of the plaintiffs as reversioners. A passage from Mr. Mayne's Hindu Law (7th edition, page 874) is quoted in support of the appellant's contention. The passage is as follows:—

"But the mere fact that strangers are affecting to deal with the property as their own without actual dispossession of the intermediate estate . . . gives no right of action against them either for a declaration of title or otherwise."

It is argued that although the plaintiffs might have brought a suit against Musammat Hansa, they have no right to bring the suit against Musammat Sheoraji. In the present case, as we have pointed out, the court finds that Moti Rani was in possession after the death of Sheomurat. Having regard to the fact that the father and the son died on the same day and the grandson died within a week, the probabilities are that the finding is correct. The life estate of Musammat Hansa has been ignored by Musammat Moti Rani, and it is quite clear that it was being ignored by the appellant Sheoraji. She does not suggest from the beginning to the end of the written statement that Musammat Hansa had any right or title whatever to the property. Under these circumstances we are clearly of opinion that the plaintiffs were entitled to institute a suit under the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

The only other point that is raised before us is that the suit is barred by limitation. It is said that when Moti Rani obtained mutation of names and entered into possession the plaintiffs' right to bring the suit so far as it is a suit under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act arose, and as this was done in 1891, the suit is barred by limitation. In our opinion this plea cannot prevail. Mutation of names was more or less an equivocal act. It might possibly have given cause of action, but we consider that when in the year 1908 it was specifically declared by Moti Rani that the heir to the property was Sheoraji and when we also find that Musammat Sheoraji herself asserted this very title, the plaintiffs acquired a cause of action sufficient to entitle them to sue in 1908. In our opinion the appeal fails on both the grounds. We accordingly dismiss it.

Appeal dismissed.

[31st January, 1911.]

Mortgage—Mortgage of sir land—Purchase of proprietary rights by mortgagee—Suit for redemption—Amount payable by mortgagor.

After a usufructuary mortgage of certain sir lands the mortgagee at an auction sale in execution of a simple money decree purchased the proprietary rights in the mortgaged property, the mortgagor becoming an ex-proprietary tenant. On a suit for redemption being brought, held that the mortgagee, having himself broken up the integrity of his security, could not be permitted to cast the whole burden of the debt upon the ex-proprietary rights. Bisheshar Dial v. Ram Sarup (1) referred to.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

Certain plots of sir land were mortgaged with possession by the plaintiffs' ancestor to the defendants' ancestor in 1881 for Rs. 1,300. In 1888 the zamindari rights, including the sir, were sold at auction and purchased by the defendant. The plaintiffs sued for redemption of the mortgage. The first court held that the effect of the sale was to leave the ex-proprietary rights of the plaintiffs liable for part only of the mortgage debt, and allowed them redemption on payment of a proportionate part of the mortgage money. The lower appellate court upheld that decision. The defendant appealed.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor (with him Munshi Gokul Prasad), for the appellant, contended that on sale of proprietary rights in the sir the mortgage attached to the newly-acquired rights of ex-proprietary tenancy and a new security having been substituted the plaintiffs could not redeem except on payment of the entire amount of the mortgage money ; Sham Das v. Batul Bibi (2).

Munshi Gulzari Lal, for the respondents, submitted that the rights of an ex-proprietary tenant were part and parcel of the proprietary rights which under the law were secured to a person who lost his sir land ; Bhawani Prasad v. Ghulam Muhammad (3). The principle applicable was that laid down in Bisheshur Dial v. Ram Sarup (1).

STANLEY, C. J., and GRIFFIN, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage made in 1881 by the [435] plaintiffs' predecessor in interest. By the mortgage in suit certain specified plots, aggregating an area of 191 bighas, were mortgaged as security for the loan of Rs. 1,300. The lands were described as the sir holdings of the mortgagor. In the year 1888 the defendant, appellant in this Court, at an auction sale in execution of a simple money decree, purchased the proprietary rights in the property in suit. The plaintiffs in this suit seek to redeem the mortgage of 1881. The courts below have repelled the contention of the defendant appellant that the whole burden of the mortgage debt should be thrown upon the ex-proprietary rights now held by the mortgagor. They hold that the mortgagor's ex-proprietary interest was still liable for a share of the mortgage debt proportionate to the value of the ex-proprietor's rights vested in the mortgagor. The first Court held that the plaintiffs should pay one-fourth of the mortgage money in order to redeem the ex-proprietary tenures. APPELLATE CIVIL.

33 A. 434=8 A. L. J. 227=10 I. C. 729.

The ground taken in appeal to this Court is that after the sale in 1888 of the mortgagor's proprietary rights in the property in suit the burden of the mortgage debt continued upon the rights which still remained to the mortgagor, namely, his ex-proprietary rights in the land formerly held by him in the sir. The contention advanced on behalf of the appellant is that there has been merely a substitution of security.

It appears to us that the view taken by the Courts below is a correct one. What was mortgaged in the year 1881 was the mortgagor's right as proprietor in the mortgaged property and further his rights to occupy the plots specified in the mortgage as sir holder. In the year 1888, the defendant, appellant to this Court, acquired at auction sale, the proprietary rights of the mortgagor. The defendant appellant has by his own act broken up the integrity of his security. He cannot now be permitted to cast the whole burden of the mortgage debt upon the remainder of his security. The principle of the ruling in Bisheshur Dial v. Ram Sarup (1) is applicable to the present case. It has not been shown to us that the amount assessed by the Court [436] below as the proportionate share which the ex-proprietary rights should bear to the mortgage debt is erroneous. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Again, on the 11th of February, 1878, he executed a simple mortgage in favour of one Bijai Pal Singh. Bijai Pal Singh instituted a suit on foot of his mortgage and obtained a decree for sale against the sons and widows of Man Singh on the 29th of February, 1884. In execution of this decree the property was sold on the 20th of December, 1888, to Ram Lal, a son of Bhim Sen. The sons of Bhim Sen obtained a decree for sale on foot of their mortgage of the 10th of February, 1878, on the 9th of June, 1885, and at a sale held in execution of that decree purchased the property. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen, was instituted by the [437] plaintiffs appellants, who are the grandsons and one great-grandson of Man Singh for redemption of the mortgage of the 15th of February, 1864. In their plaint the plaintiffs refer also to the mortgage of the 10th of February, 1878. They do not anywhere allege that Bijai Pal Singh, who obtained a decree on foot of the mortgage of the 10th of February, 1878, had any notice of the interests of the plaintiffs at the time of the institution of the suits by them for sale on foot of their mortgage.

Both the lower Courts dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs thereon appealed to the High Court.

STANLEY, C. J., and GRIFFIN, J.—The weight of authority militates against this appeal. The facts are these:—One Man Singh executed a usufructuary mortgage of certain property on the 15th of February, 1864, in favour of one Bhim Sen, who is the ancestor of the respondents. Subsequently, on the 10th of February, 1878, he executed a simple mortgage of the same property in favour of Bhim Sen. Again, on the 11th of February, 1878, he executed a simple mortgage in favour of one Bijai Pal Singh. Bijai Pal Singh instituted a suit on foot of his mortgage and obtained a decree for sale against the sons and widows of Man Singh on the 29th of February, 1884. In execution of this decree the property was sold on the 20th of December, 1888, to Ram Lal, a son of Bhim Sen. The sons of Bhim Sen obtained a decree for sale on foot of their mortgage of the 10th of February, 1878, on the 9th of June, 1885, and at a sale held in execution of that decree purchased the property. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen, was instituted by the plaintiffs appellants, who are the grandsons and one great-grandson of Man Singh for redemption of the mortgage of the 15th of February, 1864. In their plaint the plaintiffs refer also to the mortgage of the 10th of February, 1878. They do not anywhere allege that Bijai Pal Singh, who obtained a decree on foot of the mortgage of the 10th of February, 1878, had any notice of the interests of the plaintiffs at the time of the institution of the suits by them for sale on foot of their mortgage.

[438] Both the lower Courts have dismissed the plaintiffs' claim. This appeal has, therefore, been preferred, and the contention of the learned vakil for the appellants is that in view of the decision of this Court in Ram Prasad v. Man Mohan (1), they are entitled to maintain their suit. Mr. O'Conor, on behalf of the respondent, referred us to several decisions of this Court which are inconsistent with the ruling in the case of Ram Prasad v. Man Mohan.

In Debi Singh v. Jia Ram (1) a Full Bench of this Court, of which one of us was a member, held that where property belonging to a joint Hindu family has been sold by auction in execution of a decree obtained upon a mortgage of such property executed by the father of joint family, it is open to the sons to sue for the recovery of their shares in the property so sold, if they were not made parties to the suit in which the decree against their father was obtained, provided that the mortgagee had at the time of suit notice of their interests in the property, but that their suit must be based upon some ground which under the Hindu Law would free them from liability, as sons of a Hindu joint family, to pay their father's debts and that, a sale once having taking place, the sons cannot succeed in a suit to recover the property sold upon the sole ground that they were not made parties to the original suit.

Again, in Lal Singh v. Pulandar Singh (2) a Bench of this Court, of which one of us was also a member, held that where ancestral property of a joint Hindu family has been sold in execution of a decree upon a mortgage executed by the father, no suit for redemption of their interest is maintainable by the sons upon the mere ground that they were not made parties to the suit under the decree in which the ancestral property was sold.

Again, in the case of Balwant Singh v. Aman Singh (3), our brothers TUDBALL and CHAMIER held, following the ruling in Debi Singh v. Jia Ram (1), that after a sale of joint family property in execution of a decree passed upon a mortgage executed by a father his sons are not entitled to sue to recover [439] their shares in the property merely on the ground that they were not parties to the suit brought by the mortgagee. In this case, CHAMIER, J., in his judgment observes that "until December, 1907, there was an undisturbed current of authority to the effect that after a sale of joint family property has taken place in execution of a decree passed upon a mortgage made by a father, the sons are not entitled to sue to recover their shares in the property" upon the ground mentioned above, and that "they cannot sue to redeem the property or their interest in the property merely upon that ground." The learned Judge further remarks that the same rule was followed "whether the auction purchaser was a stranger or was the mortgagee."

The only case to which we have been referred which lends colour to the contention of the learned vakil for the appellants is the case of Ram Prasad v. Man Mohan (4). In that case AIKMAN and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ., in a suit in which the mortgagees under a mortgage of joint family property, executed by the father alone had sued for and obtained a decree for foreclosure, the sons and grandsons not having been made parties to the suit, although the mortgagees had knowledge at the time of the institution of the suit that there were sons and grandsons jointly interested with the mortgagor in the mortgaged property, held that the sons and grandsons were not precluded from instituting a suit for redemption. The learned Judges, in commenting upon the decision of the Full Bench in Debi Singh v. Jia Ram (1), directed attention to the fact that in that case the sons sued to get back from innocent purchasers their share of the family estate, and they refer to passages in the judgments as showing that stress was laid upon the fact that the plaintiff wished to oust innocent strangers.

It appears to us that the fact that the defendants in that case were strangers was not a governing factor in the case. It seems to us to be immaterial whether the purchaser at a sale is a stranger, or is the mortgagee himself. We may point out also that the learned Judges who decided Ram Prasad v. Man Mohan (1) laid stress on the fact the defendants had knowledge [440] of the plaintiffs' interest and did not make them parties to the suit for foreclosure. As to this we may observe that it lay upon the plaintiff seeking to redeem to allege and prove that the defendants who purchased at a sale in execution of a decree, had notice of the plaintiff's interests.

In Ram Nath Rai v. Lachhman Rai (2) it was held by STRACHEY, C. J., and KNOX, J., that where sons in a joint Hindu family come into court seeking to get rid of the effect as against their interests in the joint family property of a decree on a mortgage executed by their father obtained in a suit to which they were not made parties, the burden of proof lies on them to establish that the mortgagee, when he brought the suit, had notice of their interests in the mortgaged property. In the present case the mortgagors do not allege that the debt contracted by their ancestor, Man Singh, was a debt contracted for any immoral or illegal purpose. They do not allege that the plaintiffs in the mortgage suits in which the property was sold had notice of their interests, and there was no evidence adduced to establish that they had any such notice. Under these circumstances and in view of the weight of the authorities of this Court we think that there is no force in this appeal. We dismiss it with costs.

No. 43/1 as belonging to them. One of the pleas in defence was that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court. The Court of first instance, relying on section 233 (k) of Act No III of 1901, dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree on the ground that the plaintiffs' patti not having been the subject of partition, the suit was maintainable in the Civil Court and remanded the case to the first Court for disposal of the suit. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Babu Sital Prasad Ghose, for the appellants, submitted that it was immaterial whether or not the plaintiffs had applied for partition. Section 233 (k) of Act III of 1901 clearly barred the suit. He relied on Jagannath v. Tirbeni Sahai (1).

Munshi Gokul Prasad, for the respondents, contended that in partition proceedings the defendants' application was that the pattis which belonged to the applicants should be made into one mahal. The plaintiffs who owned a separate patti were not made parties to that application. This fact distinguishes the present case from the case in I. L. R., 31 All., 41. The land in dispute not having been comprised in the pattis which were the subject of partition, section 233 (k) was not applicable. He relied on Kishen Prasad v. Kadher Mal (2).

Babu Sital Prasad Ghose was not called upon to reply.

KNOX and BANERJI, J J. :—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by Gokul Prasad and Musammat Gangoli, plaintiffs respondents in this Court. They began by stating that in the mahal there was a separate patti of theirs, which had been in their proprietary possession, and that it had all along been included in a separate lot and had no connection with other pattis. In 1905 certain of the appellants who were owners of some pattis in the same mahal applied to the Revenue Court to have their [442] pattis formed by partition into a single patti. The other pattidars made similar applications. The plaintiffs, however, abstained from the proceedings, as they were not interested in them, and took no part in them from beginning to end. Before the partition had been confirmed and when the lots were prepared, they found that a certain plot bearing No. 43/1, which was actually in the defendants' proprietary possession, had been included in the lot of the defendants, and plots Nos. 43/3 and 43/4 had remained in the plaintiffs' lot as before. After that the Court Amin made a mistake in the preparation of the map. He coloured plot 43/1 with the colour of the plaintiff's lot and plots 43/3 and 43/4 with the colour of the defendants' lot. In October, 1908, as the various lots were pointed out on the spot, the plaintiffs became aware of this mistake. They then applied to the Revenue Court to have this mistake corrected, but their petition was struck off by the Collector on the 7th of June, 1909, with the remark that such a mistake could be rectified by a Civil Court. Hence the present suit for a declaration that the plaintiffs are in possession as proprietors and zamindars of plots 43/3 and 43/4, and that they are comprised in their lot and patti and that the defendants have no concern with these plots. They had also an alternative prayer for recovery of possession.

In the written statements, among other pleas, a plea was taken that the suit as brought could not be entertained by a Civil Court. The Court of first instance accepted this plea and dismissed the suit, holding that section 233 (k) of the Revenue Act was a clear bar. Before the lower Appellate Court, the plaintiffs contended that the partition proceedings could not bar the civil suit. That Court recorded the following finding:—"The record of the partition proceeding which was sent for by this court shows that the appellants' patti was not the subject of partition, and therefore, with reference to the ruling in Kishan Prasad v. Kadher Mal (1), I find that the suit is cognizable by the Civil Court."

In appeal before us the contention is again raised that the suit is not cognizable by the Civil Court. We think that this contention is well founded. It is admitted that at the time [443] when partition was completed and was finally confirmed, the whole mahal was divided into separate pattis, and the plots in suit were taken out of the plaintiffs' patti, and one of them allotted to the defendants and the second to the patti of Jagannath. In place of these plots, plot 43/1 was allotted to the plaintiffs' patti. This is a matter which is entirely within the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court, and by section 233 (k) of Local Act III of 1901 no suit or other proceeding can be instituted in the Civil Court with respect to it. The case which has been relied upon by the lower Appellate Court is clearly distinguishable. In that case land belonging to a different mahal had been taken from the mahal and added to the mahal under partition. The case differs toto coelo. We decree the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below, and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts.

zamindari portion of the property and for possession of a moiety of a house by partition. The plea in defence, among other things, was that the transfer in favour of the plaintiff was void and inoperative. The Munsif found in favour of the plaintiffs, and decreed the suit. The defendants appealed to the District Judge, who, holding that a co-widow could not alienate the share even for her lifetime, dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appealed.

Mr. Abdul Raoof, for the appellant, contended that a Hindu co-widow was perfectly competent to alienate her interest in her husband's property in whatever way she chose to enure at least for her lifetime. He submitted that the case of Ram Piyari v. Mulchand (1), relied upon by the lower Appellate Court, proceeded upon a misconception of the ruling of Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bhagwandeen Doobey v. Myna Baee (2). Moreover, it was clearly distinguishable from the present case. In Musammat Sundar v. Musammat Parbati (3) the Privy Council clearly held that a partition like the one claimed in the present case could be allowed. He also relied on Kanni Ammal v. Ammakannu Ammal (4) and Vadali Mamidigadu v. Kotipalli Ramayya (5).

Babu Sital Prasad Ghose, for the respondents, submitted that the case in I. L. R. 7 All. 114, was absolutely indistinguishable from the present case. The case in 11 Moo. I. A. 487, was an authority for the proposition that a suit for partition like the present could not be entertained. In the case in 16 I. A. 186, Their Lordships of the Privy Council were dealing with a case in which the widows had nothing more than a possessory title, not with a case like the present in which the widows claimed to be in possession for their lives by rights of inheritance to their deceased husband. In a case like the present the estate was of the widows and was a joint estate, and neither of them could alienate her own share in the property without the consent of the [445] other. The Madras case relied upon by the other side could not be regarded as authority where there was an authority to the contrary of this Court in I. L. R. 7 All. 114.

Mr. Abdul Raoof, was not called upon to reply.

STANLEY, C J., and GRIFFIN, J.:—One Bidya Ram died, possessed of a 20 biswas mahal in mauza Sarah Banslia, and also a house and two inclosures situated in the same village. He died about 30 years ago, leaving two widows, namely, Musammat Gita and Musammat Mulo, who thereupon became entitled to his property to the extent of Hindu widows' estates. Musammat Mulo on the 7th of February, 1908, executed a deed of gift of her entire share in the property in favour of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs applied in the Revenue Court for mutation of names in respect of the zamindari property and also sought delivery of possession of a share in the house by partition. Musammat Gita objected to the mutation applied for and refused to deliver up possession of any portion of the house or to allow partition of it. It is stated and not denied that Musammat Gita also executed a deed of gift in favour of the defendant Sri Ram not merely of her share of the property but of the entire zamindari property and the house and its enclosures.

The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by the plaintiffs for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that under the deed of gift to them of the 7th of February, 1908, they are entitled to 10 biswas out of the 20 biswas mahal in question and of having a partition of the house and the inclosures.

The Court of first instance gave a decree to the plaintiffs, but upon appeal the learned District Judge set aside the decree of the Court below and dismissed the plaintiffs' claim on the ground that Musammat Mula had no authority to part with her life interest in any portion of the property without the consent of her co-widow. The learned Judge in the judgment observes as follows :—

"The ruling in the case of Ram Piyari v. Mulchand (1) is supported by the authority of the Privy Council and has not so far been overruled. It may appear strange that a co-widow can't part with her life interest in a property held jointly with other co widows, but such is the enunciation of the law. I do not believe that Mr. Mayne is correct in stating as a general rule of law that 'it [446] his been held that a widow can alienate her life interest as against her co-widows just as she can against her reversioners'."

Mr. Mayne's statement of the law on the subject is to be found in paragraph 554 of his work on Hindu Law, at page 752, 7th edition. It runs as follows :—

"Where several widows hold an estate jointly, or where one holds as manager for the others, each has a right to her proportionate share of the produce of the property, and of the benefits derivable from its enjoyment. And the widows may be placed in possession of separate portions of the property, either by agreement among themselves, or by decree of Court where from the nature of the property, or from the conduct of the co-widows, such a separate possession appears to be the only effectual mode of securing to each the full enjoyment of her rights. But no partition can be effected between them, whether by consent or by adverse decree, which would convert the joint estate into an estate in severalty, and put an end to the right of survivorship."

There are two objects which may be attained by partition. The one is to get rid of the right of survivorship in joint property, and the other to obtain a division of the joint property for the purpose of more convenient enjoyment of it without affecting any right of survivorship and without creating a right in the estate in severalty. It is clear that one of two widows cannot either by agreement, or by recourse to law, obtain a partition of joint property which will prejudice the right of survivorship of her co-widow or the rights of the reversioners after the death of the survivor of the widows. But the question before us is whether or not a donee of one of two widows can obtain from the Court a decree for partition of joint property which will have effect during the lives of the widows. According to Mr. Mayne such a partition may be carried out.

The case of Ram Piyari v. Mulchand has been strenuously relied upon as a ruling which supports the contention of the respondents that there cannot be a partition between widows of a deceased Hindu which will be effectual during their joint lives. The facts of that case shortly stated are these :—One Badri Dayal was the owner of a house. He died, leaving two widows, Chandan Kunwar and Ram Piyari, and a daughter by name Chandan Kunwar. On the death of Badri Dayal, his estate passed to his widows, between whom there had been no partition. On the 29th of November, 1892, Chandan Kunwar sold the house to Mulchand, but Mulchand did not succeed in obtaining [447] possession of the property and he, thereupon, on the 28th of May, 1883, sued his vendor and others for possession of it. He did not implead Musammat Ram Piyari, but she was made a defendant at her own request. The claim of Mulchand was to obtain possession of the entire house. MAHMOOD and DUTHOIT, JJ., held that one of the widows was not competent to alienate the property which she had so derived from her husband without the consent of the other even for purposes of legal necessity. The learned Judges quote several rulings of their Lordships of the Privy Council, and amongst others the ruling in Bhagwan Deen Doobey v. Myna Baee (1), as supporting the view taken by them. In that case Their Lordships stated the law as follows: —

"The estate of two widows who take their husband's property by inheritance is one estate. The right of survivorship is so strong that the survivor takes the whole property to the exclusion of daughters of the deceased widow. They are, therefore, in the strictest sense co-parceners, and between undivided co-parceners there can be no alienation by one without the consent of the other."

This passage from Their Lordships' judgment is quoted as authority for the proposition that between co-widows there cannot be partition, nor can one widow alienate her share for her life without the consent of her co-widow. It appears to us that what was intended by Their Lordships by the word alienation in the passage, which we have quoted, is alienation of the absolute interest in property and not the alienation of a widow's life estate. Referring to Bhagwan Deen v. Myna Baee, Their Lordships in the subsequent case of Gajapathi Nilamani v. Gajapathi Radhamani (2) carefully guard themselves against expressing any opinion as to the right of Hindu widows to partition property which has devolved upon them for life. They say:—

"Therefore, their Lordships, guarding themselves against being supposed to affirm by this order that either widow has power to dispose of the one-fourth share of the estate allotted to her, or that they have any right to a partition in the proper sense of the term, are not disposed to vary the form of the order under which one fourth of the profits of the estate will go to each widow during their joint lives, their respective rights by survivorship and otherwise remaining unaffected."

It appears to us that the decision in Ram Piyari v. Mulchand is not an authority for the proposition which has been contended for by the learned vakil for the respondents.

[448] Now turning to the case of Musammat Sundar v. Musammat Parbati (3), we find an express statement of Their Lordships of the Privy Council upon this question. In that case one Baldeo Sahai died, leaving two widows, and possessed of movable and immovable property. This property he had bequeathed to one Prem Sukh, his sister's son, whom, it is said, he had previously adopted and who died a minor shortly after the death of Baldeo Sahai. The widows took possession of the property of which they were so possessed, and it was contended that the other widow was not competent to maintain a suit for partition of the property of which they were so possessed, and it was contended that the other widow was not competent to maintain a suit for partition of the estate. In the course of the judgment of Their Lordships delivered by LORD WATSON, he observed that the only issue which it was necessary to consider was the sixth which was in these terms:—

"Has the plaintiff a right to have the property in dispute divided in equal shares as she claims?"

We may observe here that the learned Judges of this Court, PETHERAM, C. J. and BRODHURST, J. had held that she had no such right, overruling the decision of the Subordinate Judge. In the course of the Judgment, LORD WATSON remarked:—

"Their Lordships are at a loss to understand, at all events, to appreciate the grounds upon which the Chief Justice (PETHERAM, CJ.) endeavours to differentiate between the authorities which he cites, the import of which he correctly states, and the position of the parties to this action. Their (i.e. the two widow's) possession was lawfully obtained, in this sense, that it was not procured by force or fraud, but peaceably, no one interested opposing. In these circumstances it does not admit of doubt that they are entitled to maintain their possession against all comers except the heirs of Prem Sukh, or Baldeo Sahai, one or other of whom (it is unnecessary to say which) is the only person who can plead a preferable title. But neither of these possible claimants is in the field, and the widows have therefore each of them an estate or interest in respect of her possession which cannot be impaired by the circumstance that they may have ascribed their possession to one or more other titles which do not belong to them. It is impossible to hold that a joint estate is not also partible;....."

This appears to us to be a clear authority for the contention of the learned counsel for the appellants that Hindu widows who become entitled to an estate for their lives on the death of their husband are entitled to have a partition of their interests.

[449] In the Madras High Court in the case of Kanni Ammal v. Ammakannu Ammal (1), the facts of which are substantially on all fours with the case before us, SHEPHARD and BENSON, JJ., held that partition may be enforced by one of two sisters. In that case a party purchased certain property from one of two sisters jointly entitled to their deceased father's estate under the Hindu law and resold it, whereupon the other daughter sued for a declaration that the sales were invalid as against her and prayed that the property might be restored to her and her sister, or that there might be a partition of it. It was held that she was entitled to partition. The learned Judges in their judgment, after quoting a number of authorities, observe:—

"Having regard to those authorities we must hold that, while one of two daughters cannot by any alienation alter the character of the daughter's estate so far as concerns the right of survivorship or the rights of reversioners, she may alienate her interest in the property or have that interest taken and sold in execution of a decree against her. She may also, subject to the same condition, demand a partition of the property."

This decision appears to us to be in accordance with the rulings of the Privy Council and to be consonant with Hindu Law.

For the reasons we must allow the appeal. We observe that the Court of first instance in its decree declared the plaintiff entitled to get profits to the extent of the share of Musammat Mulo. In their plaint they do not ask for mesne profits. It may be said that by this decree mesne profits were awarded, but such was evidently not intended. We therefore think it right to delete from the decree of the Court of first instance the words "and that they are entitled to get profits to the extent of that share." We accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with this modification, namely, that the words "and that they are entitled to get profits to the extent of that share" be deleted and a clause inserted to the effect that any partition of the house or zamindari property which may be carried out under this decree shall not operate so as to prejudice the reversionary heirs or the right of the surviving widow to enjoy the entire property during her life after the death of her co-widow. The rights of the plaintiffs shall only enure during the lifetime of their donor. [450] We direct that the parties shall bear their own costs in the lower Appellate Court and that the appellants shall have their costs of this appeal.

Appeal decreed.

Money deposited "in usum jus habentis" improperly withdrawn by a person not entitled to it—Money had and received.

Where money is deposited in Court in usum jus habentis, and it is withdrawn by a person who is declared not to have any right thereto, the money so obtained may properly be held to be received for the use of the person entitled to it. Litt v. Martindale (1), referred to.

THE facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment of the Court.

Mr. G. W. Dillon (with him Mr. Abdul Raoof), for the appellants.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji (with him Babu Surendra Nath Sen), for the respondents.

STANLEY, C. J. and GRIFFIN, J.—This was a suit for a refund of Rs. 842 paid in satisfaction of a decree under the following circumstances. On the 31st March, 1883, the plaintiffs mortgaged certain property in favour of one Kallu Mal. Kallu Mal died, leaving his widow, Musammat Gulab Dei and a minor son Har Saran. On the 4th of December, 1897, Musammat Gulab Dei, as mother and guardian of her infant son, transferred the mortgagee rights under the mortgage to Musammat Shibia. Subsequently, on the 18th of March, 1900, Har Saran, who was still a minor, purported to transfer the mortgagee rights in the mortgage to the defendants. The defendants, on the 21st of May, 1900, instituted a suit for sale on foot of the mortgage of 1883 and obtained a decree which was made absolute on the 14th of September, 1901. Musammat Shibia was not a party to these proceedings. On the 5th of November, 1903, Musammat Shibia brought a suit to enforce the mortgage of [451] 1883, which had been transferred to her by Musammat Gulab Dei on the 4th of December, 1897. She obtained a decree, and in execution of that decree the mortgagee rights under the mortgage of 1883 were sold and purchased by Musammat Shibia. She then sued for sale of the mortgaged property impleading both the defendants and the plaintiffs, and obtained a decree for sale on the 23rd of December, 1903. In order to protect the property from sale under the decree of the 14th of September, 1901, the plaintiffs under protest deposited the amount of the mortgage in court; and they subsequently filed an objection to the execution of the decree of the defendants alleging that no interest in the mortgaged property passed to the defendants under the transfer of the 18th of March, 1900, Har Saren being at the date of the execution of that mortgage a minor. The defendants applied to the Munsif in whose court the money was deposited for payment of it and they alleged that the defendant, Nabi Baksh, had already paid off the amount due to Musammat Shibia under her decree. We find in the order of the court, dated the 14th of March, 1906, the following statement:—"Then it is shown that Nabi Baksh has already paid off the decretal amount of Musammat Shibia." The learned Munsif then observes:—"Under the circumstances I am of opinion that the present decree is capable of execution and the mortgagors cannot derive any advantage from the decree obtained by Musammat Shibia. It is obvious from this that the order for payment of the money was obtained on the faith of the false representation, made by Nabi Baksh that Shibia's decree had been paid off. The order of the Munsif was subsequently affirmed on appeal. In the suit brought by Musammat Shibia on the basis of the bond of the 4th of December, 1897, on appeal to the High Court, it was held on the 27th of June 1906, that the sale executed by Har Saran in favour of the defendants was absolutely void, and that the defendants had no right whatever in the mortgaged property in dispute. Despite this decree, the defendants, in January, 1907, withdrew from the court of the Munsif the sum which had been deposited by the plaintiffs under protest. The court, however, before making payment, required from the defendants security for the re-payment of the money if it should turn out [452] that the defendants were not entitled to it. A security bond by one Wajah-ud-din was executed for this purpose on the 2nd of January, 1907, and by that bond the surety hypothecated certain immovable property. The decree of Musammat Shibia was not paid by Nabi Baksh and has not been satisfied, but is still under execution. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought for the refund of the money improperly drawn from court by the defendants. Both courts have decreed the claim.

This appeal was then preferred and the main ground of appeal is that it is not open to the plaintiff, in view of the decree of the 24th of January, 1901, which has never been set aside, to recover back money obtained in execution of it, and that the matter must be deemed to be res judicata. There is no force in this contention. The defendants were parties to the suit brought by Musammat Shibia, and in that suit it was held that the transfer executed by Har Saran on the 18th of March, 1900, was absolutely void. In view of this ruling the defendants were not justified in making an application for and obtaining payment of the money lodged in court under protest. They acted improperly in representing to the court of the Munsif that Musammat Shibia's decree had been paid off by one of them. The money was deposited in court in usum jus habentis, and before it was withdrawn this court had declared that the defendants had no right to it. Under these circumstances the defendants were not justified in their action in withdrawing the money. They improperly withdrew money which in justice and equity belonged to the plaintiffs. Money so obtained may properly be held to be received for the use of the person entitled to it; see Litt v. Martindale (1). We think, therefore, that the decision of the courts below was perfectly right and dismiss this appeal with costs.

BED SARAN KUNWARI, (Plaintiff) v. BHAGAT DEO AND OTHERS (Defendant).*

Act (Local) No. II of 1901 (Agra Tenancy Act), section 68—Civil Procedure Code (1908), section 11, Explanation VI—Suit for ejectment in Revenue Court—Question of title decided by Assistant Collector—Decision allowed to become final—Res judicata.

In a suit for ejectment in the Revenue Court, the defendants to that suit pleaded title in themselves, and the Assistant Collector determined that question and held that the plaintiff had failed to prove title as against them. This decision became final. In a subsequent suit in the Civil Court for declaration of title against the former defendants and also certain others; held that the decision of the Revenue Court operated as res judicata so far as concerned those persons who had been defendants to the previous suit, but not as against those who were no parties to the suit. Behari v. Sheobalak (1) referred to.

The facts of this case were as follows:—

THE plaintiff, Sri Rani Bed Saran Kunwari, instituted a suit for ejectment in the Revenue Court in 1905 against Bhagat Deo [defendant No. 5] and Rabinath [father of defendants Nos. 6 and 7] on the allegation that the village in dispute was herancestral property; that Bhagat Deo and Rabinath were lessees of the land in dispute; that the lease had expired and that the defendants had in collusion with the patwari got their names entered in the Revenue papers. The valuation of the suit was Rs. 132-6-0.

The defendants opposed the suit on the ground that they with certain other relatives were themselves the proprietors. On the 8th March, 1906, the Revenue Court found in favour of the defendants and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff did not appeal from this decree, but on the 21st March, 1906, she applied for correction of the entries in the revenue papers. Her application was disallowed in August, 1907, and she was directed to seek her remedy in the Civil Court. Accordingly she filed the suit out of which the present appeal arose for ejectment of Bhagat Deo [454] and Rabinath, and those persons who were alleged to be proprietors. The valuation of this civil suit for purposes of jurisdiction was fixed at Rs. 1,800. One of the pleas set up in defence was that the suit was barred by res judicata. The defendants who were not parties to the ejectment suit also said in their defence that they were owners of an 8-anna share in the village and that the other defendants were owners of specific shares.

The Court of first instance held that the suit was barred by the rule of res judicata, the question of proprietary title having been decided by the Revenue Court. Regarding the case as against those defendants who were not parties to the ejectment suit, it held that Baldeo and Rabinath had claimed a title, not only for themselves, but also for the other defendants, and that under Explanation VI of section 11, the suit was barred as against them too.

The lower Appellate court, on appeal, held that the suit was barred as against those defendants who were parties to the ejectment suit, but that explanation VI of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code had no application and the suit was not barred against the defendants who were no parties to that suit. The plaintiff Appealed.

Munshi Haribans Sahai (with him The Hon'ble Nawab Muhammad Abdul Majid, for the appellant :—

The judgment in the former suit cannot opperate as res judicata as the present suit cannot be tried by the Revenue Court. He referred to section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The present suit is for a declaration of title as well as for possession, and it cannot be entertained by the Revenue Court which tried the first suit. The decision in that suit cannot operate as res judicata unless it be held that the present suit could be entertained by the Revenue Court ; Gokul Mandar v. Pudmanand Singh (1).

There is a special provision for partition cases, and a Revenue Court is to be considered a Civil Court for that purpose. The valuation of the ejectment suit being only Rs. 132, the Revenue Court could only become a Court of lowest civil jurisdiction, i.e., a Munsif's Court, and could not try the present suit, the [455] valuation of which was Rs. 1,800 and which could be tried by the Subordinate Judge. He referred to Behari v. Sheobalak (2).

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the respondents, was not called upon.

KNOX, BANERJI, and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by Sri Rani Bed Saran Kuar, appellant before us, in which she asked for recovery of possession of mauza Jamvanwa and for a declaration of her proprietary right to the same. One of the pleas raised in defence was that the present suit was barred by reason of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It appears that prior to the institution of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, a suit had been instituted in the Court of the Assistant Collector, First Class, under section 63 of the local Tenancy Act. The appellant was the plaintiff in that suit. The defendants were (3) Ramnath Prasad, who was the father of Ram Kinkin Deo and Harbans Deo, two of the present respondents, and also (4) Bhagat Deo, the third respondent before us. The appellant then sued for ejectment of the defendants on the ground that they were lessees, and that the lease under which they held would expire at the end of the then current agricultural year.

The defence was to the effect that the defendants were not lessees, but proprietors, and that the plaintiff had no title to the property in question. The Assistant Collector took upon himself to determine the question of title then in issue before him. We cannot help saying that the action of the Assistant Collector seems to us to have been inexpedient. He would have shown better discretion if he had required the defendants to institute a suit in the Civil Court for the determination of this question, which was particularly a question for the Civil Court to determine. Section 199 of the Local Tenancy Act, however, gave the Assistant Collector power to determine the question, and he determined it against the plaintiff, namely, the appellant before us. He held that the plaintiff had no title to the property in dispute.

The plaintiff might have carried this decision in appeal before the District Judge. Had she done so, it would have been within [456] the power of the District Judge either to try the question of title himself, or, if he had not all the materials before him necessary for the determination of the question, to have framed issues with reference to that question, and have referred them for trial to any subordinate court of civil jurisdiction. That court might, for instance, have been the court of the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff, however, did not take any action in this direction, with the result that she has now to meet a decree against her which has become final. The decree was pronounced, it is true, by a Revenue Court, but by a Revenue Court which, as we have held in previous decisions, and as we now hold, is pro tanto a Civil Court of competent jurisdiction to decide the question of title. The rulings to which we refer will be found mentioned and considered in Behari v. Sheobalak (1).

1911 FEB. 7. FULL BENCH. 33 A. 453= 10 I. C. 925= 8 A. L. J. 341.

To return to the suit out of which this appeal arises, the court of first instance held that the plaintiff's case was barred by the rule of res judicata. The lower appellate court also held that the suit of the plaintiff was barred against such of the defendants as were parties to the previous suit brought under section 63 to which we have already referred. With this view of the lower appellate court we agree for the reasons stated above. So far as the present case is concerned the result is, that the appellant's claim must be held to be barred against the respondents to this appeal. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

A Muhammadan wife brought a suit for dower against her husband which resulted in a compromise, the terms being that the wife was given possession of some property in lieu of her dower and the husband retained possession of some other property for life, which life interest in case of urgent necessity he was authorized to sell or hypothecate, and it was agreed that on the death of the wife the persons who should be the heirs of both would be the owners of the properties. The wife predeceased her husband, who then transferred certain properties in his own right and as heir of his wife, held that the compromise was in the nature of a family settlement under which the husband was not competent to dispose of more than the life interest in certain property therein named. of Nizam-ud-dinpur and 17½ biswas of Tayabpur. His wife, Musammat Mubarak-un-nissa, brought a suit against him for the recovery of her dower of Rs. 10,000, and this suit was compromised and the compromise embodied in a decree of the 29th of August, 1889. The material portions of the decree ran as follows:—

"The defendant, Abdullah, gives the whole of the undermentioned properties to the plaintiff in lieu of Rs. 10,000 dower claimed by her. Now the plaintiff is the owner of the said properties, but the defendant will retain possession over 10 biswas of Nizam-ud-dinpur for his life; the income of it will be appropriated by the defendant, and in case of urgent necessity he may hypothecate or sell his life estate in 5 biswas out of the said 10 biswas . . . On the death of the plaintiff those who may be the heirs of both the plaintiff and the defendant will be the owners of the properties."

Mubarak-un-nissa died on the 25th of May, 1894, and was survived by her husband Abdullah. He, on the 19th of [458] April, 1897, executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of the defendant No. 1 of 4 biswas of Nizam-ud-dinpur and 2½ biswas of Tayabpur. On the 2nd of April, 1899, he sold to the plaintiff 3 biswas out of the 5 biswas of Nizam-ud-dinpur, of which, according to his construction of the abovementioned decree, he was the owner, and 1¼ biswas out of the other 5 biswas of the same village to which he claimed title by inheritance from his wife. Abdullah died in 1899, and on the 14th of June, 1907, the plaintiff brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for the redemption of the property mortgaged by Abdullah under the mortgage of the 2nd of April, 1889. He impleaded the mortgagee and the heirs of Mubarak-un-nissa and Abdullah, namely the defendants 2—13, who are their children and grand-children. These last mentioned defendants 2—13 disputed the right of the plaintiff to redeem the mortgage, contending that Abdullah had only a life estate in 10 biswas of Nizam-ud-dinpur, and that the interest of the plaintiff in the 5 biswas, which was transferred to him, came to an end with the death of Abdullah. It was further contended that according to the terms of the decree Abdullah relinquished his chance to succeed as an heir to any part of the estate of Mubarak-un-nissa, inasmuch as he agreed with her that only those who might be the heirs of both himself and her would be the owners of her property on her death.

The court of first instance dismissed the suit, holding that under the compromise incorporated in the decree, Abdullah got only a life estate in the 10 biswas and that he relinquished his right of inheritance to his wife as to the properties comprised in the decree.

An appeal was preferred and before the lower appellate court it was admitted that Abdullah had only a life estate in a 10 biswa share of Nizam-ud-dinpur, but it was contended that on the death of his wife he inherited 2½ biswas out of the remaining 10 biswas. The decree of the court of first instance was upheld.

The plaintiff Faiyaz-ul-Rahman appealed to the High Court, when his appeal coming before a single Judge of the Court was [459] allowed and the suit decreed. The defendants thereupon appealed under section 10 of the Letters Patent.

recovery of her dower of Rs. 10,000, and this suit was compromised and the compromise embodied in a decree of the 29th of August, 1889. The material portions of the decree ran as follows:—

Mubarak-un-nissa died on the 25th of May, 1894, and was survived by her husband Abdullah. He, on the 19th of April, 1897, executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of the defendant No. 1 of 4 biswas of Nizam-ud-dinpur and $2\frac{1}{2}$ biswas of Tayabpur. On the 2nd of April, 1899, he sold to the plaintiff $3\frac{3}{4}$ biswas out of the 5 biswas of Nizam-ud-dinpur, of which, according to his construction of the above-mentioned decree, he was the owner, and $1\frac{1}{4}$ biswas out of the other 5 biswas of the same village, to which he claimed title by inheritance from his wife. Abdullah died in 1899, and on the 14th of June, 1907, the plaintiff brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for the redemption of the property mortgaged by Abdullah under the mortgage of the 2nd of April, 1889. He impleaded the mortgagee and the heirs of Mubarak-un-nissa and Abdullah, namely, the defendants 2—13, who are their children and grand-children. These last mentioned defendants 2—13 disputed the right of the plaintiff to redeem the mortgage, contending that [460] Abdullah had only a life estate in 10 biswas of Nizam-ud-dinpur, and that the interest of the plaintiff in the 5 biswas, which was transferred to him came to an end with the death of Abullah. It was further contended that according to the terms of the decree Abdullah relinquished his chance to succeed as an heir to any part of the estate of Mubarak-un-nissa, inasmuch as he agreed with her that only those who might be the heirs of both himself and her would be the owners of her property on her death.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, holding that under the compromise incorporated in the decree, Abdullah got only a life estate in the 10 biswas and that he relinquished his right of inheritance to his wife as to the properties comprised in the decree.

An appeal was preferred and before the lower Appellate Court it was admitted that Abdullah had only a life estate in a 10 biswa share of Nizam-ud-dinpur, but it was contended that on the death of his wife he inherited $2\frac{1}{2}$ biswas out of the remaining 10 biswas. The decree of the Court of first instance was upheld.

A second appeal was then preferred and the learned Judge of this Court before whom it was argued, reversed the decisions of the Courts below, holding that the agreement on the part of Abdullah to relinquish his chance to succeed Mubarak-un-nissa was void and unlawful, and that the Court had no jurisdiction to pass the decree, on its basis, of the 29th of August, 1889, under section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act No. XIV of 1882). The Court held that the decree of the 29th of August, 1889, so far as it debarred Abdullah from inheriting his share in the assets of Mubarak-un-nissa is a nullity and that Abdullah's representative in interest is not bound by it, and accordingly that Abdullah, on the death of Mubarak-un-nissa, inherited $2\frac{1}{2}$ biswas out of 10 biswas of Nizam-ud-dinpur, and that the plaintiff as a purchaser from him is entitled to redeem the entire mortgage. We may point out that Abdullah could not inherit more than a sixth of the share of his wife, and not a fourth, as stated by our learned brother. There being children of the marriage, [461] his share according to the Muhammadan law would only be one-sixth. This, however, is of no importance so far as regards the present appeal.

From the decision of our learned brother this appeal has been preferred under the Letters Patent. In his judgment the authorities bearing on the subject of the right of a Muhammadan to relinquish his chance of succeeding as an heir to the estate of a living person are reviewed. We do not think it necessary in the view which we take of the facts to refer particularly to all the authorities. In the case of Musammat Hurmut-ul nissa Begum v. Allahdia Khan (1) Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that according to the Muhammadan law there may be a renunciation of the right to inherit. The ruling has not, so far as we are aware, been questioned by Their Lordships in any subsequent case. The ruling was, however, prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, and it may be that that Act has some bearing upon the question, as was held by JENKINS. C. J. and BEAMAN, J, in Shumsuddin Goolam Husein v. Abdul Husein Kalimuddin (2). In that case it was held that the chance of an heir-apparent succeeding to an estate is under Muhammadan law neither transferable nor releasable, that it is only by application of the principle that equity considers that done which ought to be done that such a chance can, if at all, be bound. In Kunhi Mamod v. Kunhi Moidin (3), decided long subsequent to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, it was held by COLLINS, C. J. and PARKER, J., that the renunciation by a Muhammadan of his chance of succeeding to an estate was valid. In that case the plaintiff, in consideration of Rs. 150, which was paid to him by his mother in respect of the share in her estate to which he would become entitled on her death, admitted that he had no longer any right to her property. The learned Judges held that "prima facie there is nothing illegal in the transaction" and in the absence of clear proof that it is forbidden by Muhammadan law, they thought that the plaintiff should be held to be bound by it.

[462] There is no doubt a conflict of decisions in the High Courts in India upon this question, but is it necessary in this case to determine it? We think not. Prior to and at the date of the decree of the 29th of August, 1889, Abdullah was the absolute owner of the property affected by that decree. His wife claimed her dower. They had children, and an arrangement was come to, whereby the wife accepted in lieu of her dower a life estate in portion of the property of her husband, and Abdullah accepted a life estate in other portions of his property, and subject to the life estate the properties were settled upon the children of the marriage. This was in the nature of a family settlement. Both Abdullah and Mubarak-un-nissa agreed that upon their respective deaths the property in which life estates were reserved to them should devolve upon their heirs. There is nothing, so far as we are aware, unlawful in such an agreement. There was no transfer or renunciation of an expectant interest or of a mere possibility. The Court, which passed the decree upon the compromise, considered it lawful and passed a decree in accordance with it. It appears to us that the decree debarred Abdullah, or any one claiming under him, from successfully asserting a title to any interest in the property outside and beyond the life interest which was reserved to him. Having taken benefits under the compromise it was not open to him, nor is it open to any one claiming under him now to impugn the validity of the transaction or deprive the heirs of the rights and interests conferred upon them not merely by Abdullah but by Mubarak-un-nissa. Section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act merely provides that "the chance of an heir apparent succeeding to an estate . . . or any other mere possibility of a like nature, cannot be transferred." This clause seems to strike at transfers of a mere possibility or expectancy not coupled with any interest or growing out of any existing property. It does not, for example, strike at agreements by expectant heirs, such as an agreement to divide a particular property in a certain way on the happening of a particular contingency : see Ram Nirunjun v. Prayag Singh (1).

Limitation—Adverse possession—Purchaser of a decree on a mortgage allowing a puisne mortgagee to pay him off—Such position inconsistent with a claim to be in adverse possession of the mortgaged property.

Held that when the purchaser of a decree for sale on a mortgage accepted from a puisne mortgagee the amount due under the decree which he had purchased, he by so doing admitted the validity of the puisne mortgage, and his position was not consistent with a claim to be in adverse possession of the mortgaged property. Ramcharan v. Sadashiv (2) referred to.

THIS was a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff had acquired a title by adverse possession to certain property. The claim had first been asserted in a similar suit in 1894, but that suit had been dismissed. The immediate cause of the bringing of the present suit was that one of the defendants had executed a mortgage of the property in favour of other defendants, who had obtained a decree thereon and were about to bring the property to sale. The court of first instance, Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur, decreed the claim in part On appeal the District Judge dismissed the suit in toto for reasons which will be found set forth at length in the judgment of the High Court. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

STANLEY, C. J., and GRIFFIN, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff had acquired a title by [464] adverse possession to shares in four villages specified in the plaint, and that the defendants, second party, were not entitled to bring that property to sale in execution of a mortgage decree against the defendants, first party.

The defendants, first party, were recorded in the revenue papers as owners of a three-fourths share in the property in suit, but according to the plaintiff they never were in possession and he alone was in exclusive enjoyment of the property for over 12 years. Defendant No. 1, one of the recorded co-sharers, executed a mortgage of the property on the 12th April, 1899, in favour of the defendants, second party. The latter sued on this mortgage and obtained a decree for sale on the 14th of December, 1905. The present suit was instituted on the 3rd July 1906.

Prior to this, namely, on the 16th of February, 1894, the plaintiff had instituted a suit praying for maintenance of possession and establishment of his title by adverse possession over the property. This suit was dismissed on the 18th December, 1894, upon the finding that the plaintiff had failed to prove adverse possession for a period of twelve years. This decision was upheld on appeal by the High Court. The present suit, it will be noted, was filed more than twelve years after the institution of the former suit. It was dismissed by both the Courts below upon the ground that the suit was barred by the rule of res judicata by reason of the decision in the former suit. This decision was reversed by this Court on appeal, the Court holding that the plaintiffs might have acquired a title by adverse possession since the 16th February, 1894, and that the doctrine of res judicata did not bar it. This Court in its order of remand framed two issues for determination, namely:—

(1) Whether the plaintiff has been in possession of the land since the 16th of February, 1894, and, if so, for what period?

(2) If the plaintiff has been in possession for any time, what was the nature of that possession?

The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff had been in possession of the property in suit for a period of over twelve years since the 16th of February, 1894, before the institution of the present suit, and (2) that his possession during that period [465] over three out of the four villages in suit was adverse to the defendants.

On these findings the learned Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit in respect of three villages, and dismissed it with regard to the fourth village.

The defendants appealed against the order decreeing the plaintiff's claim, while the plaintiff appealed against the dismissal of his suit with regard to the fourth village.

The learned District Judge has allowed the defendants' appeal and has dismissed the plaintiff's suit in toto. The ground upon which he dismissed the suit appears to be, that there was no evidence of an assertion by the plaintiffs of possession adverse to the defendants, first party, subsequent in date to the 16th of February, 1894 The learned District Judge observes:—"It is obvious that any assertion of plaintiff, earlier than the 16th of February, 1894, is nothing, since it is res judicata that he was not then in possession. It is equally clear that the plaint is nothing, since it relates to the date of insitibution and no later, and the res judicata relates to the same period as the plaint."

APPELLATE CIVIL—

9 I. C. 572.

The learned Judge appears to labour under some misconception as to what was decided in the former suit. The decision in that suit was not that the plaintiff was not in possession, but that he had failed to establish the acquisition by him of a title by adverse possession. It appears to us that the assertion of adverse title contained in the plaint of the 16th of February, 1894, cannot be ignored in the manner the Court below has ignored it. If the plaintiff had succeeded in proving that for a period of twelve years or upwards prior to the institution of this suit he has held uninterrupted possession over the property in suit adverse to the defendants, then he would be entitled to a declaration of his title as against them.

But there is another ground upon which the lower Appellate Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The defendant, Ganesh Prasad, in conjunction with two other persons, mortgaged his share in the villages in dispute to the Gorakhpur Bank, and on the 29th of November, 1901, the Bank obtained a decree on foot of his mortgage, and on the 16th of January, 1903, sold that decree to a benamidar for the plaintiff in this suit who has [466] been found to have been the real purchaser. At this date the possession of the plaintiff had not ripened so as to give him a title by prescription. The defendants, second party, as puisne mortgagees, paid to the plaintiff the amount of the decree so transferred to him and thus stepped into the shoes of the prior mortgagee. The learned District Judge held that by his conduct in taking the amount of the decree from the defendants, second party, the plaintiff admitted the validity of the mortgage held by these defendants, and did not hold out his own possession as adverse to the defendant, first party, and he also held that there was no evidence of any adverse possession later than the 16th February, 1894. Adverse possession is a question of fact to be determined upon evidence, and we think that the lower Appellate Court was justified under the circumstances in holding that adverse possession could not be set up as existing at the date of the redemption by the defendant, second party, of the debt of the Bank. The plaintiff not merely paid off the debt of the Bank, but also on the strength of the security of the Bank and of the transfer to him of the Bank's decree induced the defendants, second party, to pay to him the debt so transferred. In doing so he must be taken to have acknowledged that the Bank had a subsisting claim to the share of the defendant, Ganesh Prasad, and also the right of the defendants, second party, to redeem the earlier security by virtue of their rights as puisne mortgagees. It was in evidence that the plaintiff did not at this time assert adverse possession of Ganesh Prasad's share. He held himself out, to the puisne mortgagees, as owners of the Bank's interest in that share, and his possession, so far as the respondent's interest in the property is concerned, might properly be deemed to have been referable to his title by virtue of the Assignment of the Bank's decree. A man cannot hold a mortgage on his own property, and in taking payment from the puisne mortgagees the plaintiff ought, we think, to be deemed to have acknowledged the title of Ganesh Prasad to the equity of redemption in his share of the property. "As long as possession can be referred to a right consistent with the subsistence of an ownership in being at its commencement, so long must the possession be referred to that [467] right rather than to a right which contradicts the ownership."

Ram Chandra v. Sadashiv (1). In the case of a co-sharer holding mortgaged property after redemption by him of the mortgage, limitation is computed only from the date when the possession becomes adverse by the assertion of an exclusive title. At the date of the transactions to which we have referred, we do not think it can be rightly held that the plaintiff asserted an exclusive title. This being so, whether the possession of the plaintiff was adverse or not prior to the redemption of the mortgage of the Bank by the defendants, second party, is immaterial. By the transactions above referred to the prior possession, if adverse, was interrupted and limitation could only be deemed to run as from their date.

For these reasons we think that the learned District Judge came to a right conclusion, and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Act No. V of 1882 (Indian Easements Act), section 13—Easement of necessity—Definition.

An easement of necessity is an easement without which a property cannot be used at all and not one merely necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property. Wheeldon v. Burrows (2) followed. Union Lighterage Company v. London Graving Dock Company (3) and Ray v. Haseldine (4) referred to.

[Ref. 50 I. C. 646=17 A. L. J. 672; 72 I. C. 199.]

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

On the 19th of December, 1908, a decree was passed for partition of moveable and immoveable property, which, among other things, provided that the plaintiff should have a two-thirds share in the immoveable property and ordered "that the plaintiff should get possession of the house marked yellow and green in the map which is incorporated in the decree." This house was only 25 feet wide, was surrounded by other houses on three sides, and had a road to the north on which a door situate in the yellow portion opened. Upon the plaintiff applying for execution of the decree in her favour, the [468] judgment-debtors objected that the said door and the passage over the yellow portion to which it gave access should be kept open for his benefit. The Subordinate Judge allowed the objection and said:—

"The defendant, however, has not lost by partition the easement over the other portion of the house for purposes of egress and ingress. The decree-holder cannot stop that by building a partition wall . . . No doubt, this right of passage will make the decree-holder's share also almost useless, but fear I cannot help it."

The plaintiff appealed, and on his behalf Bolye Chunder Sen v. Lalmoni Dasi (5) and Kadombini Debi v. Kali Kumar Halder (6) were cited, and it was argued that the executing Court was not competent to read any terms into the decree or recognise any right not reserved thereby, and that so long as there was unity of ownership, there could be no right of easement. KNOX and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ., remitted the following issue to the Court below, namely:—"Is the doorway over which the lower Court has granted a right of passage the only possible means of egress and ingress to the defendant's property?" The finding returned was to the following effect:—

"At any rate I do not think there is any other such convenient possible means of ingress and egress to the house of Kedar Nath as to keep his house capable of residence. I may further remark that if a partition wall be erected to separate his share, his house will be unfit for residence on sanitary grounds."

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the appellant, contended that the Court below had confounded convenience with necessity; and relied upon Union Lighterage Co. v. London Graving Dock Co. (1), Roy v. Hazeldine (2), Goddard on Easements, (ed. 6,) pp. 38-9. Gale on Easements (ed. 8), p. 172. Peacock on Easements (ed. 2), p. 21 and Wutzler v. Sharpe (3).

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, for the respondent, urged that the map clearly showed that the portion of the house allotted to the defendant could not be enjoyed as heretofore if he were not permitted to use the old passage and had to pull down some walls and fill up a well. It would practically amount to a rebuilding of the house. The easement therefore was one of necessity.

[469] Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, in reply, submitted there was no question of rebuilding the house, and no authority in favour of the contention that the old conditions should be completely maintained. The case in 2 Ch for 1904, supported the opposite view.

KNOX and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ.—One Sukhdei got a decree for a portion of certain buildings and the rest was given to Kedar Nath. It is admitted that the buildings before partition belonged to one owner and that the decree reserved no easement of way in favour of Kedar Nath.

Sukhdei, in execution of the decree, applied for the possession of the share allotted to her. Kedar Nath objected that he had the easement of way over the doorway in question. The Court below granted the easement claimed by him. Sukhdei appealed to this Court, and her learned advocate contended that the Court below, as an executing Court, could not grant an easement which had not been awarded by the decree. We, by our order, dated the 11th of July, 1910, remitted the following issue to the Court below for trial:—"Is the doorway over which the lower Court has granted the right of passage the only means of egress and ingress to the defendant's property?"

The findings of the Court below are to the effect that a door can be opened on the north, in Kedar Nath's share, but that it will not be convenient inasmuch as the utility of the house will be very much reduced, and that excepting the doorway in question there is no other possible and convenient means of egress and ingress to the share of Kedar Nath. The learned advocate of Sukhdei urges that the findings fail to establish an easement of necessity which is founded upon absolute necessity and not upon a more convenient use of the dominant tenement. This contention of the learned advocate in our opinion is sound.

The English law on the subject is that an easement of necessity arises only when it is absolutely necessary, and not when it is necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the dominant tenement.

APPELLATE CIVIL

33 A 467 = 8 A. L. J. 280=9 I. C 628.

[470] The leading case on the point before us is Wheeldon v. Burrows (1), and was followed in Union Lighterage Company v. London Graving Dock Co. (2) in which, at page 573, we find the following passage :—

"In my opinion an easement of necessity such as is referred to, means an easement without which the property retained cannot be used at all, and not one merely necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of that property."

The cases of Wheeldon and Union Lighterage Company are referred to in Ray v. Hazeldine (3), and as the judgment of KEKEWICH, J., is highly instructive, we quote the following portion therefrom :—

"If a vendor of land desires to reserve any right in the nature of an easement for the benefit of his adjacent land which he is not parting with, he must do it by express words in the deed of conveyance. That is settled law, and expresses the result of the decision in Wheeldon v. Burrows (1), where the Court of Appeal affirmed the decision of BACON, V. C. That is the general rule, but the rule is subject to certain exceptions. One of them is the well-known exception of an easement of necessity, that is to say. where the enjoyment of the alleged right over the adjoining land is necessary to the property which is not conveyed, then the Court will consider the easement as impliedly reserved, though it has not been reserved by express words. Such easement, or right in the character of an easement, may be a right to the access of light to a particular window. In a large majority of cases a window which lights a room is deemed necessary to the lighting of that room and is, on the whole, essential to the comfortable enjoyment of that room, but it does not follow that the right to access of light is an easement of necessity. Where are you to draw the line? Suppose the blocking up of the window largely interferes with the comfort and enjoyment of the room, is the grantee of the adjacent land entitled to block it up, or does the exception stand? It seems to me that the line to be drawn is pointed out by STIRLING, L. J.. in Union Lighterage Co. v. London Graving Dock Co. (2). His Lordship makes a distinction between an easement of necessity and an easement necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of property. After referring to the two rules laid down in Wheeldon v. Burrows (1) and the exception thereto, he says :—

'The appellants did not dispute that there is no express reservation in the conveyance to the plaintiffs, but they contended that the easement claimed by the defendants is an 'easement of necessity' within the recognised exception to the second rule. Now, in the passages cited, the expression 'way of necessity and' 'easement of necessity' are used in contrast with the other expressions, 'easements which are necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property granted' and 'easements XXX necessary to the reasonable [471] enjoyment of the property conveyed, and the word 'necessity' in the former expression has plainly a narrower meaning then the word 'necessary' in the latter. In my opinion an easement of necessity such as is referred to means an easement without which the property retained cannot be used at all, and not merely necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property.' Then after pointing out that the lights in Wheeldon v. Burrows was reasonably necessary to the enjoyment of the workshop, he says:—'So here it may be that the tie-rods which pass through the plaintiff's property are reasonably necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's dock in its present condition, but the dock is capable of use without them, and I think that there cannot be implied any reservation in respect of them. That seems to me to draw the distinction between what is absolutely necessary and what is reasonably required for the enjoyment of the land or building as it stands. In my judgment this is a window to which the access of light cannot be reserved by implication upon the ground that the light is necessary to the pantry. It cannot be that there is any necessity by reason of its being used as a pantry, since it can be used for some other purposes. It cannot be said that a special use of light attaches to it as a pantry, and to say, as the defendant does, that the access of light to that window is reserved to him by necessity is giving to the word 'necessity' a meaning which it does not bear in this connection."

The reason of the law that there must be absolute necessity is very well stated by Goddard. He says :—

"In support of this view, the name by which they are known—easement of necessity—points to the fact that there must be absolute necessity before the law will compel a land owner to submit to so detrimental a right as an easement in his land—a right in reality though not in theory imposed on his land against his will. It must be borne in mind how detrimental generally it is to an estate to be burdened with an easement. what a nuisance it is to an owner of land to have another person walking at his pleasure over a field, or digging through the surface, or erecting a steam-engine thereon, and how such rights may prevent building on land or using it in many of the ways the owner may desire." pp. 38, 39, 6th edition.

The above rule of the English law, so far as partition of land is concerned, is enacted in the following portion of section 13 of the Indian Easements Act (Act No. V of 1882).

"Where a partition is made of the joint property of several persons.—

(e) if an easement over the share of one of them is necessary for enjoying the share of another of them, the latter shall be entitled to such easement." ...."The easements mentioned in this section, clauses (a), (c) and (e), are called easements of necessity."

It may be noted here that the Indian Easements Act was extended to these provinces by Act No. VIII of 1891 on the 6th of March, 1891, and the case is governed by the Indian Easements Act.

[472] Reading the findings of the Court below in the light of the provisions of section 13 as to easements of necessity, we hold that Kedar Nath failed to prove facts which would entitle him to the right of way claimed, inasmuch as the user of that right is not absolutely necessary for the benefit of his share of the house. He certainly can open a door towards the north for access to his share. It is contended by his learned advocate that with reference to the existing state of the building and without any alteration therein, the use of the doorway in question for access to this share of the building is an absolute necessity. There is, however, no authority to favour the contention, and the share cannot be deemed to be absolutely useless without the right of way claimed.

For the above reasons we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and disallow the objection of Kedar Nath with costs.

Appeal allowed.

RICHARDS and GRIFFIN, JJ.:—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff claimed that a certain ancestral house which has been attached in execution of a decree against one Chaube Rikhi Lal, could not be attached and sold. The plaintiffs were the son and grandson of the said Chaube Rikhi Lal. A decree had been granted against Chaube Rikhi Lal at the suit of the appellant Sumer Singh. The suit instituted by Sumer Singh was a suit on foot of a promissory note given by Rikhi Lal under the following circumstances. Rikhi Lal had been sued for libel. He was successful in the Court of first instance. On appeal, however, a decree was given against him. He was anxious to file a second appeal in the High Court, and having no money, Sumer Singh's father went security for him, had to pay the money for him and obtained the promissory note. The plaintiff raised the plea that the debt due to the father of Sumer Singh was not a debt for which a Hindu son and grandson could be held liable. The court of first instance held that the son and grandson were liable and dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and gave the plaintiff a decree. Hence the present appeal. The learned Judge having [474] referred to certain authorities and came to the conclusion that they were so conflicting that he was entitled to follow his own view. The case of Durbar Khachar v. Khachar Harsur (3) was one of the authorities cited before the learned Judge and was the authority which he thought fit to follow. Speaking generally, the debts which a son is not liable to pay are debts incurred for spirituous liquor, gratification of lust or gambling. (Vide Colebrooke's Mitakshara, Chapter VI, section 3, Placitum 47). The text also declares that a son is not bound " to pay any unpaid fines or tolls or idle gifts. " In the Bombay case cited above a decree was obtained against the defendant's father for damages to the plaintiff's property caused by a dam erected by the defendant's father, and it was sought to execute this very decree against the son. The facts of the present case are, when carefully considered, very different from those in the case cited. It was not sought to execute against the son or grandson a decree for damages for libel. The decree which the decree-holder sought to execute was a decree in a suit on a promissory note. The promissory note represented money which the father had borrowed for the purpose of defending himself against a suit for damages. Without expressing any opinion as to whether the case above referred to was or was not rightly decided, we think that the debt in the present case was a debt for which a Hindu son and grandson were liable. We may mention that no one appears on behalf of the respondents. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs.

Appeal allowed.

[15th February, 1911.]

Act No. III of 1877 (Indian Registration Act), sections 17, 49—Registration—Evidence—Petition of compromise unregistered and not embodied in any decree of Court.

Held that a petition containing the terms of a compromise between parties to a Revenue Court suit, which had been filed in the Court, but was unregistered and had not been acted upon or embodied in the Revenue Court's decree, could not in a subsequent civil suit be used as evidence of the terms of such compromise, the property purporting to be dealt with thereby being above the value of Rs. 100. Sadar-ud-din Ahmad v. Chajju, (1) and Kashi Kunbi v. Sumer Kunbi (2) followed.

[Dist. 18 A. L. J. 877=58 I. C 732.]

THIS was a suit for a declaration that the plaintiffs are entitled to retain possession of certain immovable property, and in the alternative, if they were found not to be in possession, that possession might be delivered to them. The property exceeded Rs. 100 in value. It belonged to one Gulzari Lal. Upon his death his daughter, Musammat Sujan, succeeded to it. On her death in 1907, the plaintiffs applied for mutation of names in their favour, as did also the father of the defendants. A compromise was entered into between the parties on the 8th of February, 1908, whereby it was agreed that portion of the property should pass into the hands of the father of the defendants and the remaining portion into the hands of the plaintiffs. The father of the defendants subsequently repudiated this compromise. An application was made to the Revenue Court for mutation, and that Court ignoring the compromise ordered mutation in favour of the defendant's father.

In the present suit the compromise above referred to was tendered in evidence in the first Court, but it was rejected on the ground that not being registered and the property being of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards, it was not admissible in evidence; and holding that the plaintiff's suit was based upon this compromise alone that Court dismissed the plaintiff's claim in toto, [476] without giving the plaintiffs an opportunity of establishing their title to the property or portion of it as the reversionary heirs of Gulzari.

On appeal, however, the District Judge held that the compromise was admissible and remanded the case under order XLI, rule 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure. From this order the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji (with him Babu Harendra Krishna Mukerji), for the appellants.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru for the respondents.

STANLEY, C.J., and BANERJI, J.—This is an appeal from an order of remand passed under order XLI, rule 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The suit was one for a declaration that the plaintiffs are entitled to retain possession of certain immovable property, and in the alternative, if they were found not to be in possession, that possession may be delivered to them. The property exceeds Rs. 100 in value. It belonged to one Gulzari Lal. Upon his death his daughter, Musammat Sujan, succeeded to it. On her death in 1907, the plaintiffs applied for mutation of names in their favour, as did also the father of the defendants. A compromise was entered into between the parties on the 8th of February, 1908, whereby it was agreed that portion of the property should pass into the hands of the father of the defendants and the remaining portion into the hands of the plaintiffs. The father of the defendants subsequently repudiated this compromise. An application was made to the Revenue Court for mutation, and that Court ignoring the compromise ordered mutation in favour of the defendant's father. Hence the present suit.

In their claim the plaintiffs alleged that Musammat Sujan, the daughter of Gulzari, was the last owner of the property and was the plaintiff's cousin by family relationship and was in possession of the property as daughter in a Hindu family and had a life-interest in it. A reference was then made to her death, and in the second paragraph of the plaint the plaintiffs say that on the death of Musammat Sujan a dispute arose between the plaintiffs and the father of the defendants, and that an application for mutation of names was presented on behalf of both parties in the Revenue Court; that the plaintiffs alone claimed [477] the whole property of Gulzari on the one hand and the father of the defendants alone claimed the whole property on the other hand. Then reference is made to the compromise to which we have referred. The compromise was tendered in evidence in the first Court, but it was rejected on the ground that not being registered and the property being of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards, it was not admissibe in evidence; and holding that the plaintiff's suit was based upon this compromise alone that Court dismissed the plaintiff's claim in toto, without giving the plaintiffs an opportunity of establishing their title to the property or portion of it as the reversionary heirs of Gulzari.

An appeal was preferred to the lower Appellate Court. That court held that the compromise was admissible in evidence, notwithstanding the fact that it was not registered. The learned Judge says:—"I find that the compromise petition in suit did not require to be registered and was admissible in evidence," and that "the lower Court improperly held that the test was whether the compromise was incorporated in the decree, and that this was not the test of admissiblity." That Court accordingly remanded the suit to the Court of first instance for determination on the merits. This appeal was then preferred.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

33 A. 475=8 A. L. J. 309=10 I. C. 853.

As regards the admissibility in evidence of the compromise the learned District Judge was, in our opinion, entirely in error. Neither the compromise, nor any terms of the compromise, was embodied in any decree or order, and to admit such a compromise in evidence is entirely in contravention of the provisions of the Registration Act. If authority were needed for this, it is to be found in the Full Bench case of Sadar-ud-din Ahmad v. Chajju (1). There it was held by a Full Bench, of which both of us were members, that a compromise entered into between the parties to mutation proceedings before a Court of Revenue which purported to modify the conditions of a pre-existing mortgage upon the basis of which mutation was sought, could not be allowed to take effect in opposition to the distinct terms of a registered instrument of mortgage. In the subsequent case of Kashi Kunbi v. Sumer Kunbi (2) a Bench of this Court, of which one of us was also a member, held in a case in which the [478] parties to a suit filed a compromise, which, in addition to setting forth the rights of the parties as to the property in suit, went on to provide that if either party sold his share of the property, the other party should have a right to pre-empt, and in which the decree based on the compromise was silent as to the right of pre-emption, that the compromise required registration, and not being registered, could not be used to support a suit for pre-emption. In the judgment in that case the authorities are dealt with. In that case some of the terms of the compromise were embodied in a decree, but the provision as to pre-emption was nowhere mentioned in the decree. In the present case no portion of the compromise is embodied in any decree or order. On the contrary, the order of mutation entirely ignored the petition of compromise. Clearly, therefore, this petition was not admissible in evidence to prove the agreement set out in it. The lower appellate Court was, we think, justified in remanding the suit, but not upon the ground on which it was remanded. The court of first instance ought under the circumstances to have heard the case upon the merits and tried the question of title set up by the respective parties irrespective of the compromise.

For these reasons the order of remand of the Court below was rightly passed and the Court of first instance must try the question of title set up by the respective parties. We accordingly dismiss the appeal, but under the circumstances the costs will abide the event.

Appeal dismissed.

A Munsif returned for presentation to the proper Court a plaint filed before him. The plaintiff appealed against this order to the District Judge, who transferred the appeal to a Subordinate Judge, who in turn remanded the case to the Munsif for trial on the merits. Held that no appeal would lie from the appellate order of remand.

IN this case a plaint was presented to a Munsif, who, being of opinion that he had no jurisdiction to hear the case, returned the plaint to be presented to the Revenue Court. The plaintiffs appealed from the order returning the plaint to the District Judge. The District Judge transferred the appeal to the Subordinate Judge who remanded the case to the Munsif for trial on the merits. The defendant appealed.

Babu Sital Prasad Ghosh, for the respondent, raised a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal to the effect that the appeal did not lie under section 104, sub-section (2), read with order XLIII, rule 1, of Act V of 1908. He further submitted that the appeal was prohibited by section 197, clause (3), of Act II of 1901 (The Agra Tenancy Act). He relied on Badam Singh v. Musammat Sabta Kuar (1).

Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan, for the appellant, submitted that the order of remand in the present case was appealable under order XLIII, rule 1. Section 197 of the Agra Tenancy Act did not apply. He relied on Ram Charan Ram v. Shcoraj, (2).

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of this appeal on the ground that having regard to the provisions of section 104 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, no appeal lies to this Court. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought in the Court of the Munsif. He was of opinion that it was not cognizable by him and accordingly made an order under order VII, rule 10, returning the plaint to be presented to the proper Court. From this [480] order an appeal was preferred to the District Judge under order XLIII, rule 1 (a). The learned Subordinate Judge to whose Court the appeal was transferred, and who heard it, was of opinion that the suit was cognizable by the Munsif, and accordingly set aside the order of the Munsif and remanded the case to his Court for trial on the merits.

Section 104 (2) provides that no appeal shall lie from an order passed in appeal under that section. The order appealed against is an order passed in appeal under that section, because clause 1 of the section allows an appeal from an order made under rules from which an appeal is expressly allowed by rules, and order XLIII, rule 1 (a) allows an appeal from an order made under rule 10 of order VII. As the lower Appellate Court made an order in an appeal from an order, as allowed by order XLIII, no further appeal lies from the order of the Appellate Court.

The learned counsel for the appellants, however, relies on clause (u) of rule 1, order XLIII, which allows an appeal from "an order under rule 23, order XLI, remanding a case where an appeal would lie from an order of the Appellate Court." That clause only contemplates an appeal from an order of remand under clause 23 of order XLI, and only in those cases in which if the Appellate Court had made a decree an appeal could have been preferred from such a decree. That is not the case here. Clause (u) of rule 1 provides for cases which under the former Code of Civil Procedure would have come under section 562, with this further addition that no appeal would lie from an order of remand in cases in which a decree of the Appellate Court would have been final. In other respects the Legislature in enacting the provisions of section 104 (2) does not appear to have altered the provisions of the old law. It seems to us to contemplate only one appeal from an order, and not two appeals, as is contended for on behalf of the appellant. In this view this appeal does not lie and must be dismissed.

Further, we are of opinion that, having regard to the provisions of of section 197 of the Agra Tenancy Act, the appellant is not entitled to take any objection or raise any plea in respect of the order of remand made by the Court below. If the suit had been brought in the Revenue Court, the Court to which an appeal [481] from the decision of that Court could have been preferred was the Court of the District Judge, inasmuch as a question of jurisdiction was raised and decided. (See section 177 (b) of the Tenancy Act). As the suit was filed in the Court of the Munsif, an appeal from his order lay to the District Judge. Therefore, even if the view adopted in Ram Charan Ram v. Sheoraj (1) is corret, as to which we express no opinion, section 197 would apply to the present case and no objection can be taken to the order of remand. It was, however, held in the case of Badam Singh v. Musammat Sabta Kuar (2) that the Court of the District Judge being the Court to which an appeal lay from the decision of the Munsif, the section applied. In either view, therefore, the appeal is not sustainable. We accordingly dismiss it with costs.

A decree-holder held two decrees against the same judgment-debtor, the one being a decree for sale on two mortgages, and the other a simple money decree. In execution of the latter decree the decree-holder caused part of the mortgaged property to be sold by auction, and it was purchased by a stranger.

Held, that the decree-holder was not competent to apply under order XXI, rule 89, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, to get this sale set aside.

[Ref. 13 A L. J. 273=27 I. C. 831.]

This was an appeal from an order setting aside an auction sale upon an application made under order XXI, rule 89, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The facts out of which the appeal arose were, briefly, as follows. The respondent, Ahmad Said Khan, obtained a decree against the judgment-debtor, Rafat Khan, on the 8th of October, 1909, for sale upon two mortgages. Subsequently, in November, 1909, he obtained another decree against the same judgment-debtor, but this was a simple decree for money. In execution of this latter decree he caused mauza Neali, one of the villages comprised in the mortgages upon which he had obtained the earlier decree, to be sold by [482] auction. It was purchased by the appellant, Muhammad Ahmadullah Khan. Thereupon the decree-holder applied under Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba, for the appellant.

Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq, for the respondent, decree-holder.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—This is an appeal from an order setting aside an auction sale upon an application made under order XXI, rule 89, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The facts are these:—The respondent, Ahmad Said Khan, obtained a decree against the judgment-debtor, Rafat Khan, on the 8th of October, 1909, for sale upon two mortgages. Subsequently, in November, 1909, he obtained another decree against the same judgment-debtor, but this was a simple decree for money. In execution of this latter decree he caused mauza Neali, one of the villages comprised in the mortgages upon which he had obtained the earlier decree, to be sold by auction. It was purchased by the appellant, Muhammad Ahmad-ullah Khan. Thereupon the decree-holder, Ahmad Said Khan, applied under order XXI, rule 89, to have the sale aside and made the deposit required by the section. This application has been granted by the Court below, which was of opinion that the decree-holder in his capacity as mortgagee was a person who held an interest in the property sold within the meaning of rule 89. That rule empowers a person who is the owner of immovable property which has been sold in execution of a decree, or holds an interest in such property by virtue of a title acquired before the sale to make an application to have the sale set aside. It is not alleged on behalf of Ahmad Said Khan that he is the owner of the property sold, but he contends that as mortgagee of the said property he holds an interest therein by virtue of which he is competent to make the application. No doubt, ordinarily a mortgagee of the property sold is a person who has an interest in it, and in view of the provisions of rule 89 he would be competent to make an application, but we have to consider the facts of this particular case. Here the holder of the decree for money was also the holder of two mortgages in respect of the property of [483] which he sought to have a sale. He caused the property to be sold either free from the mortgages, or subject to the mortgages. If it was sold free from the mortgages he must be deemed to have abandoned his mortgages, and in that case he has no interest, in the property sold. If he caused the property to be sold subject to the mortgages, the sale only related to the interest of the mortgagor, that is, his right of redemption. In this right of redemption the mortgagee has no interest. Therefore, from either point of view, the decree-holder in this case has no interest in the property sold such as would entitle him to make an application under rule 89. We think the judgment of the Court below to the contrary is erroneous. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and dismiss the application of the respondent, Ahmad Said Khan, to have the sale set aside, with costs in both Courts.

BIHARI AND ANOTHER (Defendants), v. RAM CHANDRA AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs).*

[17th February, 1911].

Evidence—Burden of proof—Usufructuary mortgage—Suit for possession of mortgaged property not brought for nearly twelve years—Presumption that no consideration passed.

Where the plaintiffs, who were usufructuary mortgagees, were never given possession of the mortgaged property and did not attempt to recover possession until the period of limitation had almost expired, it was held, on plea raised by the defendants that no consideration had passed, that the burden of proving that consideration had passed was rightly shifted to the plaintiffs. Achobandil v. Mahabir (1) followed. Mahabir Prasad v. Bishan Dayal (2) distinguished.

[Ref. 36 All. 370; 60 I. C. 730; 61 I. C. 634; 79 I. C. 596.]

"The facts are as follows:—Bihari, defendant No 1, on the 15th of December, 1896, executed a mortgage with possession in favour of the plaintiffs. In that deed the recitals are that they received the entire mortgage money as detailed below, that they put the mortgagees in possession and that they from that date should continue in possession thereof and should sublet the said property. The plaintiffs on the basis of that mortgage instituted [484] a suit for recovery of possession on the 14th of December, 1903, which was the last day for instituting the suit. The first plea in defence was as follows:—"The defendant did not receive the amount of consideration of the mortgage deed, and consequently the plaintiff never demanded possession during the long period of 12 years, nor did he make an application for mutation of names. The mortgage deed is without consideration."

"The Court of first instance dismissed the claim. The Court at the end of its judgment observes:—"I presume that the suit was not filed earlier as the bond in question was not executed for consideration.' On appeal the lower Appellate Court confirmed the decree. That Court in its judgment says:—'The defendants admit execution of the deed in suit but deny receipt of consideration.' That Court disbelieved the evidence adduced by the parties and was of opinion that the decision of the case turned on the question of burden of proof. In consequence of the delay instituting the suit for possession that Court was of opinion that the burden of proving the payment of consideration lay on the plaintiffs. For this proposition it relied on Achobandil Kuari v. Mahabir Prasad (1) in which the learned Judges observe:—'It is doubtless true that the party to a deed duly executed and registered, who alleges non-payment of consideration, is ordinarily bound to prove his allegation; but we think the Judge has overlooked the peculiar circumstances of this case. He had found that possession had never been transferred, and that the plaintiff and his predecessor had silently submitted to the withholding of possession for upwards of eight years. This state of things, combined with the continuous possession of the vendors, favoured their allegation that possession had been withheld because of the non-payment of consideration, and raised such a counter-presumption as to make it incumbent on the plaintiff vendee to give evidence that consideration had in fact passed.'

"The lower Appellate Court was further of opinion that the suit was for the specific performance of a contract of mortgage and was governed by article 113 of the Indian Limitation Act and not by article 144. The plaintiffs have preferred a second appeal to this Court and it is urged on their behalf that the suit is not barred by limitation under article 113, which has no application to the facts of the case, and that as the defendants admitted the execution and denied the receipt of consideration, they were bound to prove that they had not received the consideration of the mortgage. The view taken by the lower Appellate Court, that the suit is barred by limitation, is not correct. This action can in no way be regarded to be an action for the specific performance of the contract. The recitals in the mortgage deed are that the mortgagors received the motgage money and put the mortgagees in possession of the property mortgaged. That being so, the suit is clearly a suit for possession by a mortgagee against the mortgagor of immoveable property and is undoubtedly governed by article 135 of the Indian Limitation Act, vide Gopal Rao v. Baji Lal (1).

"Regarding the plea of burden of proof the question is simply this:—Does the institution of a suit for possession on the last day of limitation raise such a strong presumption of fact relating to the absence of consideration as to counteract [485] the presumption raised by the recital in the deed as to its payment. In support of the proposition that the long delay raises such a presumption, reliance is placed on section 159 of Volume I of Wigmore's Law of Evidence and on section 2517 of Volume IV of the same work; but in my opinion when the law of limitation fixes a time for the institution of a class of cases, the delay up to the last day of limitation is not sufficient to raise any presumption of the kind, because when the law of limitation sanctions such a delay no presumption of fact against that law can possibly arise. The ruling in I. L. R. 8 All. 641, is only an authority for the proposition that long delay raised a presumption of fact with reference to the circumstances of that case. That being so, that case is no authority for the proposition that a long delay in the institution of a suit for possession on the basis of a mortgage in which there is a recital that the mortgagors had received the consideration, will shift the burden of proof from them to the mortgagee in all cases.

"In Mahavir Prasad v. Bishan Dayal (2) it is laid down that 'where execution of a bond is admitted and the bond contains an admission that consideration has passed, it is for the executant to get rid of the admission which he has made in the bond. It is not enough for him to prove that prior to the institution of the suit on the bond he denied receipt of consideration, even if such denial was made before the registering officer."

"Following the above ruling, I am of opinion that the mortgagors in the case before me were bound to prove that they had not received consideration and that the delay in the institution of the suit is not, in my opinion, enough to take this suit out of the general rule that a party who admits execution of a deed in which he recites receipt of consideration is bound to prove non-payment.

"For the above reasons, I allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below, and send down the case to the Court of first instance through the lower Appellate Court for trying the remaining issues."

The defendants appealed.

The respondents were not represented.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J.:—In this suit the plaintiffs seek a decree for possession of certain property usufructuarily mortgaged to them on the 15th December, 1896. It appears from the evidence, and it is not disputed, that from the 15th of December, 1896, until the 14th of December, 1908, the day on which this suit was instituted, the plaintiffs never applied for mutation of names in their favour, nor did they take any step whatever to obtain possession from the defendants, and it is admitted in the plaint that they never got possession. The defence set up was that no consideration for the mortgage passed. Both the lower Courts dismisssed the plaintiffs' suit holding that [486] no consideration for the mortgage was proved. The lower Appellate Court did not place any reliance upon the oral evidence adduced on either side, but finding that no steps were taken by the plaintiffs for recovery of possession for a period of 12 years all but one day, drew the inference from this that no consideration had passed. The fact that no step was taken by the plaintiffs for so long a period raises the presumption that the plaintiffs did not consider during this long period that they were entitled to possession. We think that such an inference is under the circumstances not unreasonable, and that the Courts below were justified under the circumstances in throwing upon the plaintiffs the burden of proving as a fact that consideration did pass. The case is very similar to that of Achobandil Kuari v. Mahabir Prasad (1). The suit in that case was for possession of land alleged to have been purchased under a registered deed of sale. The defendant vendor admitted the execution and registration of the deed but denied receipt of consideration. The deed was dated January, 1886, and the suit was not instituted until the year 1894, that is, after the lapse of eight years. It was found that the vendor had been in possession during the whole of that period. The plaintiffs produced no evidence in proof of payment of consideration. It was held by OLDFIELD and TYRRELL, JJ., that, although under ordinary circumstances the party to a deed duly executed and registered, who alleges non-payment of consideration, is bound to prove his allegation, the fact that the plaintiff and his predecessor had silently submitted to the with holding of possession for upwards of eight years, combined with the continuous possession of the vendor, favoured the allegation of the latter that possession had been withheld because of the non-payment of consideration, and raised such a counter-presumption as to make it incumbent on the plaintiff to give evidence that consideration had in fact passed. We are not aware that this decision has been the subject of adverse comment, and a number of years have passed since the ruling was made. We think that the view taken by the learned Judges in that case is a reasonable one. The circumstances of this case are somewhat stronger, for here we have a mortgage executed so far back as [487] the 15th of December, 1896, and no steps whatsoever have been taken for the obtaining of possession of the property by the mortgagees until the last day of limitation, namely, the 14th of December, 1908, a period of 12 years. The learned Judge of this Court relied upon the ruling in Mahabir Prasad Rai v. Bishan Dayal (2). The facts of that case are unlike those in the present case. There, there was no withholding of possession for a length of time as in this case. We cannot concur in the decision of our learned brother and must allow the appeal. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of this Court and restore the decree of the lower Appellate Court with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

THIS was a reference under section 60 of the Stamp Act, 1899, made by the District Judge of Cawnpore on the following facts:—

A decree of a Punjab Court was transferred to the Court of the District Judge of Cawnpore for execution. A person who was not a legal practitioner filed, on behalf of the decree-holder, some papers in the Cawnpore Court. His authority for acting on behalf of the decree-holder was a 'mukhtar-namah' which was stamped only with a Court fee label of 8 annas. The District Judge referred the following question to the High Court:—"When a private person acting on behalf of another in a matter [488] in the Civil Court files a power of attorney, should not that power be liabile to duty under the Stamp Act, or is it properly stamped if filed on plain paper bearing an 8-anna Court fee label as if it were a mukhtar-namah under the Court Fees Act?"

The Government Advocate (Mr. A. E. Ryves), in support of the reference:—

The question is important as it appears to be the practice, in parts of these Provinces, of the Courts to accept, as properly stamped, documents of this kind in execution cases transferred from the Punjab, where people were allowed to appear and act for parties on the authority of such documents. This practice in the Punjab was due to the exemption contained in the last paragraph of section 37 of the old Code of Civil Procedure (1882), but omitted from order III, rule 2, of the present Code. So, now, in all the Provinces a person other than a legal practitioner can appear and act only in accordance with order III, rule 2. A power of attorney which is required by clause (a) of that rule is defined by section 2, clause (21) of the Stamp Act; and the amount of stamp duty payable is laid down by article 48 of the schedule. The document in question comes under clause (c) or clause (g) of article 48. It should, therefore, be executed on stamp paper of the value of Re. 1. Article 10 of schedule 11 of the Court Fees Act deals with mukhtar-namahs and vakalatnamahs, which are meant only for legal practitioners, and are to be distinguished from ordinary 'powers of attorney.' The Court Fees Act itself makes this distinction between a mukhtar-namah and a power of attorney to institute or defend a suit; vide section 19, clause (i).

No one appeared against the reference.

RICHARDS, GRIFFIN and TUDBALL, JJ.:—This is a reference under section 60 of the Stamp Act of 1899. A document was produced in the Court of the District Judge of Cawnpore. It was assumed by the Court below that this was a document which authorized the holder who is nominated therein to appear and do all acts necessary for the execution of a certain decree which had been transferred from the Punjab to Cawnpore for execution. We are dealing with the case on the assumption that the document if duly stamped was sufficient for the purpose. The [489] document bears an eight anna Court fee label and no other stamp. The donee of the power is not a certified mukhtar or pleader, and the question is whether under these circumstances the document is duly stamped. Section 2, clause (21) of the Stamp Act defines the expression "power of attorney" in the following terms:—"A power of attorney includes any instrument (not chargeable with a fee under the law for the time being in force) empowering a specified person to act for and in the name of the person executing it." The present document, as we shall presently show, clearly falls within this definition. Article 48 of Schedule I of the Stamp Act provides for the stamp on a power of attorney falling within the definition which we have quoted above. Clause (c) provides that when the document authorizes one person or more to act in a single transaction other than the case mentioned in clause (a) the proper stamp shall be one rupee. Clause (g) is a general provision for all such powers of attorney not provided for by other clauses.

Article 10, Schedule II, of the Court Fees Act provides for the stamping of mukhtar-namahs and vakalat-namahs. Clause (a) refers to a mukhtar-namah or vakalat-namah presented to any Civil or Criminal Court other than a High Court or to a Revenue Court or to any Collector or Magistrate or other Executive officer except such as are mentioned in clauses (b) and (c). Clause (b) provides for the same class of documents when presented to a Commissioner of Revenue, Circuit or Customs or to any officer charged with the executive administration of a division, not being the chief revenue or executive authority. Clause (c) provides for the same class of documents when presented to a High Court, Chief Commissioner, Board of Revenue or other chief controlling revenue or executive authority. It appears to us that all these documents are documents which it was intended to exclude from the definition of the expression power of attorney in section 2, clause (21) of the Stamp Act. It, therefore, seems to us that it is clear that the documents referred to in article 10, Schedule II, of the Court Fees Act are restricted to documents given to and presented by duly certificated mukhtars and pleaders under the Legal Practitioner's Act. We may point out that we are not deciding that the document in the present case, [490] if it was duly stamped, was sufficient to entitle the donee to execute or take steps to execute the decree in Cawnpore. Our decision relates only to the question whether or not the document was duly stamped. Assuming merely for the purpose of deciding the question before us that the document was sufficient if duly stamped, we hold that the document was not duly stamped, and that it ought to have been stamped with the stamp provided for by article 48, Schedule I, of the Stamp Act. We make no order as to costs.

The mistake was discovered and the attention of the arbitrator was drawn to [491] it. He accordingly made a supplementary award on the 11th of March, 1906, which was in fact an amendment of the first award. By that supplementary award he assigned to the lot of the plaintiff and his co-sharers the whole of the village Sherpur. The practical result of the two awards was this, that by the first award only a half share of the village Sherpur was assigned to lot No. 1, and by the second award the remaining half was also allotted to lot 1. On the 11th of April, 1905, the owners of lot No. 1 made an application to the court under section 525 of Act No. XIV of 1882 for the filing of both the awards. The court filed the first award and made a decree in accordance with it, but refused to file the supplementary award. Thereupon the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the plaintiff and he claimed in it a 5 biswas share in mauza Sherpur on the basis of the supplementary award —he and his co-sharers being admittedly in possession of a ten biswas share in the village.

The court of first instance (Second Additional Judge of Meerut) dismissed the suit as barred by res judicata owing to the refusal of the former court to file the supplementary award. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The facts are these:—The plaintiff and other parties had disputes about the partition of certain property which belonged to them. They prepared lots and appointed an arbitrator for the purpose of assigning the lots to the different persons interested. On the 17th December, 1904, an agreement of reference was drawn up and one Babu Ramanuj Dayal was appointed arbitrator. On the 23rd of December, 1904, lots were drawn and lot No. 1 fell to the share of the plaintiff and his co-sharers. One of the properties comprised in that lot was 20 biswas of the village Sherpur. No. 1, and, by the second award the remaining half was also alloted to lot No. 1. On the 11th of April, 1905, the owners of lot No. 1 made an application to the Court under section 525 of Act No. XIV of 1882 for the filing of both the awrds. The Court filed the first award and made a decree in accordance with it, but refused to file the supplementary award. Thereupon the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the plaintiff and he claimed in it a 5 biswas share in mauza Sherpur on the basis of the supplementary award—he and his co-sharers being admittedly in possession of a ten biswas share in the village.

There is no question that all the parties to the reference to arbitration intended that the plaintiff and his co-sharers should get the whole of the village Sherpur, and there is no question also that it was the intention of the arbitrator to award to the plaintiff the 5 biswas now claimed by him in addition to what he has already got. The Court below, however, has dismissed the suit on the ground that the decision of the Subordinate Judge refusing to file the supplementary award operates as res judicata. We are unable to agree with the learned Additional Judge. Having regard to the judgment of the Subordinate Judge in the case under section 525 of Act XIV of 1882, we must hold that the Court refused to file the supplementary award, by which, as we have pointed out above, an additional 10 biswas share in Sherpur was allotted to the share of the plaintiff and his co-sharers, the owners of lot No. 1. From this order of refusal no appeal lay as held in the case of Basant Lal v. Kunji Lal (1), in which the previous rulings on the subject were [493] cited. This view was adhered to in the recent case of Kunji Lal v. Durga Prasad (2). In the case last mentioned it was further held that a refusal of a Court to file an award will not operate as res judicata in respect of a subsequent suit brought to enforce the award. The same view was held in the case of Mustafa Khan v. Musammat Phuljha Bibi (3), which has not yet been reported. Having regard to these rulings the view taken by the Court below cannot be supported. There is no doubt as to the question of the plaintiff's title to the property claimed on the strength of the supplementary award. The result is that we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and decree the plaintiff's claim with costs in both Courts.

In a suit for ejectment in a Revenue Court the defendants denied the title of the plaintiff, and set up their own title as to part of the property and a jus tertii as to the rest. The Revenue Court elected to try the question of title itself, and found that the plaintiff had not established her proprietorship, and that decision became final.

Held, in a subsequent suit in the Civil Court for a delaration of title, that the decision of the Revenue Court, although it constituted a res judicata as between the plaintiff and the then defendants, could not amount to a res judicata as between the plaintiff and the third parties whose rights those defendants had set up.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—The plaintiff, on the 26th of September, 1906, sued the defendants, Bhagat Deo and Rabinath, father of Kinkin Deo, and Harbans Deo, in the court of an Assistant Collector of the first class for ejectment. The Assistant Collector held that the plaintiff was not the [494] proprietress of the village and dismissed the suit on the 8th of March, 1906. That decision became final. The plaintiff then brought the suit out of which this appeal arose in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mirzapur, for a declaration that she was the owner of the village Jamvanwan. She, in addition to Bhagat Deo and the sons of Rabinath, made six others defendants. One of the pleas raised by all the defendants was that the suit was barred by res judicata. The Court of first instance found that this was so and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed against all the defendants, and the learned District Judge, holding that it was not barred against defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 8 and 9, who were not parties to the suit of 1905, remanded the case under order XLI, rule 23. From the order of remand two appeals were preferred ; one by the plaintiff (No. 67 of 1910), in which the contention was that the doctrine of res judicata was no bar to the suit against Bhagat Deo and the sons of Rabinath, and the other (No. 42 of 1910) by other defendants, in which the contention was that the doctrine of res judicata barred the suit against them also.

Both appeals were heard by a Bench of three Judges. In F. A. f. O. No. 67 of 1910, this Bench, on the 7th of February, 1910, held that the suit against Bhagat Deo and the sons of Rabinath, was barred by the doctrine of res judicata.

Appeal No. 42 was then heard.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the appellants submitted that the plaintiff had no locus standi. The effect of the judgment in F. A. f. O. No. 67 of 1910 (1) is that the plaintiff has no title to the land and that some third persons are the proprietors. Explanation VI of section 11, Civil Procedure Code, governs the case. In the written statement the defendants in the Revenue Court said that the title was vested in themselves and in their brethren (biradaran). Caspersz on Estoppel, page 196 was referred to. The defendants in the former suit were claiming a title in common with the appellants. What they said was that the plaintiffs were not zamindars and they and some others were the real owners ; Chandu v. Kunhamed (2) [495] and Somasundara Mudali v. Kulandaivelu Pillai (3). There is nothing in the words of Explanation VI which prevents a defendant from setting up a claim in common with others.

themselves in their written statement deny that Rabinath and Bhagat Deo had any right to execute a kabuliat on their behalf. The judgment of the Revenue Court is not a judgment in rem and cannot operate as res judicata in the present suit.

BANERJI, J.—The facts of this case are set forth in our judgment in the connected appeal from order No. 67 of 1910, in which we held, in concurrence with the Court below, that the question of the title of the plaintiff respondent was res judicata. In consequence of our decision in that case the learned advocate for the appellants contends that we must be taken to have held that the plaintiff has no title to the property in suit and that, therefore, she is not entitled to maintain her claim against any of the defendants. I do not agree with this contention. We have not, in deciding the connected appeal, held that the plaintiff has no title. All that we have held is that the question of her title being res judicata against those defendants who were respondents to that appeal, the issue as to her title could not be tried as against those defendants. As the appellants were no parties to the suit in which the previous judgment was passed that judgment cannot operate as res judicata as between them and the plaintiff. This is conceded, but it is said that the title of the plaintiff being a part of her cause of action, she cannot set it up against the appellants, because it must be held that she has no title to the property in suit. As to this I may first observe that if she has no title as against some of the defendants, it does not follow that she has none against the other defendants also. In the next place, as I have pointed out above, it has not been decided in the suit that the plaintiff has no title. What has been decided is that in consequence of the decision in the former suit [496] she is precluded from setting up her title against those defendants who were defendants to that suit and that the issue as to her title cannot be determined as against those defendants. That, however, cannot bar the trial of the issue as against the defendants appellants who were not parties to the former suit, and the Court below was right in ordering a trial of that issue.

It is next urged that in view of Explanation VI to section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure the former judgment must be held to be res judicata. This contention is in my judgment, equally untenable. The parties to the former suit did not litigate in respect of "a private right claimed in common for themselves and others." The defendants to that suit set up their own right to a part of the property and also alleged that another part of the property belonged to the appellants to this appeal, but they did not assert any right which was common to all of them. In order that the explanation may be applicable, there must be community of interest, such as is referred to in order 1, rule 8. In the present case there was no community of interest. It is admitted that if in the former suit a decree had been passed in favour of the plaintiff, it would not have been binding on the appellants. Why then should it be binding because the suit was dismissed? In my judgment Explanation VI has no application to a case like this.

For the above reasons I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

KARAMAT HUSAIN, J.—The plaintiff, on the 26th of September, 1906 sued the defendants, Bhagat Deo and Rabinath, father of Kinkin Deo, and Harbans Deo, in the court of an Assistant Collector of the first class for ejectment. The Assistant Collector held that the plaintiff was not the proprietress of the village and dismissed the suit on the 8th of March, 1906. That decision became final.

The plaintiff then brought the suit out of which this appeal arose in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mirzapur, for a declaration that she was the owner of the village Jamvanwan. She, in addition to Bhagat Deo and the sons of Rabinath, made six others defendants. One of the pleas raised by all the defendants was that the suit was barred by res judicata.

[497] The Court of first instance found that it was so and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed against all the defendants, and the learned District Judge holding that it was not barred against defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 8 and 9, who were not parties to the suit of 1905, remanded the case under order XLI, rule 23. From the order of remand two appeals were preferred. One by the plaintiff (No. 67 of 1910) in which the contention was that the doctrine of res judicata was no bar to the suit against Bhagat Deo and the sons of Rabinath, and the other (No. 42 of 1910) by other defendants in which the contention was that the doctrine of res judicata barred the suit against them also.

Both appeals were heard by a Bench of three Judges. In F. A. f. O. No. 67 of 1910, this Bench, on the 7th of February, 1910, held that the suit against Bhagat Deo and the sons of Rabinath, was barred by the doctrine of res judicata.

After the delivery of judgment in F. A. f. O. No. 67 of 1910, F. A. f. O. No. 42 of 1910 was heard. The learned advocate for the appellants admitted that res judicata did not apply as the parties were not the same. He, however, pressed (1) that our decision in F. A. f. O. No. 67 of 1910, that the plaintiff was not the proprietress of Jamanwan, so far as Bhagat Deo and the sons of Rabinath were concerned, being in the one and the same suit must be deemed to be decision that she was not its proprietress against the appellants as well, for in the one and the same suit a plaintiff cannot be held to have no proprietary title against some of the defendants and to have it against the rest; (2) that Explanation VI of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code applied to the case, and (3) that the appellants could plead a jus tertii and say that the ownership of the village in dispute belonged to other defendants and not to the plaintiff.

A fallacy lurks in the first contention and is the result of non-appreciation of the nature of the doctrine of res judicata. The doctrine with certain limitations prohibits a court of justice from deciding in a subsequent suit an issue which has been decided in a previous suit. When a Court with reference to an issue involved in a subsequent suit is of opinion that res judicata bars the trial of that issue, it refrains from deciding that issue [498] To call this action of the Court a decision of that issue in the subsequent suit is a misnomer and can in no way deprive it of the power of deciding that issue between the plaintiff and the rest of the defendants. It must be noticed that our judgment in F. A. f. O. No. 67 of 1910 is a judgment in personam and not a judgment in rem. So far, therefore, as the parties to the present case are concerned, it is res inter alios judicata and cannot bind them. The above principle is embodied in section 43 of the Indian Evidence Act (No. I of 1872) which is as follows:—" Judgments, orders or decrees other than those mentioned in sections 40, 41 and 42 are irrelevant, unless the existence of such judgments, orders or decrees is a fact in issue or is relevant under some other provision of this Act." There are no words in the section to indicate that a judgment, order or decree, for the purpose of being irrelevant must be in another suit. The words are wide enough to include a judgment, order or decree in the one and the same suit if the parties are different. A, a plaintiff, in the one and the same suit, may be held to be the owner of a village against B but not against C. Had the appellants in the case before us admitted that the plaintiff was the proprietress of the village, the Court would have been bound to declare her to be the owner of the village as against the appellants and to be no owner as against the others, and this would have been done in the one and the same suit.

The fallacy becomes clear if we suppose that the suit of 1905, instead of being dismissed, was decreed against Bhagat Deo and Rabinath and the plaintiff was held to be the owner of the village. In such case the court in F. A. f. O. No. 67 of 1910 would have come to the conclusion that, as the plaintiff had been found to be the owner of the village against Bhagat Deo and Rabinath, the retrial of her title against them was barred by the doctrine of res judicata. Could such a conclusion have entitled the plaintiff to contend that the court must hold her to be the owner of the village without giving the appellants an opportunity to prove otherwise, for a court in the one and the same suit could not hold that the one and the same plaintiff was the owner of the village against some defendants but not against the rest?

[499] Such a contention would have been deemed ridiculous, and the mere fact that it was raised in a converse case could not alter its nature.

As a matter of procedure the appellants in F. A. f. O. No. 42 of 1910 can rely upon our decree in F. A. f. O. No. 67 of 1910, as a piece of documentary evidence and cannot call it in aid of their case in any other way. It therefore follows that unless their case is tried and the question that the plaintiff has no title against them is decided, they can be entitled to no decree. They, however, ask us to take what they think ought to be decided in their favour to have already been so decided. This cannot be done, and the learned advocate has not referred us to any principle or precedent that might support him.

Explanation VI, section 11, Civil Procedure Code, has no application to the case before us. In the suit of 1905, in the court of the Assistant Collector of the first class, no private right was claimed by Bhagat Deo and Rabinath in common for themselves and the appellants in F. A. f. O. No. 42 of 1910, and therefore the appellants before us could not be deemed to be claiming under Bhagat and Rabinath. There is no substance in the plea of jus tertii. The effect of that plea, when permitted to be raised, is that the plaintiff is called upon to prove a better title. That plea does not shut out the plaintiff from proving a better title nor debar the court from deciding the question of title.

For the above reasons I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

KNOX, J.—I agree with my learned brothers in holding that the judgment in F.A. f. O. No. 67 of 1910 cannot operate as res judicata in bar of the suit out of which this appeal arises. The present appellants were no parties to the suit in which the judgment first named was passed. Explanation VI of section 11 of Act No. V of 1908, which the learned advocate for the appellants would have us apply, will not help the case. In the previous suit the right claimed was not a private right claimed by the parties to that suit in common for themselves and others. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JOHN HENRY RHINE (Respondent) v. MABEL RHINE (Petitioner) AND JOHN HENRY RHINE (Petitioner) v. MABEL RHINE (Respondent).*

[23rd February, 1911.]

Act No. IV of 1869 (Indian Divorce Act), section 23—Discretion of court—Petitioner's adultery a ground for refusing a decree for judicial separation.

Where the petitioner (the wife) in a suit for divorce in the alternative for a judicial separation was found to have herself committed adultery, to which the conduct of the respondent had in no way conduced, it was held that this was a good ground for the refusal of a decree for judicial separation. Otway v. Otway (1) followed. Constantinidi v. Constantiniai (2) distinguished.

These were two appeals arising out of cross petitions under the Indian Divorce Act, 1869. The facts out of which they arose were as follows:—

The appellant, John Henry Rhine, an engine driver on the North-Western Railway, was married to the respondent, Mabel Rhine, in the Central Provinces, in the year 1897. The last residence of the parties was at Saharanpur. There has been no issue of the marriage. Mrs. Rhine left her husband in April, 1909, and went to her brother in the Punjab. She, on the 28th of May, 1909, instituted a suit in Lahore against her husband for dissolution of their marriage, or in the alternative for judicial separation. The plaint in this suit was returned to her to be filed in the proper court, the court at Lahore not having jurisdiction in the matter, and accordingly the plaint was filed in the court of the District Judge of Saharanpur, on the 30th of July, 1909. Meantime, Rhine filed a petition for divorce on the 22nd of July, 1909, on the ground of his wife's adultery with the co-respondent, Leonard A. Green, also an engine driver on the North-Western Railway.

By the agreement of the parties the two suits were heard together and one judgment was delivered in both suits. Mrs. Rhine alleged in her petition various acts of cruelty on the part of her husband and charged him with having committed at [501] various places carnal intercouse with her against the order of nature, forcibly and against her consent. The adultery of Mrs. Rhine with the co-respondent Green was established to the satisfaction of the learned District Judge, and his finding is not now in controversy. He also found that the misconduct of Rhine, alleged by his wife, was established by the evidence and dismissed Rhine's petition for dissolution of marriage, as also Mrs. Rhine's petition for dissolution of marriage, but he granted Mrs. Rhine's prayer for judicial separation.

The husband appealed.

Mr. C. Ross Alston, for the appellant.

No one appeared for the respondent.

an engine driver on the North-Western Railway, was married to the respondent, Mabel Rhine, in the Central Provinces, in the year 1897. The last residence of the parties was at Saharanpur. By the agreement of the parties the two suits were heard together and one judgment was delivered in both suits. Mrs. Rhine alleged in her petition various acts of cruelty on the part of her husband and charged him with having committed at various places carnal intercourse with her against the order of nature, forcibly and against her consent. The adultery of Mrs. Rhine with the co-respondent Green was established to the satisfaction of the learned District Judge, and his finding is not [502] now in controversy. He also found that the misconduct of Rhine alleged by his wife was established by the evidence and dismissed Rhine's petition for dissolution of marriage as also Mrs. Rhine's petition for dissolution of marriage, but he granted Mrs. Rhine's prayer for judicial separation. In his judgment he remarks :—

"I have found that Rhine has been guilty of conduct which is not only criminal but which constitutes a high degree of cruelty of a most abominable kind, and I do not think that the idea can be tolerated that the wife should be obliged to live with her husband under such circumstances."

The present appeals were then preferred by the husband, and the grounds of appeal are that the evidence on the record did not justify the finding that the respondent was guilty of the criminal offence charged against him ; and that a decree for judicial separation ought not to have been passed having regard to the fact that Mrs. Rhine was proved to have been guilty of adultery, and further that a decree for dissolution of the marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery ought to have been passed in his favour. Mrs. Rhine does not resist the appeal and no one appears for her.

As to the observation of the learned District Judge that he did not think that the idea could be tolerated that the wife should be obliged to live with her husband under the circumstances of this case, I may observe that it does not necessarily follow if a decree for judicial separation be refused that she will be obliged to live with her husband. If he seeks restitution of conjugal rights it will be for the Court before which the case comes to say whether under the circumstances a decree should be passed in his favour.

The first question then for determination is whether or not the evidence satisfactorily establishes that the appellant Rhine was guilty of the misconduct charged against him. Mrs. Rhine gave evidence in support of her case and this evidence was corroborated by the evidence of Mrs. Tilbury, who is a diplomaed midwife and also by a Mrs. Burrowes. The former was called in on one occasion by Mrs. Burrowes to treat Mrs. Rhine, after she had been subjected, as she alleged, to the cruel treatment complained of. Mrs. Tilbury stated that she found Mrs. Rhine in [503] a condition indicating that the offence complained of had been committed, and that she had been treating her for the injuries sustained by her which she detailed. She further stated that for the same reason she was called in once or twice after this. Mrs. Burrowes, who was next door neighbour to Mrs. Rhine, stated that Mrs. Rhine often told her that her husband treated her unnaturally, and beat her because she would not submit to his ill-treatment. The learned District Judge believed these witnesses. He observes:—"I feel sure that these two ladies have not invented the incident which they relate. Their evidence was given in a simple, straightforward way and with the air of persons relating what they had actually seen." The learned Judge had better means of estimating the credit to be attached to the evidence than we possess. He came to the conclusion that the evidence of Mrs. Rhine and her witnesses was reliable. Against it there was the denial of Rhine himself. But there is on the record a most compromising letter which was addressed by him on the 11th of May, 1909, to a Mrs. Miller whom he addresses as his "dearest sister," and who, it is stated, lived with his brother-in-law, but was not married to him. In this letter he complains of his wife, and we find in it these statements: "whenever Mrs. Rhine has left home, or had any words with me, she always flies back to an old story of telling people that I committed the sin of sodomy. This originated through some friends of her at Sukkur, about 8 years ago. If I was guilty of such an action, why was not immediate action taken against me. I say to you, dear sister, under the circumstances of this accusation I am innocent. Any how she tries to tell this story of 8 years old to excite people's sympathy for her and hatred for me. Admitting for argument's sake this to be true, I'm a man after all, but for any woman to tell such a story year after year and disclose some of the bedroom secrets of our home, and when disclosed and known by the male people what would you think of such a woman." There is this further passage in the letter:—"I give you the assurance, my dear sister, that I am a reformed man and unblamable in every way." This does not appear to me to be the letter of an innocent man. Such a charge as was made against him would ordinarily be met by an indig-[504] nant denial, but in this case there is at most a qualified denial. He says:—"Under the circumstances of this accusation I am innocent." Then admitting for argument's sake the charge to be true he observes:—"I'm a man after all." This suggests that he excused himself on the ground that passion and lust got the better of him. He admits that there were 'bedroom secrets' which ought not to have been disclosed and that his wife had made the charge of misconduct against him long anterior to the divorce proceedings. Whatever be the full weight to be attached to this letter, it appears to me that it furnishes corroboration of the evidence of Mrs. Rhine and her witnesses. I am wholly unable under the circumstances to come to the conclusion that the Court below was wrong in regarding the charge made by Mrs. Rhine as proved. I also agree in the view taken by the Court below that as neither of the parties came into Court with clean hands, neither of them was entitled to a decree for dissolution of marriage.

It only remains to consider whether under the circumstances the Court below ought to have granted a judicial separation. It is only under exceptional circumstances that the Court will grant a decree for judicial separation to a petitioner who has been guilty of adultery. Section 23 of the Indian Divorce Act prescribes that in an application for judicial separation the court on being satisfied of the truth of the statements made in the petition and that there is no legal ground why the application should not be granted may decree judicial separation. This section closely corresponds with section 17 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 20 and 21 Victoria, Chapter 85 as amended by 21 and 22 Victoria, Chapter 108, section 19. The Act does not define the legal grounds which justify the court in refusing to grant a decree to a petitioner for judicial separation. In the case of Otway v. Otway (1), it was held by the Court of Appeal in England that a judicial separation can only be granted where the petitioner comes to court with a pure character and is free from all matrimonial misconduct. In that case a husband and wife had both been found guilty of adultery, and the husband had also been found guilty of aggravated cruelty. It was held by the Court of [505] Appeal reversing the decision of BUTT, J., that the court had no jurisdiction to make a decree for judicial separation on the ground of such cruelty, however aggravated its character might be. COTTON, L. J., laid down the following as the true principle which should guide a court in a case of the kind. He observed :—"In my opinion the true principle is this, that a wife having been guilty of adultery has put herself in such a position that she cannot be considered as an innocent party in any proceedings which might have been taken in the old Ecclesiastical Courts, or which might now be taken in the Court of Divorce, and therefore on that ground she is not in a position to come to that court to give her any relief as to any matrimonial offence which the husband may have committed, or to put it on the ground of compensation, for a crime of the same nature." FRY, L. J., in the course of his judgment remarked :—"The case is one which it appears to me ought to be considered with great care, because it is impossible not to feel a strong sense of repulsion at continuing the marriage tie between an adulterous man and an adulterous woman, where the man has been guilty of cruelty of the description of which the respondent in this case has been guilty." He states his conclusion as follows :—"The conclusion I have arrived at is that the principles which formerly governed the old Ecclesiastical Courts ought to prevail now, one of which is not to pronounce a decree for a divorce a mensa et thoro in favour of an adulteress." LOPES, L.J., in his judgment observes: —"Now the authorities seem to me clearly to lay down that if a wife sued her husband for adultery and had herself been guilty of adultery, she was not entitled to any relief. That doctrine applies in this case unless it can be maintained that the fact of the husband having been found guilty of cruelty as well as adultery, entitles the wife to relief, when but for the cruelty she would have had no locus standi. I can find no authority for this proposition, and it is opposed to what I believe to be the principles on which the Ecclesiastical Courts have acted in granting decrees for a divorce a mensa et thoro viz. that a wife or husband seeking such relief must come to the court with a pure character and must be free from any matrimonial misconduct."

[506] To this ruling great weight necessarily attaches. It is no doubt true that in the later case of Constantinidi v. Constantinidi (2), JEUNE, P., granted a decree for dissolution of marriage in a case in which both the petitioner and respondent had been guilty of adultery. In that case it was held that, although the discretion conferred by section 31 of Act 20 and 21 Victoria, Chapter 85, is a judicial and not an arbitrary discretion, the causes for and circumstances under which the court may exercise its discretion in favour of a guilty petitioner are to be taken in combination and according to their several degrees of force and also that the list of such causes is not a closed book and may be extended as occasion arises. The learned President in the course of his judgment, in treating of the principles which should guide the court in a matter of the kind, observes:—"I think, therefore, one can find guidance only by reference to the general principles of justice, and no principles of justice in regard to this matter seem to me clearer than these: first, that the petitioner who has been convicted of adultery should not be allowed to obtain a divorce, if such adultery, in any serious degree, contributed to the misconduct of the respondent; and secondly, that a respondent should not be allowed to avoid the consequences of proved misconduct by putting forward or acts of misconduct on the part of the petitioner for which the respondent was himself or herself in any serious degree responsible. To hold otherwise would be to allow a wrong-doer to profit by wrong doing. I have no doubt that the Legislature intended that the Court should act on these principles whether or no it intended that the court should act on any other principles." Finding in that case that the respondent's conduct conduced to the adultery committed by the petitioner, the learned President granted a decree nisi. This was a very different case from the one now before us. In this case Mrs. Rhine has been found guilty of deliberate adultery. It cannot rightly be said that her husband conduced to the adultery. The principle laid down in Otway v. Otway should, therefore, I think, be applied to this case, and accordingly applying it I would hold that, coming into court as she does with unclean hands, Mrs. Rhine is not entitled to any relief. I would, therefore, in [507] the circumstances of this case, set aside the decree of the Court below for a judicial separation and in other respects affirm the decree of that Court.

GRIFFIN, J.—I concur.

TUDBALL, J.—I concur.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the decree of the Court below in so far as it granted the petition of Mrs. Rhine for judicial separation be set aside, and that her petition be dismissed in toto. In other respects the decree will stand affirmed, but without costs as no one appears on the part of the respondent.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

One Duli Chand, now represented by the appellants, brought a suit for possession of certain agricultural lands. It appears that the parties were co-sharers in certain zamindari, and under an arbitration award the zamindari was partitioned. The lands in question fell to the share of Duli Chand. He brought a suit in the Civil Court for proprietary possession of those lands and for ejectment of the defendant. The Subordinate Judge, in whose court the suit was instituted, by his decree, dated the 10th of [508] November, 1902, granted to Duli Chand a decree for proprietary possession of the land. An appeal by the defendant was dismissed, and Duli Chand got possession. The defendant then brought a suit in the Revenue Court under section 79 of the Tenancy Act, and his suit was decreed. Whereupon the present suit was brought. The suit was decreed by the first court (Additional Subordinate Judge of Meerut), but was dismissed on appeal by the District Judge. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the appellants.

Pandit Baldev Ram Dave (for The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal), for the respondent.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by Duli Chand, now represented by the appellants, for possession of certain agricultural lands. It appears that the parties were co-sharers in certain zamindari, and under an arbitration award the zamindari was partitioned. The lands in question fell to the share of Duli Chand. He brought a suit in the Civil Court for proprietary possession of those lands and for ejectment of the defendant. The Subordinate Judge in whose court the suit was instituted, by his decree, dated the 10th of November, 1902, granted to Duli Chand a decree for proprietary possession of the land. The defendant appealed to the District Judge and contended that the land had been his sir land before partition, that he had acquired the rights of an ex-proprietary tenant in regard to it and that he could not be ejected from it by a decree of the Civil Court. The learned Judge was of opinion that the decree of the first court only granted to the plaintiff proprietary possession of the land, and that it could not be determined in that suit whether the defendant had acquired the rights of an ex-proprietary tenant. The learned Judge observed, however, in his judgment that, as there was an exchange between co-sharers, the defendant could not under any circumstances claim the rights of an ex-proprietary tenant. This view of the learned Judge was in our opinion right. By section 10 of the Tenancy Act where there is a transfer by private alienation no rights of ex-proprietary tenants accrue if the alienation is by gift or by exchange between co-sharers. Here there was [509] evidently an exchange between co-sharers, and therefore, under the provisions of section 10, no rights could accrue to the defendant, as an exproprietary tenant in respect of land held by him as sir. Holding the view which we have mentioned above, the learned Judge dismissed the appeal of the defendant. The decree obtained by Duli Chand was put into execution and he obtained possession of the property. It is admitted that he took actual possession of it ; whether he obtained it by execution of the decree or subsequently is immaterial. The defendant on being dispossessed brought a suit in the Revenue Court under section 79 of the Tenancy Act for recovery of possession alleging himself to be the ex-proprietary tenant of the land. His suit was decreed. Hence the present claim for possession.

The court of first instance decreed the claim, but the lower appellate court dismissed it, holding that the decision of the Civil Court in the former suit brought by the plaintiff operated as res judicata. This view of the learned Judge is, in our opinion, erroneous, and the learned vakil for the respondent has not tried to support it. In the former suit, as we have pointed out above, the appellate court clearly abstained from determining whether defendant was liable or not to be ejected from the land. Therefore the decision in the previous suit cannot operate as res judicata in this case.

As, however, the suit related to agricultural land and the defendant pleaded that he held such land as the tenant of the plaintiff, section 202 of the Agra Tenancy Act applied and the court in which the suit was brought was bound to require the defendant by order in writing to institute within three months a suit in the Revenue Court for the determination of the question whether defendant was the plaintiff's tenant or not. This the court of the first instance did not do.

Mr. Baldev Ram, for the respondent, contends that the decision of the Revenue Court in the suit brought by the defendant to recover possession is res judicata between the parties, and the procedure laid down by section 202 need not be adopted. We express no opinion on the question whether when a suit is brought in the Revenue Court by the defendant in accordance with the provisions of section 202, the decision in a former suit [510] brought in the Revenue Court would or would not have the effect of res judicata. We think the court of first instance was bound to follow the procedure laid down in section 202, and this must now be done. We accordingly discharge the decrees of both the courts below and remand the case to the court of first instance with directions to re-admit the suit under its original number in the register and adopt the procedure laid down in section 202 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The appellant will have the costs of this appeal. All other costs will follow the event.

The appellants then applied in revision to the High Court.

Mr. G. P. Boys, for the applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate (Mr. R. Malcomson), for the Crown.

TUDBALL, J.—This is an application in revision against the decision of the Sessions Judge of Benares, made on the 12th of December, 1910. The applicants were tried by a Magistrate of [511] the first class; convicted of an offence under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to a day's simple imprisonment each and also to a fine of Rs. 50 each, and in default of payment of fine they were to suffer a month's further imprisonment. In addition to this they were bound over to keep the peace. The learned Sessions Judge has held that, though the applicants were sentenced to one day's imprisonment, as a matter of fact they were neither sent to jail nor were they actually imprisoned, and that therefore there has been no such combination of the two classes of punishments mentioned in section 413 as is contemplated by the terms of section 415 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Section 308 of the Code distinctly lays down that any person convicted on a trial held by a Magistrate of the first class may appeal to the Court of Session. Section 413 is an exception to the general rule laid down in section 408. It is laid down in that section that "notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained there shall be no appeal by a convicted person in cases in which a Magistrate of the first class passes a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month only 'or' fine not exceeding fifty rupees only, 'or' whipping only." It is quite clear that the present case does not fall within the exceptions set forth in section 413. Section 415 is explanatory, and apparently was entered in the Code to remove all possible doubts which might arise in the cases considered therein. It clearly lays down that an appeal may be brought against any sentence referred to in section 413 in which any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned are combined. It is quite clear that in the present case there has been a combination of the sentences of imprisonment and fine. It is immaterial for the purposes of that section whether the applicants actually suffered imprisonmment in jail or not. The learned Sessions Judge is clearly wrong in the view whch he has taken. I set aside his order. The appeal lies to his Court. He must hear and decide it according to law.

One of the parties to a civil suit applied for sanction to prosecute the plaintiff, on the ground that he had instituted a false claim. The Munsif dismissed the application on technical grounds. The applicant applied to the District Judge under section 195 (6) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Judge remanded the case to the Munsif for trial of the application. Held, that the powers of revision exercisable by the District Judge were confined to those conferred by section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, and he had no jurisdiction to make the order of remand.

THE facts of this case were briefly as follows :—

One Sarju Prasad, who was a party to certain proceedings in a Munsif's Court, applied to the Munsif for sanction under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to prosecute the applicants under section 209 of the Indian Penal Code. This application was rejected upon more or less technical grounds, and a further application for its re-hearing was also rejected. Sarju Prasad then went to the District Judge under section 195 (6) of the Code of Criminal Procedure who passed an order remanding the matter to the Munsif for trial on the merits. Against this order the applicants applied in revision to the High Court, under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

Mr. C. C. Dillon, for the applicants.

Babu Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the opposite party.

RICHARDS, J.—This is an application in revision. It appears that on the 31st March, 1910, the applicants obtained a compromise decree in the Munsif's Court. The suit in which this decree was granted was conversant with a claim by the applicants on two bonds, and the matter resulted in a compromise and a decree in accordance with that compromise. On the 28th September, 1910, that is to say, six months after, the opposite party applied for sanction under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to institute a prosecution under section 209 of the Indian [513] Penal Code, against the applicants, for having fraudulently or dishonestly or with intent to injure or annoy the opposite party, made a false claim. This application was made to the Munsif, who threw out the application on grounds more or less technical. On the 1st of October 1910, an application for the restoration of the application for sanction was made by the same party, and this was also thrown out. Thereupon the opposite party applied under clause (6) of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that the sanction, which was refused by the Munsif, might be granted by the District Judge. The District Judge, on the 20th January 1911, made an order in the following terms :

"I set aside these refusals and remand the case to the Munsif of Bansgaon with directions to apply his mind to the facts and come to a decision—(a) whether any criminal offence has been committed.; (b) whether, if so, it is necessary in the interests of justice that there should be a prosecution; (c) if so, whether it is advisable to grant the sanction applied for or whether action under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure would be a better course. It is because section 476 can be made use of by the Munsif and cannot by myself, that I do not decide the question in this Court."

It is contended on behalf of the applicants that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order. It must be admitted that the powers of the learned District Judge, so far as the present application is concerned, are confined to the powers conferred on him by section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Clause (6) provides that "any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate," and the learned District Judge has neither revoked nor granted the sanction. His order, amongst other things, directs the Munsif to consider whether or not the latter should exercise the powers conferred on him by section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure—powers which the learned Judge admits that he himself has not got to exercise in the present case. Mr. Satya Chandra, on behalf of the respondent, relies on the Full Bench ruling of this Court, which decides that a Court exercising the powers conferred by section 195 is a Civil Court and not a Criminal Court, and that therefore the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure enabling the Appellate Court to remand cases and send down issues apply. I am of course bound [514] by the ruling in the Full Bench case referred to, but in my opinion even assuming the Court to be a Civil Court, its powers in cases like the present are confined to powers conferred on it by section 195. In my opinion the learned District Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order in the present case. In any event after the parties had compromised, I hardly think it was a case for sanction. I therefore allow this application and set aside the order of the District Judge, dated the 20th January, 1911.

Application allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code, sections 188, 227—Offence committed in Nepal territory—Certificate granted by political officer specifying a particular section of the Indian Penal Code—Trying Magistrate not debarred from convicting under another section if within the facts stated.

A certificate granted by a political officer under section 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in respect of a certain set of facts will cover every charge which the facts disclosed in the proceedings will suffice to sustain. The certificate is granted on the allegation of certain facts which constitute the charge against the accused, and the trying Magistrate is not restricted to the section which is mentioned in the certificate, but at the utmost to the facts.

THIS was an application for revision of an order passed by a Magistrate of the first class, convicting the applicant under section 355, read with section 109 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentencing him to a fine of Rs. 30. Part of the facts which led to the applicant being arrested and charged occurred in Nepal, and the question raised in the present case was whether on a proper construction of the certificate granted under section 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the resident of Nepal, which mentioned only section 363 of the Indian Penal Code, the applicant could under the circumstances be tried by a Magistrate in British India under a different section. The facts of the case are fully set forth in the order of the Court.

Babu Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the applicant.

[515] The Assistant Government Advocate (Mr. R. Malcomson), for the Crown.

TUDBALL, J.—One Kheru Lal, Bania, made a complaint against the applicant Krishna Nath Tiwari and certain other persons to the effect that he had been seized by the servants of Krishna Nath Tiwari in the village of Bhagwanpur, which is in British territory, and had been conveyed by them across the border to the village Bairibwa in Nepal territory, where, after he had been placed before Krishna Nath Tiwari, the latter ordered his servants to shoe-beat him. Krishna Nath Tiwari is a British subject, but in recent years has taken up his residence in the above mentioned village across the Nepal territory. According to Kheru Lal, the complainant, the kidnapping was aided and abetted by the accused Krishna Nath Tiwari. It will be seen that part of the transaction took place in British territory and part within Nepal territory. An application was made to the political officer in Nepal, who granted a certificate under section 188, Criminal Procedure Code, to the effect that the charge under section 363, Indian Penal Code, against Krishna Nath Tiwari, was one which ought to be inquired into in British India. The Magistrate who has tried the case, found that Kheru Lal was kidnapped as stated, held that there was nothing to show that that had been done with the knowledge and sanction of Krishna Nath Tiwari. He therefore acquitted him of the offence under section 363, read with section 109, Indian Penal Code. He found it proved that when Kheru Lal was placed before Krishna Nath Tiwari, the latter, as a matter of fact, had the man shoe-beaten. He therefore convicted him of the offence under section 355, read with section 109, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced him to a fine of Rs. 30. Krishna Nath Tiwari has now come in revision to this Court, and it is urged that inasmuch as the certificate granted by the resident in Nepal relates only to the offence under section 363 of the Code, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to convict the accused of an offence under section 355, Indian Penal Code, which is not mentioned in the certificate. It is quite clear that the offence of kidnapping was committed within British India, and that really in respect to that offence no certificate was necessary. But, as in the course of the transaction of which [516] complaint was made, the applicant had committed an offence under section 355, Indian Penal Code, a certificate was certainly necessary, as he was a British subject who had committed the offence in the territory of a Native Prince. The facts disclosed in the complaint and in the proceedings which led up to the grant of the certificate clearly disclosed the offence of which the applicant has been convicted. It is true that the charge was one which was entered as an offence under section 363. But it seems to me quite clear that the certificate granted under section 188 was only necessary to enable the whole matter to be inquired into in British India. In my opinion it cannot prevent the Court making the inquiry or conducting the trial from taking action under section 227 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The mere circumstance that the offence under section 363 alone was entered in the certificate does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that that certificate was granted for the purpose of a trial only on that charge and not in respect to any other offence disclosed by the facts proved. In my opinion the certificate granted under section 188 in respect to a certain set of facts will cover every charge which the facts disclosed in the proceedings will suffice to sustain. In my opinion there is no force in the contention of the applicant. The certificate is granted on the allegation of certain facts which constitute the charge against the accused and the Magistrate is not restricted to the section which is mentioned in the certificate, but at the utmost to the facts. The conviction under section 355, read with section 109, Indian Penal Code, is perfectly legal. The application is, therefore, dismissed.

Before Sir John Stanley, Knight, Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Banerji and Mr. Justice Griffin.

[3rd March, 1911.]

Civil Procedure Code (1882), sections 230, 235—Execution of decree—Limitation—Application for execution whether a fresh application or merely a continuance of a subsisting application.

The subsequent application to execute the same decree mentioned in section 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, means a substantive application for execution in the form prescribed by section 235 of the Code.

Hence, where an application for execution in accordance with section 235 of the Code has been made within the period of limitation prescribed by section 230 and has been granted, that is, execution has been ordered in accordance with the prayer of the decree-holder's application, the right of the decree-holder to obtain execution will not necessarily be defeated, if, by reason of objections on the part of the judgment-debtor or action taken by the court or other cause for which the decree-holder is not responsible, final completion of the proceedings in execution initiated by the application under section 235 cannot be obtained within the period limited by section 230. Further applications of the decree-holder to the court executing the decree to go on from the point where the execution proceedings had been arrested and complete execution of his decree would be applications merely ancillary to the substantive application under section 235 and would not be obnoxious to the bar of section 230. Rahim Ali Khan v. Phul Chand (1) followed.

[Ref : 64 I. C. 849=35 C. L. J. 135.]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

In a suit for possession on a mortgage and for mesne profits a decree was obtained on the 15th of September, 1893. Application for execution was made on the 3rd of June, 1905. The Court struck off this application of its own motion on the 27th of September, 1905. An application for re-admission of that application was made on the 13th of August, 1906, and the application was re-admitted on the 15th of September, 1906. It was again struck off for non-payment of process fee on the 13th of November, 1907. On the 3rd of December, 1907, an application was made for restoration of the case, and, after sufficient cause being shown, it was again restored on the 14th of December, 1907.

[518] Objections were filed by the judgment-debtor, the main ground being that the decree was barred by 12 years' limitation. The first court disallowed the objection, but the lower appellate court reversed the decree and held the application to be barred. On appeal to the High Court, PIGGOTT, J., upheld that decision in the following judgment:—

"This is a decree-holder's appeal. The decree is dated the 15th of September, 1893. It was admittedly still alive when, on the 3rd of June 1905, an application for execution was made. After giving rise to sundry proceedings in consequence of objections raised by the judgment-debtors, the application was finally dismissed on the 13th of November, 1907, for non-payment of process fees by the decree-holder. On the 3rd of December, 1907, the decree-holder applied that the application of the 3rd of June, 1905, might be restored and taken up again. He obtained an order restoring the said application to the file of the court on the 14th of December, 1907 and after this certain proceedings in execution were taken. The judgment-debtors object that these proceedings are all barred by section 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). The case appears to be exactly covered by the ruling of this Court in Ram Newaz v. Ram Charan (1). I do not see that this case has been overruled either in Rahim Ali Khan v. Phul Chand (2) or in Mujibullah v. Umed Koer (3). The prohibition in section 230 of Act XIV of 1882 is directed to the granting of an application after the prescribed period of 12 years. I have been through the order sheet in this case, and I cannot find that in consequence of the application of the 3rd December, 1907, the Court was asked to take proceedings against any property already under attachment, or otherwise to take any steps in continuation of any proceedings initiated under the application of the 3rd of June, 1905. I accordingly concur in the view of the case taken by learned District Judge. I dismiss the appeal with costs."

The decree-holder appealed under section 10 of the Letters Patent, and the case was subsequently referred to a Full Bench.

Munshi Govind Prasad, for the appellant, submitted that the application was within time, inasmuch as the order of the 14th of December, 1907, continued the application of the 3rd of June, 1905. He cited Rahim Ali Khan v. Phul Chand (2).

Babu Sital Prasad Ghose, for the respondent, urged that the Court had no statutory authority to make the order of the 14th of December, 1907. The lower court did not treat the application before it as one for review of judgment; but it was a fresh application. It could not be one for review of judgment as there was no judgment to review. An order striking off an [519] application is not a judgment within the meaning of section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. He relied on Ram Newaz v. Ram Charan (1), which had not been dissented from in the Full Bench case in 18 All. 482.

STANLEY, C. J.—This appeal arises out of proceedings taken in execution of a decree under section 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. The decree is dated the 15th of September, 1893, and was a decree for possession of immoveable property and for mesne profits. On the 3rd of June, 1905, the decree-holder applied for execution of his decree. On the 27th of September, 1905, the application was struck off by the court on its own motion. Consequent on this an application for the re-admission of the application was made on the 30th of August, 1906, and on the 15th of September, 1907, the application was re-admitted. On the 13th of November, 1907, the application was again struck off on the ground that insufficient process fee had been deposited by the decree-holder. He, on the 3rd of December, 1907, applied to the court for restoration of the application, setting out the circumstances under which he failed to pay the requisite amount of process fee. The court was satisfied with his explanation, and accordingly, on the 14th of December, 1907, restored the application to the file. This application, it is to be noted, was not in the nature of a fresh application for execution. It was simply an application for restoration of the previous application of 1905, and rightly or wrongly the court revised its previous order and passed the order for restoration. In proceedings in execution taken on the application of the 3rd of June, 1905, which had been so restored, objection was taken by the judgment-debtor that the proceedings were barred by limitation, the application of the 3rd of December, 1907, having been made after the lapse of twelve years from the date of the decree. The court of first instance held that limitation did not bar the proceedings, but the decision of this court was reversed on appeal and the appellate court's decree was affirmed by a learned Judge of this Court in second appeal. Hence this appeal under the Letters Patent.

[520] The contention on behalf of the appellant is that the order of the 14th of December, 1907, had the effect of restoring the prior application of the 3rd of June, 1905, and was not a fresh application for execution either in form or substance. It appears to me that this contention is well founded. It was open to the court to review the order which it had passed striking off the application for non-payment of a sufficient process fee : it was open to the court to reinstate this application. I am unable to find any substantial difference in the facts of this case from those which were the subject of consideration by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Rahim Ali Khan v. Phul Chand (1). In that case it was held that the subsequent application to execute the same decree mentioned in section 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure means a substantive application for execution in the form prescribed by section 235 of the Code ; hence that where an application for execution in accordance with section 235 of the Code has been made within the period of limitation prescribed by section 230 and has been granted, that is, execution has been ordered in accordance with the prayer of the decree-holder's application, the right of the decree-holder to obtain execution will not necessarily be defeated, if by reason of objections on the part of the judgment-debtor, or action taken by the court, or other causes for which the decree-holder is not responsible, final completion of the proceedings in execution initiated by the application under section 235 cannot be obtained within the period limited by section 230. In the judgment of my brother KNOX I find this passage, in which I entirely concur. Referring to section 235 of the Code he observes :—" That section lays down in great detail the form which an application to execute a decree must take, the matters which it must contain, and the mode in which the court is asked to grant its assistance. Section 245 requires that such applications shall on receipt be examined, and, if found in accordance with the law, admitted, on a register. The court is after such admission to order execution of the decree according to the nature of [521] the application. So long as that order or any further order according to the nature of the application is in progress, provided it be an order which has been evolved from the application so registered, I would hold that the application for execution is in progress.

If from some obstacle imposed by the judgment-debtor, or by the Court, that obstacle not being a final determination of the application, the progress of the order, or subsequent orders, to maturity is delayed and such obstacle is removed by an application of the decree-holder, I do not consider such latter application, unless it expressly takes the form of a new application under section 235 and be registered, as a subequent application, any more than I would consider a petition by a plaintiff in the course of a suit asking the court to re-consider an order to be a fresh plaint."

It is contended on behalf of the respondent that in this case the striking off of the application of the 13th of November, 1907, was due to the default of the decree-holder in not paying sufficient process fee. Whether or not he was in fault in this respect, the court which passed the order for restoration had all the facts before it and came to the conclusion that there was justifying cause for re-admitting the execution proceedings. We ought, I think, in view of this order, to regard the temporary default on the part of the decree-holder as satisfactorily explained and condoned.

For these reasons I would allow the appeal and set aside the decrees of this Court and also of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the court of first instance.

BANERJI, J.—I agree. The question is whether the application of the 3rd of December, 1907, was an application for execution of the decree within the meaning of section 230 of Act XIV of 1882. If it can be deemed to be an application for execution, if having been presented after the expiry of 12 years from the date of the decree, would be time-barred. I agree with the learned Chief Justice that it was neither in form nor in substance an application for execution within the meaning of that section. It was an application to proceed with the execution proceedings which had been put an end to [522] by the order of the 13th November, 1907. Those proceedings were initiated by the application of the 3rd of June, 1905, which was within 12 years from the date of the decree. By reason of the decree-holder's delay in depositing the requisite amount of process fee the Court put in abeyance the carrying out of the execution proceedings. The decree-holder satisfied the Court that he had sufficient reasons for not depositing the requisite amount of process fees and asked the Court to set aside its order of the 13th of November, 1907, and to proceed with the execution proceedings. The last application was clearly one for a continuation of the execution proceedings already instituted and was not a fresh application for execution. I find it difficult to distinguish this case from the case of Rahim Ali Khan v. Phul Chand (1) decided by a Full Bench of this Court. I agree in the order proposed.

GRIFFIN, J.—I have nothing to add to what has been said by the learned Chief Justice, and I would allow the appeal.

BY THE COURT:—The order of the Court is that the appeal be allowed, the decrees of the learned Judge of this Court and of the lower appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Act (Local) No. II of 1901 (Agra Tenancy Act), section 56—Jurisdiction—Civil and Revenue Courts—Suit for ejectment of a tenant in Revenue Court—Subsequent suit in Civil Court against the same defendant as trespasser.

Where the plaintiff had previously sought to eject the defendant by suit in the Revenue Court on the plea that he was the plaintiff's sub-tenant, but had failed, on the finding that the defendant was an occupancy tenant, it was held that the plaintiff could not thereafter sue the defendant in the Civil Court to evict him as a trespasser.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

In a previous litigation in the Revenue Courts the plaintiff Gobind Ram had sought to eject the defendant from a certain occupancy holding upon the ground that the defendant was the plaintiff's sub-tenant, but had been defeated on the finding that the defendant was an occupancy tenant. The plaintiff then brought the present suit in a Civil Court to evict the defendant from that part of the occupancy holding of which he was in possession. He alleged that the land held by Narain Singh, the defendant, had been sublet to him at a certain rent, but as the latter had in the Revenue Court pleaded that he was a partner and not a sub-tenant, he had by this act become a trespasser and should on that ground be ejected. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, but on appeal the lower Appellate Court reversed the decree and remanded the case for trial on the merits. The defendant appealed.

Babu Sarat Chandra Chaudhri (with Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri) for the appellant.

Mr. W. Wallach (with him Munshi Govind Prasad), for the respondent.

KNOX and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ.—This appeal arises out of a dispute between two persons who are both of them subject to the provisions of Local Act No. II of 1901. The respondent, Gobind Ram, was plaintiff and claimed to be the sole tenant of a large occupancy holding. He first went to the Revenue Court [524] and filed an application in that Court for the ejectment of the appellant, Narain Singh, his nephew, alleging that Narain Singh was his sub-tenant of a part of a large holding. The application was dismissed. The Commissioner held that Narain Singh had made out his plea that he was an occupancy tenant and not a sub-tenant. This decision was confirmed by the Board of Revenue. Whether it was necessary or not to go so far as the Revenue Courts went, we need not consider. Gobind Ram then came to the Civil Court and filed the suit out of which the present appeal has arisen to eject the defendant from that part of the occupancy holding which is in his possession. He in the plaint alleged that the land held by Narain Singh had been sublet to him at a certain rent per annum, but as the latter had in the Revenue Court pleaded that he was a partner and not a sub-tenant, he had by this very act become a trespasser and should on that ground be ejected. The Court below appears to have overlooked the provisions of section 56 of Act No. II of 1901, which provides that no tenant shall be ejected otherwise than under the provisions of the Act. Gobind Ram, according to his own showing, treated Narain Singh as a tenant whom he wished to be ejected by the Revenue Court, but having failed there he comes to the Civil Court to have him ejected. He cannot do so by coming to the Civil Court. We hold that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction in this case. We decree the appeal, set aside the order of the lower appellate Court with costs and restore the decree of the court of first instance.

Act No. IX of 1875 (Indian Majority Act), sections 2, 3—Hindu law—Majority—Testamentary capacity of Hindus.

Held that a Hindu domiciled in the United Provinces cannot execute a valid will until he has reached the age of majority as prescribed by the Indian Majority Act, 1875.

[Fol: 38 Mad. 166.]

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

One Lallu Mal died on the first of July, 1903, leaving him surviving his widow Jasodha and his mother Gomi, the respondent. Jasodha died on the 8th of May, 1903. Both Lallu Mal and Jasodha were, at the dates of their respective deaths, between sixteen and eighteen years of age. Lallu Mal had made a will of the 29th of June 1903, three days before his death, and Jasodha another, on the 5th of May, 1908, also three days previous to her death. Musammat Gomi claimed under these wills to be absolutely entitled to the estate of Lallu Mal, on the allegation that both the deceased were competent under the Hindu Law to have bequeathed property as they liked. This was a suit by the reversioners of Lallu Mal for a declaration that they were unaffected by the wills in question and that Gomi was entitled only to a life estate.

The Court of first instance (Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur) dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appealed.

Mr. W. Wallach (with him Babu Lalit Mohan Banerji), for the appellant, submitted that the provisions of the Indian Majority Act, 1875, would apply. The acts of minors which had validity given them were enumerated there and testamentary capacity had not been conferred on them.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal (with him the Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru, Dr Satish Chandra Banerji and Mr. J. L. Jaini), for the respondent, contended that a minor could make a will under Hindu Law. A will was not a contract. [526] Hindu Law laid down was that having attained the age of 16 he was quite independent and quite competent to make a will. He might not, it is true, be able to make a gift, but if the Legislature had wished to prohibit his making a will, it would have done so specially. Only the analogy of the law of gift was applicable to wills, not the statute law of gifts. A number of requirements, e. g. registration and attestation, were to be complied with in the case of gifts. They were not necessary in the case of wills. The term minor was given a special meaning under the statute only for certain purposes.

Babu Lalit Mohan Banerji, in reply, referred to the Sacred Books of the East, Vol. XXXIII, page 52. A minor was a minor under the provisions of Act IX of 1875. Where an exception was made, as in cases of marriage, divorce, adoption and dower, it was said so in the Act. In all other transactions the provisions of the Act would have to be complied with. He referred to Mayne on Hindu Law, paragraph 407.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that a will alleged to have been executed by one Lallu Mal in favour of his wife Jasodha on the 29th of June, 1903, as also a will made by Musammat Jasodha on the 5th of May, 1908, are void by reason of the fact, among others, that both Lallu Mal and Jasodha were under the age of eighteen years, at the date of the execution of the respective documents. It is admitted that both Lallu Mal and Musammat Jasodha were over the age of sixteen but under the age of eighteen years. The contention on behalf of the defendant respondent is, that both being Hindus and having attained the age of sixteen years, were capable of disposing of their property by will. The court below held that Lallu Mal and Jasodha were competent to execute the wills in question, and that having done so with full knowledge of their contents and being of full testamentary capacity, the wills were valid and the plaintiff's suit failed.

This appeal was then preferred, and the main contention on behalf of the appellants is that the question is concluded by the provisions of the Indian Majority Act No. IX of 1875. The argument addressed to us on behalf of the respondent is that both [527] Lallu Mal and Jasodha being upwards of sixteen years old, and so having attained full age, according to the Hindu Law they had power to make wills; that the capacity to make a will is not regulated by statute; and that the Hindu Law should be applied to the case.

We are of opinion that the question is concluded by the Indian Majority Act. That Act extends to the whole of British India and was intended to prolong the period of nonage in the case of Hindus as well as of other subjects of the Crown.

In the preamble it is stated that "it is expedient to prolong the period of nonage and to attain more uniformity and certainty respecting the age of majority than now exists." Section 2 is a saving clause and prescribes that nothing in the Act contained shall affect (a) the capacity of any person to act in the following matters, namely, marriage, dower, divorce and adoption; (b) the religion or religious rights and usages of any class of Her Majesty's subjects in India, or (c) the capacity of any person who before this Act comes into force has attained majority under the law applicable to him. Then section 3 prolongs the nonage of a minor, of whose person or property a guardian has been or shall be appointed, up to 21 years; and in the case of every other person domiciled in British India, prescribes that every such other person "shall be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of 18 years and not before."

It appears to us that this enactment extended the period of nonage in the case of Lallu Mal and Jasodha to their 21st year respectively, as a guardian was appointed for each of them, and overrides any rule of law as regards nonage which may have subsisted prior thereto. It will be observed that in section 2, clause (a), the only exception made in regard to the application of the provisions of the Act is in the cases of marriage, dower, divorce and adoption. The capacity to do any other act is not safeguarded. The only other exception is the capacity of any person who, before the Act came into force, had attained majority under the law applicable to such person. In the present case Lallu Mal and Jasodha had not attained majority before Act IX of 1875 came into force. Therefore clause (c) does not safeguard [528] their capacity to make a will. The Act was intended to attain uniformity and certainty respecting the age of majority, and we think it governs a case such as the present.

For these reasons the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is in our judgment erroneous. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the court below, and decree the plaintiff's claim with costs in both courts.

Partition—Appeal—Appeal against preliminary decree—Final decree, passed since the appeal—No appeal against final decree.

Held that an appeal against the preliminary decree in a suit for partition cannot be heard if after the filing of such appeal the final decree has been passed and no appeal is preferred against that decree. Kuriya Mal v. Bishambhar Das (1) referred to.

In this case a preliminary decree for partition had been passed, and the present appeal was against that decree. After the appeal was filed, the final decree in the suit was passed, and by the time this appeal came on for hearing no appeal had been filed against the final decree and the time for appealing had elapsed. A preliminary objection was therefore raised by the respondents that, in the absence of any appeal against the final decree in the suit, this appeal could not be heard.

suit was one for partition. A preliminary decree was passed on the 17th of September, 1909, and it is against this preliminary decree that the appeal has been preferred. A final decree was passed on the 27th of January, [529] 1910, and no appeal has been preferred against this decree, and the time for appealing has elapsed. According to the ruling above referred to, after the passing of a final decree in a suit for partition no appeal will lie, which does not challenge the final as well as the preliminary decree. The only difference in the case before us and the case of Kuriya Mal v. Bishambhar Das is that in that case, when the appeal was preferred, the final decree for partition had been passed. In the present case the final decree was not passed at the date of the filing of the appeal. It appears to us, however, that the principle of the decision in Kuriya Mal v. Bishambhar Das is applicable to this case, and that the appeal cannot be entertained. We accordingly dismiss it, but under the circumstances without costs. Objections have been filed, but as the appeal has failed they must also fail. We dismiss them without costs.

[22nd March, 1911.]

Civil Procedure Code (1908), section 60—"Public officer"—Execution of decree—Limitation—Act No. IX of 1908 (Indian Limitation Act), schedule I, article 182, clause (5)—Attachment—Pay of officer of regular forces not attachable—Statute 44 and 45 Vict., Cap. LVIII, section 136—Statute 58 and 59 Vict., Cap. V, section 4.

An officer of His Majesty's regular forces serving in India is not a "public officer" within the meaning of section 60 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. The pay of such an officer, therefore, is not liable to be attached in execution of a decree of a court in British India. Calcutta Trades Association v. Ryland (1) and Watson v. Lloyd (2) referred to.

THE facts of this case were as follows: —

The Bank of Upper India, Limited, obtained a decree against Major Kuper, Captain (now Colonel) Lecky and Captain Vizard on the 24th December, 1900. The first application for execution was made on the 18th April, 1910, against Colonel Lecky. Certain payments, however, made from 17th January, 1902, to 18th February, 1910, by a judgment-debtor other than [530] Colonel Lecky had been certified to the court by the decree-holder under section 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure (1882). Colonel Lecky objected to execution on the ground that the application was beyond time, and also contended that under the terms of the decree the decree-holder was not entitled to add to the decretal amount certain sums of money which were paid to keep alive a policy of insurance which was security for the debt, and further that his pay as an officer of His Majesty's regular forces was not liable to attachment. The Subordinate Judge repelled the objection of Colonel Lecky regarding limitation, holding that, as the present application was within three years of the last certificate of payment filed by the decree-holder, the application was within time. He also held that the other objections had no force and ordered execution to proceed. The judgment-debtor appealed.

Mr. W. Wallach (with him Babu Lalit Mohan Banerji), for the appellant.

The decree is barred by time. No payments were made by Colonel Lecky, and as against him the decree can have no force. He referred to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, schedule I, article 182, clause (5). The case of Sujan Singh v. Hira Singh (1) is distinguishable. In that case the certificate of payment was filed while an application for execution was pending, and so the certificate was clearly a step in aid of execution. But in the present case there was no application for execution of the decree before the court. The certificates therefore could not be in aid of any execution proceedings.

The second point relates to an item claimed by the decree-holder, which covers sums of money paid by the Bank after the decree as premia to keep alive a life insurance policy of Major Kuper which had been made over to the decree-holder as a security for the debt. In any case Colonel Lecky cannot be liable under the decree for payments made after it. The execution court had no power to saddle any one of the judgment-debtors with payments made after the decree. The decree says that the Bank is entitled to pay the premia until the decree is satisfied, but this does not mean that these payments can be [531] claimed in execution of the decree. There could be no decree for future payments by decree-holder. No court fee had been paid for the relief and no court fee could be paid.

The third question is whether any portion of the salary of Colonel Lecky, who is in the Royal Artillery and belongs to His Majesty's Regular Forces, is liable to attachment in execution of a decree. It is under section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 that half of the salary of the appellant has been ordered to be attached. But clause (2), sub-clause (b) of section 60, provides that nothing in section 60 affects the provisions of the Army Act. Section 136 of the Army Act, 1881, 44 and 45 Vict , Cap. LVIII, provides that the pay of an officer or soldier of the Regular Forces shall be paid without any deduction other than those authorized by the Act or by any Royal warrant. There used to be in the same Act section 151, which authorized the Civil Courts in India to attach half of the salary of persons subject to military law, other than soldiers of the Regular Forces. But in 1895 by an amendment [58 and 59 Vict., Cap. V] of the Army Act, section 151, was repealed and the words—"or by any law passed by the Governor General of India in Council"—were added to section 136. The section so amended stands in the Army Act now in force. So, under the Army Act the salary of an officer of the Regular Forces is not liable to attachment, unless there is any law of the Indian Government to that effect ; and since the only law i.e., section 60, Civil Procedure Code, which relates to the liability of properties to attachment, does not affect the provisions of the Army Act, no portion of the salary of an officer or soldier of His Majesty's Regular Forces is liable to attachment in execution of a decree of a Civil Court in India. The court below has referred to two cases Calcutta Trades Association v. Ryland (1) Watson v. Lloyd (2). Both these cases, however, so far as attachment of salaries is concerned, deal with officers of the Indian Army.

Even if the reasoning in the case of Watson v. Lloyd might apply here, I submit that it does not appear to be correct. The new Civil Procedure Code lays down that section 60 is not to affect the Army Act. There was a similar provision in the old [532] Act too, but it is not referred to in the judgment. Bansi Lal v. Colonel Mercer (3) and the "Manual of Military Law," at pages 104 and 105, were also referred to.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor, for the respondent.

I shall first show that the application is in time. My friend has mixed up the provisions of section 20 of the Limitation Act with article 182 of the Act. Section 20 deals with a case which is not before the Court. It does not deal with execution proceedings. The ruling in 27 All. 575, deals with a case under section 20. Section 20 contemplates cases where a long term has passed from the date of debt, and fresh payments are made which have the effect of keeping the liability alive—a liability which has not matured into a decree. In such cases the payments must be made by the judgment-debtor or his agent. Now to turn to article 182. It does not apply to a suit, but to a decree. It gives the limitation for a decree, and not for a suit. In the present case payments have been certified under section 258 of the old Civil Procedure Code and section 258 does not say that payments must be made by the judgment-debtor or his authorised agent. It has been held in many cases that a certificate under section 258 for payments made out of Court is a step in aid of execution. The judgment in 27 All. is a correct judgment, if it is, taken as applying to a case of acknowledgment. The case in 27 All. was not one in which payments were certified to the Court. It was a case of a payment outside Court and the attempt was to bring it under section 20 of the Limitation Act. Their Lordships were not considering a case under article 179 of the old Limitation Act [which corresponds to article 182 of the present Act] but under section 20. Article 182 makes it clear that when there are many judgment-debtors, you can take money from any one, and it will serve to keep the decree alive. If that were not so, there would be great complications for the decree-holders. The analogy of 27 All. should not mislead your Lordships. It did not purport to decide a case under article 182. It is well-established law that a certificate of payment is a step in aid of execution ; Wasi Imam v. Pooni Singh (4), Ghansham v. [533] Mukha (5), Muhammad Husain Khan v. Ram Sarup (6) and Sujan Singh v. Hira Singh (7).

I come now to the second point, viz., about payments made to keep the insurance policy alive. This question cannot be raised in an execution court. If the decree was wrong, the judgment-debtor ought to have got it amended. But the decree provided that premia on the policy were to be paid by the judgment-debtor and he did it. This Court cannot interfere with the decree.

The third question is in regard to the liability of Colonel Lecky's pay to attachment. It is true that Colonel Lecky belongs to the British Army and not to the Indian Army, but while he is in service here, he is paid, not by the British Exchequer but by the Government of India. He is a servant of the Government of India. Section 60, Civil Procedure Code, provides that salaries or allowances of 'public officers' can be attached. Section 2, sub-section (17) of the Civil Procedure Code, defines a 'public officer.' It includes all commissioned officers of His Majesty's Army or Navy while serving under the Government in India; Calcutta Trades Association v. Ryland (1).

Section 151 of the Army Act was a parallel to the provision in the Civil Procedure Code about the liability to attachment of half of an officer's salary. The words that were added to section 136 when section 151 was repealed especially guarded the authority of the Civil Procedure Code. If what had been meant was that no Civil Court in India could attach the pay of a British Officer, the new words would not have been added. And why should any sanctity attach to the pay of a British Officer of the regular forces? A British Magistrate, getting the same salary, will have his pay attached. Why should an exception have been made in the case of a military officer? The attachment now made is not under the Army Act, but under the law in force in British India for the time.

The Army Act deals with the relation of the members of the Army towards the Crown. That is its scope. A provision as to how Civil Courts in India were to attach salaries of officers would [534] be out of place in the Act. So, when dealing with the question of pay, the Act says that no deductions are to be made except those under the law, and in case of India, the law in British India. The Civil Procedure Code expressly says that the salaries of all public officers are liable to attachment. If there was any conflict between the Army Act and the Civil Procedure Code, the former would prevail. But there is no conflict between the two Acts, and where there is no conflict, the ordinary law prevailing in India would apply.

There is no authority for the proposition that the salary of an officer of the regular forces cannot be attached.

Mr. W. Wallach, in reply.

Colonel Lecky is not a public officer within the meaning of the expression, as defined in section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, and his salary is not paid by the Indian Government. In 24 Cal. 102, at 105, the definition of 'public officer' was considered. The pay of a British officer in India is fixed by the Parliament. Whether a British officer is in India or Egypt or Africa, does not matter, he continues to be an officer paid by the Crown. But there is an adjustment of accounts. Eventually, it is true, the money comes out of the pocket of the Indian tax-payer, but it is paid to the officer indirectly. He is directly in the pay of the Crown. There must have been reasons for passing the Army Act and exempting the pay of the military officers from attachment. But we are to take the Act as it is and not to look at the reasons for passing it. Clearly the intention of the Legislature in amending the Army Act in 1895 was to take out from it anything which might concern India and to allow the Governor General to make his own rules. That is why the additional words were added to section 136 and section 151 was repealed. But the Government of India provides that the rule laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure is not to affect the Army Act. The intention of the Legislature in India, therefore, seems to be clear, i. e., to exempt from the operation of section 60 the officers of the British Army. In regard to the question of the payment of premia. No decree was given or could be given for future payments. The decree-holder's remedy lies in a separate suit against such persons as may be liable. In regard to the question of [535] limitation I do not question the correctness of the decision in 12 All. If payment is made when there is no application for execution before the court, it cannot be a step in aid of execution.

KNOX and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ.—On the 24th day of December, 1900, the Bank of Upper India, Ld., obtained a money decree against three officers of His Majesty's Regular Forces. No application for execution of this decree, as the term is ordinarily understood, was made until the 8th of April, 1910, when the decree-holder applied to the Subordinate Judge for execution of the decree by attachment of half the salary of one of the said officers, Col. R. Lecky, appellant to this appeal.

The judgment-debtor, Col. R. Lecky, objected to the attachment proposed by the decree-holder on the grounds that—

(1) the application was barred ;
(2) his salary was not liable to attachment ;
(3) the decree does not empower the decree-holder to realize under it certain premia alleged by the decree-holder to have been paid in order to keep alive certain insurance policies held by the Bank as security for the moneys originally advanced by the said Bank.

Other objections were raised, but the present appeal is not concerned with them. The objections above-mentioned were overruled by the learned Subordinate Judge. The appellant raises them again before us.

As regards the first of these objections, the decree-holder certified to the court of the Subordinate Judge payments made by one of the judgment-debtors other than the appellant—

(1) on the 17th day of January, 1902 ;
(2) on the 9th day of June, 1904 ;
(3) on the 13th day of March, 1907 ;
(4) on the 22nd day of April, 1908 ;
(5) on the 18th day of February, 1910, and it is contended on his behalf that the several acts of certifying by the decree-holder of these payments to the court are applications in accordance with law, to the proper court, to take some steps in aid of execution of the decree. This being the case, the application of the 8th day of April, 1910, is well within time.

[536] A Full Bench of this Court in Sujan Singh v. Hira Singh (1) held that applications by a decree-holder in accordance with law made under section 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, were applications by a decree-holder to take some step in aid of execution within the meaning of clause 4 of column 3, article 179, of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877. This ruling would appear fatal to the objection raised by the appellant.

The learned counsel for the appellant seeks to distinguish the present appeal from the case of Sujan Singh v. Hira Singh, on the ground that in the latter case, the decree-holder had applied under section 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, for execution of the decree held by him before he had certified payments to the court under section 258, while in the present case no similar applications had been made by the decree-holder.

We fail to see any force in this argument. Indeed to accept it as valid we should have to read into article 182 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, after the words &c., "5. Where the words in a previously instituted application for execution of the same decree under section 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882." The application out of which this appeal has arisen was an application for the execution of a decree of Civil Court bearing date 24th December, 1900. The decree-holder had in the years 1902, 1904, 1907, 1908 and 1910, applied in accordance with law to the proper court to take a step in aid of execution of the decree, and the application now under consideration was made within three years of the 18th February, 1910. This objection therefore fails.

To take next in order the third objection.

Both sides admit that the answer rests upon what is the proper interpretation of the decree under execution. The portion of the decree which refers to this point runs as follows :—

" It is further ordered that the Bank, the plaintiff, is entitled to pay the premia until the decree is satisfied and the policy remains in force and to recover the same from the defendants with interest at Rs. 10 per cent per annum."

We are satisfied that the learned Subordinate Judge did intend and did grant only a declaration that the plaintiff Bank was entitled to pay the premia due on the policy until the [537] decree was satisfied. It did not give a decree for the realization of such future and unascertained sums against any of the defendants.

There remains the second objection. The Army Act, 1881 (44 and 45 Vict., Cap. LVIII) in section 136 enacted that the pay of an officer of Her Majesty's Regular Forces shall be paid without any deduction other than the deductions authorized by it or by any Royal warrant for the time being. This section was amended in 1895. By the Army (Annual) Act, 1895, section 4, to section 136 of the Army Act were added the words " or by any law passed by the Governor General of India in Council." The section so amended forms part of the Army (Annual) Act, 1910, now in force.

In the Army Act, 1881, there stood a section, viz., section 151, which authorized Courts of Small Causes and Civil Courts in India upon adjudging payment of debt by a person subject to Military Law other than a soldier of the regular forces to direct specially that the amount named in the direction, being the whole or any part of the said sum, shall be paid by instalments or otherwise out of any pay or other public money payable to the debtor, and the amount named in the direction, not exceeding one half of such pay and public money, shall, while the debtor is in India, be stopped and paid in conformity with the direction.

Instalments so directed would be authorized deductions in the sense of the words used in section 136, and to order such instalments would be within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge. But in 1895, the Army (Annual) Act, 1895, repealed section 151 of the Army Act (44 and 45 Vict., Cap. LVIII) and to direct in India any deduction from the pay of an officer of the Regular Forces, if legal, must rest upon the provisions of a law passed by the Governor General in Council.

Neither side has referred us to any law now extant and bearing upon the point save the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and we know of no other.

The only portion of the Code that has any application is section 60. This enacts that debts belonging to a judgment [538] debtor are liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree. Salary when due is such a debt, and would therefore be liable. But section 60 contains an important proviso, viz :—

(a) Provided that the following particulars shall not be liable to such attachment or sale, namely—

(b) Allowances (being less than salary) of any public officer or of any servant of a railway company or local authority while absent from duty ;

(i) The salary or allowances equal to salary of any such public officer or servant as is referred to in clause (b), while on duty, to the extent of—

(i) the whole of the salary, where the salary does not exceed twenty rupees monthly ;

(ii) twenty rupees monthly, where the salary exceeds twenty rupees and does not exceed forty rupees monthly ; and

(iii) one moiety of the salary in any other case.

Explanation.—The particulars mentioned in clauses (g), (h), (i) (j) (l) and (o) are exempt from attachment or sale whether before or after they are actually payable.

If this were all, there would be ample authority for the order passed by the lower Court. This was the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Calcutta Trades Association v. Ryland, (1). In Watson v. Lloyd (2), the Madras High Court held that the case of Calcutta Trades Association v. Ryland was rightly decided and followed it.

In both of these cases, however, the judgment-debtor was a Military Officer in the Indian Staff Corps.

In Calcutta Trades Association v. Ryland, Mr. JUSTICE SALE draws a sharp distinction between an officer of the Indian Staff Corps and an officer of the Regular Forces.

Thus he says : —

"It would appear that while the pay of an officer of the regular forces is not liable to attachment the pay of an officer of the Indian Staff Corps is liable to attachmemt, the reason for the distinction between the two cases being that an officer of the Staff Corps is a Public Officer within the meaning of clause (b) of [539] section 266 of the Civil Procedure Code, read with the interpretation clause, whereas an officer of the regular forces is not."

He would appear to rest the distinction upon a note furnished by the Registrar of the Calcutta High Court which he considered as giving a correct view of the law then existing upon the subject. Whether it be a correct view or not, we are not in a position to say.

In neither case is any allusion made to the second proviso to section 266, reproduced as clause 2 (b) in section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

This proviso and clause lay down that nothing in section 266 of the Code of 1882, and section 60 of the Code of 1908 shall be deemed to affect the provisions of the Army Act or of any similar law for the time being in force.

It seems to us that this clause compels us to exclude section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, from our consideration in the present case and to hold that no deductions have been pointed out to us as authorized by the Army Act, 1881, or any other Act, or by any law passed by the Governor-General of India in Council.

Act (Local) I of 1900 (United Provinces Municipalities Act), section 49—Suit against a member of a Municipal Board for damages—Notice—Act purporting to be done in official capacity.

A member of a Municipal Board, as such member, made a report to the Board which resulted in the prosecution of certain persons for a municipal offence. The persons prosecuted were acquitted, and thereafter filed a suit for damages for malicious prosecution against the maker of the report. Held that the defendant was entitled to the notice provided for by section 49 of the Municipalities Act, 1900. Muhammad Saddiq Ahmed v. Panna Lal (1) distinguished.

[Ref. 80 I. C. 72=22 A. L. J. 812.]

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of KARAMAT HUSAIN, J. The facts of the case are stated in the judgment under appeal, which was as follows:—

"The facts are as follows:—Pandit Jugal Kishore was a Municipal Commissioner at Banda and was in charge of the supervision of the sanitation of the town. He submitted a report to the Municipal Secretary to the effect that dirty water was flowing from the house of Jugal Kishore and Bacha Lal and that they should be prosecuted under the provisions of the Municipal Act. They were prosecuted in the Court of the Tahsildar and were acquitted. They then brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for damages. The Court of first instance decreed their claim. The defendant appealed, and one of the points in the lower Appellate Court was, that in the absence of a notice required by section 49 of the N.-W. P. and Oudh Municipalities Act I of 1900, the suit was not maintainable. The lower Appellate Court accepted that plea and decreed the appeal. In its judgment that Court remarked as follows:—'The lower Court has found that no notice was required as the defendant acted on his own responsibility under the colour of law. The case of Saddiq Muhammad Ahmad v. Panna Lal (1) is referred to. The circumstances of that case appear to me to be very different from those of the present case. In this case a report was made by a member of the Municipal Board to the Secretary in regard to a matter, namely sanitation, which the Board had deputed that member to look after. In my opinion the act complained of, namely, the prosecution, purported to be done by the defendant in his capacity as member, and a notice under section 49 was required. For those reasons I must allow this appeal and order that the suit be dismissed. As it has been decided on a technical point, I order that the parties pay their own costs in both Courts.'

The plaintiffs have perferred a second appeal to this Court and the plea taken is that on the facts found no notice under section 49 of the N.-W. P. and Oudh [541] Municipalities Act was required, and that the lower Appellate Court should not have dismissed the suit. Objections have been filed on behalf of the defendant to the effect that he should have been allowed costs in both the Courts below. The learned advocate for the appellants in support of his contention cited the following authorities :—Theobald v. Crichmore (1) ; Attorney-General v. Hackney Local Board (2) ; Shahebzadee Shahunshah Begum v. Fergusson (3); Jogendra Nath Roy Bahadur v. J. C. Price (4) ; Collector of Bijnor v. Munuvar (5) ; Muhammad Saddiq Ahmad v. Panna Lal (6). With reference to the above authorities he contends that it was not sufficient in order to entitle the defendant to a notice under section 49 of the Municipalities Act that he (defendant) should have been acting as a Municipal Commissioner. It was further necessary that he should have been acting in good faith in the discharge of his official duties. At first he contended that the defendant in order to be entitled to notice should have shown that he, in the exercise of his official functions, had no motive of gratifying a private grudge against the plaintiffs, but finding that no authority favoured this view, he contended that the defendant should have proved that he reported against the plaintiffs in his official capacity.

The case of Shabedzadee Shahunshah Begum v Fergusson (3) following the two English cases already mentioned, lays down the following rule :—'The cases in which a public officer is entitled to notice of suit under section 424 of the Code, are those in which he is sued for damages for some wrong inadvertently committed by him in the discharge of his official duties, and the object of giving notice is that if a public body or officer entrusted with powers happens to commit an inadvertence, irregularity or wrong before any one has a right to require payment in respect of that wrong, he shall have an opportunity of setting himself right, making amends, restoring what he has taken or paying for the damage he has done.' The above reason for giving notice is taken from the case of Attorney-General v. Hackney Local Board (2). SIR JAMES BACON, V. C., remarked :—' The policy of the law is that if these public bodies entrusted with powers for public purposes in the course of executing those powers shall happen to commit any inadvertence, irregularity, or wrong, then before anybody has right to require payment from them in respect of that wrong, they shall have an opportunity of setting themselves right; they shall have the period of one month for the purpose of making amends or for restoring if they have taken away anything, and for paying for if they have done any damage.'

"An opportunity to make amends being the reason of the rule for notice it follows that if a public servant does any act in the discharge of public duties and that act causes injury to some one, the injured person prior to the institution of a suit for damages against the public servant is bound to give him notice of his intention to sue. The remarks of BANERJI, in Bakhtawar Mal v. Abdul Latif (7) are to the same effect. The learned Judge says :—' The suit is therefore a suit against a public officer and in respect of an act purporting to have been done by him in his official capacity, and the defendant was entitled to a notice under [542] section 424 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This case is distinguishable from that of Muhammad Saddiq Ahmad v. Panna Lal (6), to which the learned vakil for the appellant referred. The circumstances of that case are quite different, the defendant having acted in that case, not in his capacity as a public officer, but illegally and in bad faith. The case more in point is that of Jogendra Nath Roy v. Price (4) in which it was held that a notice was necessary under similar circumstances.' The case of Bakhtawar Mal was under section 424 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but the principle is applicable to cases under section 49 of the Municipalities Act, I of 1900.

" In the case before me the finding of the lower appellate court is ' that the act complained of, namely, the prosecution, purported to be done by the defendant in his capacity as member,' and there is nothing on the record to show that the defendant, in reporting to the Secretary of the Municipal Board that the plaintiffs should be prosecuted, acted in any way in bad faith. I am, therefore, of opinion that the lower appellate court is right in holding that the defendant was entitled to notice under section 49 of the Municipalities Act. It is further contended that it is not the report only but also the looking after the case against the plaintiffs on behalf of the prosecution that caused damage to them and that such looking after not being his official duty, the defendant cannot be deemed to have acted in good faith in the discharge of his public duties. There is no force in this contention, inasmuch as the lower appellate court has found that the prosecution purported to be done by the defendant in his capacity as member.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The lower appellate court in my opinion was right in not allowing costs to the defendant. I therefore dismiss the objections with costs."

The plaintiffs appealed.

Dr. Tej Bhadur Sapru, for the appellants.

The principle on which notice could be claimed was explained in Shahebzadee Shahunshah Begum v. Fergusson (1) and that was followed in Muhammad Saddiq Ahmad v. Panna Lal (2). The case relied on by the defendant— Bakhtawar Mal v. Abdul Latif (3)—was distinguishable, and came within the exception enumerated by CUNNINGHAM, J., in the case in 7 Calcutta. Where the defendant acted merely under colour of his office to satisfy some private grudge against the plaintiff, he could not claim the protection of section 49 of the Municipalities Act. There must be good faith on his part. He cited Attorney-General v. Hackney Local Board (4).

Babu Piyari Lal Banerji and Pandit Uman Shankar Bajpai. for the respondent, were not called upon.

[543] STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for damages for alleged malicious prosecution. The defendant is one of two members of the Municipal Board of Banda who were charged with the supervision of the sanitation of the town. He made a report to the Secretary of the Municipal Board to the effect that dirty water was found by him to be issuing from the house of the plaintiffs, thereby causing danger to public health. The Secretary of the Board directed the prosecution of the plaintiffs, with the result that the Tahsildar, before whom the case was heard acquitted the accused. They thereupon instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. The first court gave a decree in the plaintiffs' favour and awarded them damages. Upon appeal the learned District Judge held that the defendant was entitled to the notice prescribed by section 49 of the Municipalities Act (I of 1900), and that no such notice was served, and accordingly dismissed the suit. Section 49 of the Municipalities Act prescribes that "no suit shall be instituted against a Board or against any member, officer or servant of a Board in respect of any act purporting to be done in its, or his, official capacity until after the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been, in the case of the Board, left at its office, and in the case of a member, officer or servant, delivered to him." In this case the lower appellate court has found that the defendant was a member of the Municipal Board, and that he reported to the Secretary of the Board that dirty water was allowed to flow from the plaintiffs' house into a public road. This was a matter of sanitation which the Board had deputed the defendant and another member of the Board to look after. The learned District Judge finds that the defendant purported to act in his capacity as member of the Board and that the notice prescribed ought to have been served.

We are of opinion that the District Judge was right in the view which he took. It is clear on the facts that defendant purported to act in his official capacity. He merely gave notice to the Secretary of the Board of what he considered a nuisance, or objectionable, affecting the sanitation of the town ; upon this report the Secretary of the Board took action.

Whether or not the plaintiffs were rightly acquitted on the charge brought against them, it is not for us to consider. We have [544] only to decide whether or not the defendant purported to act in his capacity as municipal officer, and if we find that he did so purport to act, then it appears to us that he was clearly entitled to the notice prescribed by section 49. We are not called upon to decide whether or not the defendant rendered himself liable to damages for malicious prosecution, if he acted with malice or without reasonable or probable cause. All that we decide is that he was entitled to the notice prescribed by the Act and not having received that notice the suit is not maintainable. The case is unlike the case which has been relied upon by the learned advocate for the appellants, namely, that of Muhammad Saddiq Ahmad v. Panna Lal (1) In that case the defendant did not purport to act in good faith in pursuance of the law, but he took advantage of his position as a police officer to commit illegal and tortious acts maliciously and without cause. That is a different case from the one now under consideration. In this case undoubtedly the defendant did purport to act as member of the Municipal Board charged with the supervision of the sanitation of the town of Banda. The case is more like the case of Bakhtawar Mal v. Abdul Latif (2). We therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Act No. IX of 1890 (Indian Railways Act), section 77—Suit against railway company—Notice—Limitation—Act No. IX of 1908 (Indian Limitation Act), schedule I, article 31—Waiver of notice.

Certain goods were despatched on the 26th of March, 1908, from Bombay to Ghazipur. The goods were lost in transit while in possession of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company. The consignee made a claim against the East Indian Railway Company, as the result of which he was offered a certain sum as compensation by the Assistant Traffic Manager of that Company, who stated that he did so with the authority of the Deputy Traffic Manager of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company. There was, however, no proof that any such authority had been given, and the offer was refused. On the 9th [545] August, 1909, the consignee brought a suit against the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company for damages, for the loss of his goods, but did not give the notice required by section 77 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890. He claimed that certain conditions printed on the back of the railway receipt relieved him of the necessity of giving notice under section 77. Held that this was not so; nor did the action of the Assistant Traffic Manager of the East Indian Railway Company amount to a waiver of notice. The suit was also barred by limitation under article 31 of the first schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908.

that they had been stolen while in the custody of the defendant company on the 1st of April, 1908.

On the 9th of August, 1909, the plaintiff filed this suit against the company for the price of the goods lost and for damages. The suit was defended on the grounds that no proper notice had been given and that the suit was barred by limitation. The Munsif dismissed the suit holding that under section 77 of the Railways Act, IX of 1890, no notice had been served of the defendants. The Judge decreed a part of the claim, holding that a letter of the Acting Traffic Manager of the East Indian Railway, saying that he had been authorized by the Deputy Traffic Superintendent of the appellant company to pay the plaintiff the actual value of the goods, was a sufficient acknowledgment of notice and that the suit could not be contested on that ground. The defendants appealed.

Pandit Ladli Prasad Zutshi, for the appellant.

The suit should have been filed within the period prescribed by articles 30 and 31 of the Limitation Act. The lower Court decided this issue against the appellant relying on The British India Steam Navigation Co., Ld, v. Hajee Mahomed Esack & Co. (1), Hassaji v. The East Indian Railway Company (2), Mohansing Chawan v. Henry Conder, General Traffic Manager, G. I. P. Railway Company (3) and Dan Mull v. British India Steam Navigation Company (4). Articles 30 and 31 were amended by Act IX of 1908, and the rulings referred to were no longer applicable. Further, there was no acknowledgment which took the case out of the statute of [546] limitation. The acknowledgment relied was a letter from the Assistant Traffic Manager, East Indian Railway, in which he stated that he was authorized by the Deputy Traffic Manager of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, to offer to the plaintiff Rs 499-7-3, being the amount which "he (the plaintiff) was actually entitled according to the sender's bijak." The Deputy Traffic Manager, Great Indian Peninsula Railway, " emphatically denied" this fact. There was no evidence on the record to show that the Assistant Traffic Manager had any authority to make this offer. Even if it be assumed that the Assistant Traffic Manager had authority from the Great Indian Peninsula Railway to make an offer, such an offer would be without prejudice to their right to notice, and the offer not having been accepted, the plaintiff was not entitled to rely upon this letter as an acknowledgement. It was admitted that no notice was given to the agent of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, under section 77 of the Railways Act within six months from the date of the delivery of the goods for carriage by the railway. The learned District Judge held that under paragraph 4 of the printed notice at the back of the railway receipt, the claim was to be made to the superintendent of the receiving station, and therefore the railway was to be deemed to have waived its right under section 77 of the Railways Act. Condition 5 of the railway receipt drew attention to section 77 of the Railways Act. Paragraph 4 must be read with paragraph 5, and reading the two paragraphs together it was obvious that it was not intended by paragraph 4 to relieve the plaintiff of his liability of giving notice required by section 77 of the Railways Act ; G. I. P. Ry. Co. v. Chandra Bai (5).

Mr. Ahmad Karim, for the respondent, submitted that the suit was not barred by limitation, as the perion should be computed from the last letter sent by the East Indian Railway after consultation with the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, the letter in which the latter company expressed their willingness to pay the actual price of the goods sent but not the damages claimed. He referred to section 19 of the Limitation Act. Further that it was inequitable that the suit having been delayed by the admission of liability by the Company, the latter should [547] now be allowed to set up the defence of limitation. As regards the rulings cited on the question of notice, he submitted that in none of them was the question of admission by the railway Company or the directions printed at the back of the railway receipt brought to the notice of the Court. The 4th paragraph of these directions had been put in to facilitate the work of the agent by allowing notice to be given to the Assistant Traffic Manager. There was a clear distinction between this paragraph and the next, which reproduced the wording of the Railways Act. He submitted that the right of an agent to receive notice had been delegated by him to the subordinate staff, and this form had the sanction of the Government of India. Therefore, if the notice came to the knowledge of the Assistant Traffic Superintendent, it was sufficient notice within the Act. Acknowledgment amounted to a waiver of notice—Periannan Chetti v. South Indian Railway Co., (1)—and also saved limitation. Besides it had not been shown that the appellants had been prejudiced in any way.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for damages for non-delivery of a bale of goods consisting of gauze which was consigned by the plaintiff's agents in Bombay to him at Ghazipur on the 26th of March, 1908. The goods were lost on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, and it is stated that they were stolen in transit and that the thief was tried and convicted of the theft. Amongst the defences filed by the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company was one based on section 77 of the Indian Railways Act, namely, that no notice of action as required by law was given to that Company.

The Court of first instance found that no notice was given and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

An appeal was preferred by the plaintiff, with the result that the lower Appellate Court held that the notice required by the Act had been waived by the defendant Company; and also in view of the fact that an offer had been made to the plaintiffs for payment of a sum of Rs. 499-7-3 in satisfaction of his claim, the Company could not now be allowed to go behind this offer and set up the technical ground of defence that no notice of the claim had been served within the meaning of the section above [548] referred to. Accordingly that Court reversed the decision of the Court below so far as regards the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company, and allowed the plaintiff's claim as against that Company but dismissed it as regards the East Indian Railway Company.

From the decree of this Court the present appeal has been preferred, and the main grounds of appeal are two: first, that no notice having been served within the meaning of section 77 of the Indian Railways Act, the suit was bound to fail as against the Great Indian Peninsula Railway; that there was no waiver of the requisite notice, and that the Court below was therefore wrong in allowing the plaintiffs' claim. There is a further ground of appeal, namely, that the suit is barred by limitation, not having been brought within one year from the date on which the goods ought to have been delivered.

APPELLATE CIVIL.
33 A. 544=8 A. L. J. 543=10 I. C. 122.

As regards the first question it is not disputed that notice was not served upon the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company pursuant to the provisions of section 77 of the Indian Railways Act. That section provides that "a person shall not be entitled to compensation for the loss of goods delivered to be carried by railway unless his claim to compensation has been preferred in writing by him or on his behalf to the railway administration within six months from the date of the delivery of the goods for carriage by railway." Under section 140 of the same Act a notice or other document required, or authorized by the Act to be served on a railway administration " may be served in the case of a railway administered by a Railway Company, as is the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company, on the agent in India of the Railway Company, by delivering the notice or other document to the agent; or by leaving it at his office; or by forwarding it by post in a prepaid letter addressed to the agent at his office and registered under part III of the Indian Post Office Act of 1866." The mode of service upon the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company would ordinarily in the absence of a provision such as this, be effected by service upon the Company at their head office in London. This mode of service had been prescribed, no doubt, for the purpose of saving the delay and the expense which would attend service in London. In this [549] case no service either under section 140 or directly upon the defendant company in London was effected. Consequently it would seem that the learned Munsif was right in holding that the suit could not be maintained. The learned District Judge, however, was of opinion that section 140 was not exhaustive and that a mode of service was prescribed by a condition which appears on the back of the receipt form in use on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway on the consignment of goods to them for carriage. The condition runs as follows:—

"That all claims against the railway for loss or damage to goods must be made to the clerk in charge of the station to which they have been booked before delivery is taken, and that a written statement of the description and contents of the articles missing, or of the damage received must be sent forthwith to the Traffic Superintendent of the district, or goods superintendent at Bombay, Wadi Bundar, in which the forwarding or receiving station is situated otherwise the railway will be freed from responsibility."

The learned Judge observes that "this paragraph lays down the procedure to be followed by consignors in case of the loss of goods and it forms part of the legal contract between the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company and the consignor." He held that where a consignor sends in a claim in accordance with the provisions of the said paragraph, the Railway Company is bound to treat it as a proper notification of his claim to compensation within the meaning of section 77, and that it is not then necessary to serve a notice in any of the ways mentioned in section 140 or otherwise. He found upon the evidence that the plaintiff did prefer his claim in writing to the Traffic Superintendent of the district in which the receiving station is situate, and that the Assistant to the Traffic Manager, East Indian Railway, after communicating with the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, entertained the plaintiffs' claim and offered to pay him Rs. 499-7-3, the value of the goods lost. He therefore held that the notice which was given by the plaintiff was sufficient notice within the meaning of section 77. He further found that by the offer of the Assistant Traffic Manager of the East Indian Railway to pay Rs. 499 odd damages, the Great Indian Peninsula Railway must be taken to have waived their right to the notice required by law. We are unable to agree with the leared District Judge in the view which he formed. If the learned Judge had read the [550] condition on the receipt from following the one upon which he relied, he would have found that it was not the intention of the company that the provision upon which he relied should relieve the plaintiff from the necessity of complying with section 77 of the Indian Railways Act. Condition 5 provides that by section 77 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, "a person shall not be entitled to a refund of an overcharge in respect of animals or goods carried by railway, or to compensation for the loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods delivered to be so carried unless his claim to the refund or compensation has been preferred in writing by him or on his behalf to the railway company within six months from the date of the delivery of the animals or goods or carriage by the railway."

This condition gave notice to the consignors that section 77 of the Railways Act must be complied with. Paragraph 4 must be read in connection with it, and reading the two conditions together, it is obvious that it was not intended by condition 4 to get rid of the obligation which lay upon the plaintiff of giving notice of action as required by section 77 of the Indian Railways Act. This was expressly decided in the case of Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company v. Chandra Bai (1) by a Bench of which one of us was a member. In that case the provisions of section 77 were considered, and also of section 140. It was pointed out that the notification of a claim prescribed by section 77 may be given either to the railway administration as defined in section 3, sub-section (6) or in any of the ways mentioned in section 140; that it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove service of notice of his claim upon the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company at their office in London or else in any of the ways prescribed in section 140, and that there having been no proof of any such service, and the time of such service having expired, the suit was not maintainable. The learned District Judge, referring to this and other rulings, observes that these rulings were in his opinion not applicable to the present case, as in none of the cases which resulted in those rulings, did the defendant railway company ever admit the claim of the plaintiff or offer to settle it out of court. "Moreover, the question whether compliance with the directions contained in para- [551] graph 4 of the notice mentioned hereinbefore meets the requirements of section 77 and renders the service of notice under section 140 unnecessary was never raised in those cases." As we have pointed out, the directions contained in paragraph 4 obviously do not avail the plaintiff in view of the fact that in the subsequent paragraph the necessity for the observance of section 77 is expressly stated. It appears to us that the learned District Judge must have overlooked paragraph 5 which succeeds the paragraph upon which he relied.

Then as to waiver, it is said that the assistant traffic manager of the East Indian Railway stated that he had authority from the deputy traffic manager of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company to offer to the plaintiff Rs. 499-7-3 compensation, and it is contended that this amounted to a waiver of notice on the part of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company. We are unable to hold that there was any waiver. In the first place the district traffic manager of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company repudiated the allegation that he gave any authority for the making of any offer to the plaintiff. The assistant traffic manager was not summoned to prove the letter of authority which he alleged he had received. There is nothing to show that the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company ever waived their right to notice of the claim. On the contrary, they in their written statement relied upon the absence of notice, and there is nothing upon the record to justify us in holding that they waived their rights in this respect. Even if it be assumed that the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company authorized the assistant traffic superintendent of the East Indian Railway Company to make an offer, such an offer would be without prejudice to their rights, and the offer not having been accepted, it could not be held that they were not entitled to rely upon the pleas which they had set up in their defence. Upon this point, therefore we think that the learned District Judge was wrong in reversing the decision of the court of first instance.

There is besides this another ground of defence which appears to us to be fatal to the plaintiffs' claim, and that is the plea based on the statute of limitation. Article 31 of the Limitation Act (Act No. IX of 1908) prescribes the period of limitation for a [552] suit for compensation for non-delivery of goods. In this article the former article of limitation was modified and certain words introduced, so as to adapt the article to the case of a claim such as the present one for damages or compensation for non-delivery of goods. The article is as follows:—"Against a carrier for compensation for non delivery of or delay in delivering goods, one year from the time when the goods ought to be delivered." The goods, as we have said, were consigned to the plaintiffs on the 26th of March, 1908, and the suit was not instituted until the 9th of August, 1909. The period within which the goods in this case ought to have been delivered would not exceed a fortnight, or at the outside three weeks from the time when the goods were consigned at Bombay. Several months over and above one year from this time, therefore, had elapsed before the suit was instituted. As an answer to this plea, it is contended that there was an acknowledgment which took the case out of the statute of limitation. That acknowledgment is the letter from the assistant traffic superintendent of the East Indian Railway Company offering to pay the sum of Rs. 499-7-3, in full satisfaction of the plaintiffs' claim. There is no evidence before the court which would justify us in holding that the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company ever gave authority to the assistant traffic superintendent of the East Indian Railway to make this offer. There is no evidence that the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company ever admitted liability in respect of this sum. We, therefore, are unable to say that there was any such acknowledgment by the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company such as would prevent the operation in their favour of the Statute of limitation.

Upon these two main points which have been taken by the learned vakil for the defendant railway company, we think that the appeal should be allowed, and we must set aside the decree of the lower appellate court so far as regards the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company. We, accordingly, allow the appeal of the company, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and restore the decree of the court of first instance. Under the circumstances we make no order as to the costs of this appeal, or as to the costs in the lower appellate court.

Appeal decreed.

SUNDAR SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. THE COLLECTOR OF SHAHJAHANPUR (Plaintiff).*

[1st April, 1911].

Act (Local) No. II of 1901 (Agra Tenancy Act), section 158—Definition—"Successor"—Transferee of a rent-free grantee.

Held that a transferee from a rent-free grantee is a successor of the grantee within the meaning of section 158 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901.

[Fol: 29 I. C. 710 ; Ref. 60 I. C. 641 ; 71 I. C. 773=21 A L J. 189=45 All 336.]

THE material facts of this case appear from the following order of BANERJI, J :—

"The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought under sections 150 and 156 of the Agra Tenancy Act, for the resumption of a rent-free grant and for assessment of rent. The defence was that the grant was held by the grantee and by three successors of the original grantee for ninety years and that the defendant had thus acquired proprietary title to the land in question. The Court of first instance found that the land was held rent-free by the defendants and their predecessors in title for eighty years, and that the defendants had thus acquired proprietary title. It, accordingly, dismissed the suit. An appeal was preferred to the District Judge, and the first ground of appeal was that the defendants had not acquired any proprietary right in respect of the land in suit. The learned Judge entertained the appeal and held that the land had not been in the possession of the original grantee and of two successors of such grantee. He was of opinion that section 158 of the Agra Tenancy Act did not apply and that the land was liable to resumption and to assessment of rent. He made a decree for resumption and assessed the land with a rent of Rs. 4 per acre The first contention in this appeal is that the lower Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, inasmuch as the suit was one of the description of suits mentioned in group C of Schedule IV of the Act, and an appeal lay to the Commissioner. This contention is not well founded, inasmuch as the question of proprietary title was in issue in the Court of first instance and was also a matter in issue in appeal. Under section 177, clause (c) of the Act, an appeal lies to the District Judge from a decree of the Assistant Collector of the first class in all suits in which a question of proprietary title has been so in issue The learned Judge, therefore, had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. It is next urged that, even if an appeal lay to the District Judge, he was not competent to assess the land to rent, as it was the exclusive jurisdiction of the Revenue Court to make such assessment. There is no force in this contention. As the appeal in the suit lay to the District Judge, he had full power to make such decree as the Court of first instance, namely, the Revenue Court, could make and ought to have made. It is next urged on behalf of the appellants that there is no evidence on the record to support the finding of the lower Court that the original grantee was Chatar Singh and that the names of the appellants were recorded against the land in dispute only two years ago. The learned Judge says in his judgment that the original [554] grantee was Chatar Singh, father of Niwazi, whose sons are the defendants, and that the names of the defendants had been entered two years ago. The Court of first instance framed only two issues, the second of which related to the amount of rent to which the land in question might be assessed. The first issue did not lay down any question as to who the original grantee was and how many successors of the said grantee had held possession of the land in question. It framed no issue as to the defendants' title and how the defendants acquired it, nor whether the defendants' names had been entered only nominally or as real transferees from Niwazi Singh The parties, therefore, had no opportunity of adducing evidence on these points, and on the record as it stands there appears to be no evidence except that of the patwari and two extracts from the khataunt and settlement register. I think it is essential for the right determination of this appeal to have clear findings from the Court below on the following issues, which I refer to that Court under the provisions of order XLI, rule 25, of the Code of Civil Procedure :—

(1) Who was the original grantee of the land in question ?

* Second Appeal No. 706 of 1909 from a decree of B. J. Dalal, District Judge of Shahjahanpur, dated the 9th of February, 1909, reversing a decree of Jagmohan Nath, Assistant Collector, first class, of Shahjahanpur, dated the 31st of August, 1908.

(2) How many successors to the said grantee have held the land in question rent-free and for what length of time?

(3) Have the defendants acquired the land in question, and, if so, when and by what title?

"The Court below will take such additional evidence as the parties may adduce. On receipt of its findings ten days will be allowed for objections."

The Court below found on the issues as follows:—

"1. The original grantee appears to have been one Lalji.

"2. The evidence on the record leads me to believe that Niwazi Singh succeeded Lalji. Niwazi gives a long list of successors, Lalji's brother, their mother, and finally himself. His witnesses talk by rote and are not to be depended upon. Niwazi married Lalji's daughter, so the likelihood is that he was given the land either at the time of his marriage or on Lalji's death. I hold that Niwazi succeeded Lalji. It is not clear at what particular time the proprietor agreed not to collect rent from Lalji. Any way, it is fairly certain, that at least more than fifty years prior to the institution of the suit, the holding became a rent free grant.

"3. Since 1901 (1311 Hijri) the defendants have been in possession of the land and their names have been recorded as tenants in the village papers. Niwazi has stated that he gave the land to his sons, the defendants. There was a transfer, though not evidence in the manner required by law. The proprietor has sued the defendants, thereby showing that he has accepted them as their father's successors. The defendants have acquired the land by consent of the actual owner and by mutation of names in the village papers in 1903. Practically, Niwazi is the only person who can obtain possession back from them. Whether the defendants are such successors of Niwazi as is contemplated by section 158, remains to be decided. As the proprietor has accepted them as rent free grantees, I am of opinion that they should be considered Niwazi's successors within the meaning of section 158.

"I may point out that, even if the defendants were declared proprietors they cannot escape payment; they must pay revenue, in place of rent."

[555] On receipt of the findings the following order was passed:—

BANERJI, J.—In this as well as in the connected appeal No. 707 of 1909, the question arises whether a transferee from a rent-free grantee can be regarded as a successor of the grantee within the meaning of section 158 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The question does not seem to be covered by any authority and is one of some importance. I, therefore, refer this and the connected appeal No. 707 of 1909 to a Bench of two Judges.

Munsh, Gulzari Lal (for Babu Benode Behari), for the appellants.

Mr. A. E. Ryves, for the respondent.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the respondent for the resumption of a rent-free grant. The defence was that under section 158 of the Agra Tenancy Act the defendants had acquired proprietary title by reason of the land having been held rent-free by the original grantee and by two successors to the grantee for a period of upwards of 50 years. It has been found that the grant was made to one Lalji more than 50 years ago, that upon Lalji's death his son, Niwazi made a gift of it to the defendants. It is contended that by the expression "successors to the original grantee", in section 150 of the Agra Tenancy Act, it was intended that the grant must be in the possession of lineal descendants of the original grantee. It may be that the intention of the Legislature was that this should be so, but the word used is "successors," and that word is wide enough to include not only an heir but a transferee also. We have to construe the section as it stands, and we are not competent to place any limitation on the language used by holding that the word 'successors' does not mean successors of every description, including a transferee, but only successors by right of inheritance. The same view was taken by our brother RICHARDS in Second Appeal No. 175 of 1910, decided on the 14th of February, 1911, which has not yet been reported. Accordingly we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Act (Local) No III of 1901 (United Provinces Land Revenue Act), sections 51, 52 and 99—Assignment of Government Revenue—Right of Government to enhance or remit revenue.

An assignee of Government revenue takes the assignment subject to all the rights of Government to assess, enhance, reduce, remit or suspend the revenue.

THIS was a suit brought by certain assignees of Government revenue to recover arrears of revenue payable by the defendants. During the period in respect of which the arrears were claimed a portion of the revenue had been remitted by the Government on account of famine, and the defendants claimed a deduction on account of the portion so remitted. This plea was accepted by the Courts below and the amount decreed to the plaintiffs was reduced accordingly. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court, urging that the Government having assigned the revenue was not competent to grant a remission, and that such remission could not deprive the plaintiffs of their right to the revenue assigned to them.

Pandit Mohan Lal Sandal, for the appellants.

Babu Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the respondents.

BANERJI and GRIFFIN, JJ.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs appellants, who are assignees of Government revenue, to recover from the defendants, who are land-holders, arrears of revenue payable by them. It appears that during the period in respect of which arrears of revenue are claimed, a portion of the revenue was remitted by Government on account of famine. The defendants claimed a deduction of this amount of the arrears claimed. The Courts below have granted the deduction prayed for. Hence this appeal. The contention on the part of the appellants is that the Government having assigned the revenue was not competent to grant a remission, and that such remission could not deprive the plaintiffs of their right to the revenue assigned to them. It appears that the assignment in favour of the plaintiffs was originally made by the Maharaja Scindia and was continued by the British [557] Government. There is nothing to show that under the terms of the assignment it was agreed between the Government and the assignees that there should be no alteration in the amount of the revenue assigned. In the absence of any such agreement, we must hold that the assignees took the assignment subject to the ordinary rights of the Government to assess or reduce, or in seasons of calamity to remit, the whole or a part of the revenue. This is manifest from the provisions of section 52, sub-section (2) of Act No. III of 1901. That sub-section provides that "revenue may be assessed on land, notwithstanding that the revenue, by reason of its having been assigned, released, compounded for or redeemed, is not payable to the Govrnment." Again, in the case of fluvial action the Government has the power under section 99, sub-section (2), to revise the assessment, and the rules framed by the Board of Revenue for such revision contain a distinct provision to the effect that assessment of mahals of which the revenue has been wholly assigned will be liable to revision in the same manner and to the same extent as mahals which pay full revenue, (see rule 56, printed on page 158 of Mr. Agarwala's Edition of the Land Revenue Act). Any other view would cause immense hardship both to landholders and tenants. Under section 51 of the Agra Tenancy Act, where remission of revenue is granted, the land-holder is bound to grant a remission of rent to the extent of twice the amount of the revenue remitted. If the contention of the appellants is right, although under section 51 the land-holder would be bound to grant a remission to his tenants, he himself would be liable, notwithstanding the remission, to pay the full amount of revenue to the assignees of it. It is urged on behalf of the appellants that it is only in the case of revenue payable to Government that a remission can be granted to tenants under section 51, and that therefore land-holders will not be prejudiced. Assuming this contention to be valid, tenants would have no remedy in times of calamity, if the land occupied by them happens to be situated in a locality the revenue of which has been assigned by the Government to a third party. Such surely could not be the intention of the Legislature. In our opinion an assignee of Government revenue takes the assignment subject to all the rights of Government to assess, enhance, reduce, [558] remit or suspend the revenue. The defendants, land-holders, are therefore entitled to the benefit of the remission granted by Government. In this view the Courts below were right, and this appeal must fail. We accordingly dismiss it with costs.

THE facts of this case are as follows :—

One Sewa Ram, being the owner of certain property, executed a will whereby he gave all his property, after the death of himself and his wife Musammat Mendu, to his daughter Bilaso and his nephew Duli Chand. Duli Chand survived the testator, but predeceased Musammat Mendu. The present suit was brought by the heirs of Duli Chand to recover his share of the property of Sewa Ram from Musammat Bilaso. The court of first instance (Subordinate Judge of Bareilly) decreed the claim, and this decree was on appeal confirmed by the Additional District Judge. The defendant Bilaso appealed to the High Court.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal and Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba for the appellant.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji and Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru for the respondents.

STANLEY, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—The sole question raised in this appeal depends upon the true construction of the will of one Sewa Ram. Sewa Ram being the owner of certain property [559] executed his will on the 4th of April, 1881, and thereby gave all his property, after the death of himself and his wife Musammat Mendu, to his daughter Bilaso and his nephew Duli Chand. Duli Chand survived the testator, but predeceased Musammat Mendu. The contention in the appeal is that Duli Chand did not take a vested interest in the property disposed of by the will, but merely a contingent interest, and that he having died before his aunt, his sons are not entitled to succeed to the property. We think that the courts below were right in holding that Duli Chand took a vested interest in the property which was transmissible to his heirs. The point was the subject of decision by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Bhagabati Barmanya v. Kali Charan Singh (1). In that case a will provided that the testator's mother and his wife were to succeed to his property for life, and on their death the sons of his sisters G and A, "that is to say, their sons who are now in existence as also those who may be born hereafter, shall in equal shares hold the said properties in possession and enjoyment by right of inheritance." It was held that the nephews were intended to take vested and transmissible interest on the death of the testator, though their possession and enjoyment was postponed. This decision appears to us to govern the present case. The appeal is therefore devoid of force. We dismiss it with costs.

DEBI SAHAI (Plaintiff) v. SARASWATI AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

[13th April, 1911]

Civil Procedure Code (1882), sections 10, 102 and 103—Suit dismissed for default of appearance—Date fixed, not for hearing of case but for appointment of a guardian to a minor defendant only—Order of dismissal ultra vires.

Consequent on the death of one of the defendants to a suit, the plaintiff applied to bring the heirs of the deceased defendant on to the record, and, as one of them was a minor, nominated as his guardian his elder brother. The brother declined to act as guardian, and the court fixed a date upon which the plaintiff was to appear and nominate another person as guardian. Upon the date so fixed the plaintiff failed to appear, and the court dismissed the entire suit, subsequently also rejecting an application for its restoration.

Held that the court had no jurisdiction to dismiss the whole suit, as the only matter then before it was the appointment of a guardian to the minor defendant.

IN this case, on the death of one of the defendants to the suit the plaintiff applied to bring upon the record the heirs of the deceased defendant, and, as one of them was a minor, nominated his elder brother as his guardian. The elder brother refused to act as guardian, and the court thereupon fixed a date upon which the plaintiff was directed to suggest some other person as guardian. Upon the date so fixed neither the plaintiff nor any one on his behalf appeared, and the court, purporting to act under section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, dismissed the entire suit. An application for restoration made by the plaintiff was also rejected. The plaintiff thereupon appealed to the High Court. The appeal, originally coming before KNOX and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ., was, at their recommendation, laid before a full Bench by order of the Chief Justice of the 4th March, 1911.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal (with him The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Babu Girdhari Lal Agarwala), for the appellant:—

The only matter that was before the court on 16th July, 1907, was the appointment of a guardian. On that date the suit was [561] not up for hearing at all. The Court could have disposed of the matter of appointment of a guardian in any way on that day, but of nothing else. The order dismissing the whole suit is illegal. Even under section 158 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) the court could not have dismissed the suit on that date.

Munshi Gokul Prasad (with him Mr. W. Wallach, Mr. B. E. O'Conor, The Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru, Dr. Satish Chandar Banerji, and Babu Sital Prasad Ghose), for the respondent:

The question for decision is whether the lower court rightly or wrongly refused the application for restoration, and not whether the order dismissing the suit was a proper order. The plaintiff has not alleged or proved any sufficient cause for not appearing on the 16th July. The affidavit filed in support of the application for restoration says nothing more than that neither the plaintiff nor his pleader was present when the case was called on. It does not give any reason for the non-attendance. The lower court was therefore justified in rejecting the application for restoration. Besides, the order dismissing the suit fell within the purview of section 158 of the old Code. It is doubtful whether any application for restoration under section 103 could be made in this case; for the order dismissing the suit was, properly speaking, not one under section 102, as an order of dismissal for default could not be made before the date fixed for hearing. The plaintiff's remedy, therefore, was by way of appeal or revision against the order of dismissal. As to section 151 of the new Code of Civil Procedure, the court's powers are, no doubt, very wide; but they should be exercised where there is no other remedy open to the party.

Babu Surendra Nath Sen, for another respondent:—

Section 151 contemplates cases in which no other remedy is provided by the Code by way of appeal or revision, &c. The plaintiff had a specific remedy, namely, an appeal from the decree which was framed after dismissal of the suit.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, was not heard in reply.

KNOX, BANERJI and KARAMAT HUSAIN, JJ.—The suit in which the order was passed from which this appeal has been filed was a suit for recovery of property of considerable value. The [562] number of persons arrayed as defendants was originally 245. Upon the institution of the suit the court decided to fix a date for settlement of issues. Owing to the great number of defendants the date originally fixed for settlement of issues expired before the parties had been served. While the case was thus pending, one of the defendants, Dularia, died. In lieu of the date originally fixed for the settlement of issues the court fixed the 25th of July, 1907, for the same purpose. In consequence of the death of Dularia an application was made to bring her heirs on the record. It so happened that one of the heirs was a minor, and it was necessary to appoint a guardian for the suit. The plaintiff, thereupon, suggested that the minor's brother, a co-defendant in the suit, should be made guardian. Upon notice going to the said brother, he appears to have noted on the summons that he did not want to act as guardian This fact of his refusing to be guardian was brought before the court on the 12th of July, 1907, and the court then ordered the plaintiff to suggest some one else as a guardian. It granted three days for the plaintiff to decide what course to take and directed the case to be put up for this purpose on the 16th of July, 1907. On the 16th of July, 1907, neither the plaintiff nor any pleader on his behalf appeared in court, and the learned Judge, apparently over-looking the fact that the only matter which he had before him on that day was the appointment of a guardian, treated the absence of the plaintiff as absence on the day fixed for the case, and although that day had not arrived, the court dismissed the case for want of prosecution on behalf of the plaintiff. The same day the plaintiff's pleader filed an application asking that the order passed might be re-considered and the case re-admitted under its original number. This application, was supported by two so-called affidavits. Neither of the affidavits deserves the name of an affidavit. They are mere pieces of waste paper. Be that as it may, the court dismissed the application on the ground that the applicant had failed to show any sufficient cause for his non-appearance. From this order the present appeal has been filed. While it is true that neither the application nor the affidavits disclosed any sufficient cause, sufficient cause was amply manifest on the face of the record, and the court should have taken note [563] of it. The date on which the plaintiff did not appear was not the date for the hearing of the suit itself, and the farthest the court could go was to decide the application which had been put before the court and for the hearing of which the 16th of July, 1907, had been fixed. It is contended that the application was not an application under section 103 of Act XIV of 1882. The order of the learned Subordinate Judge answers that contention fully. He evidently considered it, as his judgment shows, a case to be dealt with under section 102. We allow the appeal; set aside the order passed on the 6th of February, 1909; allow the application for restoration of the case, and direct the court below to restore the suit under its original number and proceed to hear it according to law. The costs will abide the event.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Sir George Knox Mr. Justice Banerji and Mr. Justice Richards.

KESRI AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. GANGA SAHAI AND OTHERS (Defendants).

[13th April, 1911.]

Execution of decree—Joint decree-holders—Application for execution by one on behalf of himself and others—Leave to bid obtained for himself—Purchase by the applicant alone—Rights of co-decree-holders in respect of property so purchased.

One of several joint decree-holders made an application for execution on his own behalf and on behalf of his co-decree-holders, and then alone obtained leave to bid for the property, and purchased it, the purchase money being equal to the amount of his share of the decree. Held, in a suit by the co-decree-holders to recover their shares of the property so purchased, that they were entitled to recover, the equity being on the side of the plaintiffs.

THIS was a re-hearing, on an application for review of judgment, of First Appeal No. 58 of 1907, decided by the same Bench on the 9th of April, 1910, and reported in I. L. R. 33 All. 541.

The facts, so far as they are material to the present decision, were as follows :—A mortgage deed was executed in favour of Debi Din and Bahadur, jointly. Their shares in the mortgage money were, approximately, two-thirds and one-third respectively. The mortgagees obtained a decree for sale. The respondent No. 1, heir of Debi Din, alone applied for execution of the decree; the heirs of Bahadur did not join in the application. It was [564] prayed that the decree might be executed subject to the rights of the heirs of Bahadur. Subsequently, leave was asked for and obtained by the respondent No. 1, to bid at the auction sale of the mortgaged property and he purchased two villages for the sum of Rs. 26,000. This sum was approximately two-thirds of the amount then due upon the decree. The heirs of Bahadur then sued him for possession of their one-third share of the villages ; his defence was that he had purchased the villages for himself, and all that the plaintiffs could get was a one-third share of the purchase money. This was the matter for determination at the re-hearing of the appeal upon an application by the respondent No. 1 for review of judgment.

Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri (with him Mr. W. Wallach and Pandit Mohan Lal Nehru), for the respondent No. 1 :—

The purchase by Ganga Sahai, the respondent No. 1, of the villages for Rs. 26,000 just satisfied his two-thirds share of the decretal amount. The decree was, no doubt, executed by him subject to the rights of the other decree-holders but the question is how far the "benefit" of that execution extends under section 231 of the old Code. It extends only to the recovery by them of the money due to them. They cannot follow the property, but they are, of course, entitled to their share of the purchase money. Before Ganga Sahai obtained leave to bid at the auction sale, all steps which had up to that time been taken by him for execution of the decree must be deemed to have been for the decree as a whole, that is, for them all. But his character as a decree-holder executing the decree for himself and his co-decree-holders altered when he obtained leave to bid. Thenceforth his character was the same as that of a stranger purchasing the property. There was no relation of agent or trustee. There are certain relations in which the benefit must be deemed to enure for them all ; for example, the case of a member of a joint Hindu family purchasing with the joint family funds. But the analogy does not apply to this case; for although the money was advanced by Debi Din and Bahadur jointly, there was a clear specification of their respective shares both in the mortgage-deed and in the decree for sale.

[565] The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal (with him the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya), for the plaintiffs appellants, was not called upon.

KNOX, BANERJI and RICHARDS, JJ.— On the 9th of April, 1910, we allowed the appeal in this case, and, setting aside the decree of the Court below, decreed the plaintiffs' suit with costs. After we had made our decree, Ganga Sahai, one of the respondents, asked us to review our judgment of the 9th of April, 1910, on the ground that the only question which had been argued before us was the pure question of law that arose in the case, and that other questions arising in the case had not been heard and decided. We issued notice to the appellants to show cause why this application should not be granted. No cause having been shown, we allowed the application and directed that the appeal be put up for hearing. To-day the learned advocate for Ganga Sahai, respondent, tried to support the decree of the Court below on the ground that the property in suit was purchased by Ganga Sahai for himself, and the plaintiffs had no title to the same. We find that the issue thus raised was dealt with by the learned Subordinate Judge and his judgment on this point will be found at page 12 of the paper book in F. A. No. 57 of 1907. We agree entirely with what the learned Subordinate Judge there held and adopt the view taken by him. There is no question whatever that the equity in this case lies on the side of the plaintiffs.

A further plea was raised based on section 317 of Act XIV of 1882. This plea was not taken in the Court below and in our opinion is entirely without substance. This is not the case of a benami purchaser.

No other point was pressed before us.

The appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below is set aside and the plaintiff's suit is decreed with costs in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

[13th April, 1911.]

Civil Procedure Code (1908), order XLVII rule 1—Review of judgment—Decisions after judgment sought to be reviewed—"New and important matter."

The plaintiff instituted a suit for ejectment. The defendants pleaded that they were tenants of the plaintiff. The Munsif ordered the defendants to get a declaration of their tenancy. The Assistant Collector declared them to be tenants and the Munsif thereupon dismissed the suit. On appeal, however, the Commissioner set aside the order of the Assistant Collector and this decision was upheld by the Board of Revenue. The plaintiff then applied within 90 days of the decision of the Board of Revenue for review of the Munsif's judgment Held that the judgments of the Commissioner and the Board were "new and important matters" within the meaning of order XLVII, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Waghela Raisangji Shivsangji v. Shaik Masludin (1) and Waman Hari v. Hari Vithal (2) referred to.

[Rel. 13 M. L. T. 225=19 I. C. 214; Ref. 78 I. C. 993; Not fol. 70 I. C. 741=15 L. W; 593=43 M. L. J. 33=1922 M. W. N. 304].

THIS was an application for revision of an order of a Munsif refusing to entertain an application for review of judgment. The facts out of which the application arose appear from the following order of KARAMAT HUSAIN, J. referring the case to a Bench of two Judges :—

"The facts are these :—Ram Lal brought an action against Kalka Prasad and Nathu Singh in ejectment. The defendants pleaded that they were the tenants of plaintiff. The learned Munsif, acting under section 202 of the Agra Tenancy Act, required the defendants to institute within three months a suit in the Revenue Courts for the determination of that question. The Assistant Collector, on the 31st of March, 1909, decided that they were the plaintiff's tenants. The learned Munsif, on the 29th of April, 1909, dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal to the Commissioner it was held on the 17th of July, 1909, that they were not the tenants of the plaintiff, and this decision of the Commissioner was upheld by the Board of Revenue on the 7th of March, 1910. The plaintiff then, on the 2nd of June, 1910, applied to the learned Munsif for the review of his order. He came to the conclusion that there was no sufficient ground for filing the petition of review after ninety days and that the application ought to have been made to the Munsif who dismissed the suit on the 29th of April, 1909. The plaintiff has applied to this Court in revision, and it is urged on his behalf that the learned Munsif failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him, and that there was sufficient cause for not filing an application for review within ninety days. In the course of argument it is said that the reversal of the decision of the Assistant Collector by the Commissioner and the Board [567] of Revenue was 'new and important matter' within the meaning of order 47. rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, and in support of his contention the learned vakil relies on Waghela Raisangji Shivsangji v. Shaikh Masludin (1), and Akbar Khan v. Mahammad Ali Khan (3). The learned vakil for the opposite party says that the setting aside of the decree of the Assistant Collector by the Commissioner is not a ground for revision, and he relies on Amrita Lal v. Madho Das (4), and the remarks of their Lordships in 7 Moore's Indian Appeals at p. 304."

"The point is an important one, and it is desirable to have a ruling of a Bench of two Judges on this point. I therefore refer this case to a Bench of two Judges.

The case was laid before KNOX and BANERJI, JJ.

Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri, for the opposite party.

KNOX and BANERJI, JJ.—The applicant in the case before us, Ram Lal, was plaintiff in the Court below. He instituted a suit in the civil Court for the ejectment of the defendants second party, as trespassers. They met the suit by a plea that they were tenants of the plaintiff. The learned Munsif very properly stayed his hand and required the defendants to institute a suit in the Revenue Court for a determination of the question raised by them. The defendants then went to the Assistant Collector and got from him a decision that they were the tenants of the plaintiff. In accordance with this decision the Munsif dismissed the suit on the 29th of the April, 1909. At the time when he passed this order, an appeal was pending in the Court of the Commissioner from the order of the Assistant Collector. The Commissioner decided that the defendants were not tenants and this decision was upheld by the Board of Revenue. The Munsif ought to have waited until the final decision of the Revenue Court, and on hearing that the order of the Assistant Collector was under appeal, he should have waited still further. The plaintiff, armed with the decisions in his favour, applied to the successor of the Munsif for review of the order passed on the 29th of April 1909. We do not understand why the plaintiff waited so long before he went to the Munsif. It is true that he came within [568] ninety days of the decision of the Board of Revenue, but in matters of this kind applications for review should be put in as early as possible. The Munsif before whom the application came refused to entertain it, and we are asked to set aside his order on the ground that he failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him. The question before us turns upon one point, namely, whether the decisions of the Commissioner and Board of Revenue can properly be held to be new and important matter within the meaning of order XLVII, rule 1. No judgment of this Court which is exactly in point has been placed before us. There is, however, a judgment of the Bombay High Court in Waghela Raisangji Shivsangji v. Shaik Masludin (1), which was approved of in the subsequent case of Waman Hari v. Hari Vithal (2). We cannot find that the view taken by the Bombay High Court has been disapproved of or dissented from by any of the other High Courts. The case before us is one in which we think that for the ends of justice we ought to allow a review, and acting upon the precedents quoted above, we allow the application, set aside the order of the Munsif, and send back the case to him with directions to readmit the suit under its original number and to dispose of it according to law. We make no order as to costs.

Application allowed.

HAMID-UL-LAH KHAN AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. NAJJO (Plaintiff).*

[18th April, 1911.]

Act No. XV of 1877 (Indian Limitation Act), schedule II, article 104—Muhammadan law—Dower—Wife put into possession of husband's property in his lifetime and subsequently dispossessed—Suit by her heir for balance of dower debt—Limitation.

Held that article 104 of schedule II of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, (article 104, schedule I, Act IX of 1908) does not apply to a suit by one of the heirs of a Muhammadan widow, who, having been put into possession of her husband's property during his life-time in lieu of her dower is dispossessed thereof subsequently to his death.

[569] THIS was a suit for recovery of the plaintiff's share of the dower debt due to one Musammat Waziran at the time of the death of her husband, Faiz ullah Khan. The facts are these:—Faiz-ullah Khan died childless in December, 1895, leaving his widow, Musammat Waziran, him surviving. Prior to his death, Faiz-ullah put his widow into possession of his estate in order that she might satisfy her dower debt, stated to be Rs. 5,000, thereout. In 1906, before the dower debt was discharged, Waziran made a transfer of the estate which led to litigation between her and the other heirs of Faiz-ullah. During this litigation Waziran, died, and the other heirs of Faiz-ullah Khan took possession of three-fourths of the estate and obtained a decree declaring them entitled to pre-empt Waziran's one-fourth share. The plaintiff, Musammat Najjo, is one of two sisters of Musammat Waziran, and she instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for recovery of her share of the balance of the dower debt remaining due to Musammat Waziran at the time of her death.

The Court of first instance (Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur) decreed the claim, and this decision was upheld on appeal by the District Judge. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Babu Durga Charan Banerji and Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba, for the appellants.

STANLEY, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—This was a suit for recovery of the plaintiff's share of the dower debt due to one Musammat Waziran at the time of the death of her husband, Faiz-ullah Khan. The facts are these:—Faiz-ullah Khan died childless in December, 1895, leaving his widow, Musammat Waziran, him surviving. Prior to his death, Faiz-ullah put his widow into possession of his estate in order that she might satisfy her dower debt, stated to be Rs. 5,000, thereout. * Second Appeal No. 844 of 1910 from a decree of E. O. E. Leggatt, District Judge of Saharanpur, dated the 4th of May, 1910, confirming a decree of Maula Bakhsh, Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur, dated the 11th of June, 1908.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

33 A. 568=8 A. L. J 578=10 I. C. 282.

Both the lower Courts have decreed her claim. Hence this appeal. The principal ground of appeal is based upon the Indian Limitation Act. The contention of the defendants appellants is that Waziran's dower became pavable in December, 1895, when Faiz-ullah died, and that the suit should have been brought within three years from that date under article 104 of schedule II to the Limitation Act. We are not prepared to accept this plea. It is found by the Courts below that Musammat Waziran was put into possession of her husband's estate by her husband for satisfaction of her dower debt. She and her heirs were therefore entitled to remain in possession until the dower debt was satisfied. Despite the agreement between Faiz-ullah Khan and his wife, the defendants appellants wrongfully took possession of the estate of Faizullah, and thereby committed a breach of the agreement entered into between him and Waziran. Having thus lost the property which was appropriated by Faiz-ullah to the payment of his wife's dower, it appears to us that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain this suit for recovery of her share of the dower remaining due to Musammat Waziran at the time of her death out of the assets of Faiz-ullah Khan in the hands of the defendants. The balance of the dower due to Waziran was a debt payable out of the estate of Faiz-ullah Khan and the defendants having wrongfully appropriated the estate which was liable to discharge this debt cannot be permitted to hold the estate without discharging the liabilities attaching to it. Wrongful possession was only taken in 1906. This suit was brought in 1907. Consequently it is not barred by any article of limitation. The suit is not in our opinion governed by article 104 of schedule II to the limitation Act, but is a suit, the right to bring which accrued when the defendants took possession of the estate of Faiz-ullah Khan and refused to pay the amount due to the plaintiff in respect of her share of Waziran's dower. We therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

AMINA BEGAM AND OTHERS (DEFENDANTS) v. H. H. THE NAWAB OF RAMPUR (Plaintiff).*

[19th April, 1911.]

Evidence—Promissory note—Unstamped promissory note executed in Rampur in favour of the Nawab of Rampur—Suit on such note in British India—Lex loci contractus—Rampur Stamp Law, sections 52, proviso (c), and 53.

Certain moneys having been advanced by the Nawab of Rampur, a promissory note was accepted as security in favour of "The Nawab of Rampur" and bearing no stamp. The Nawab, being examined on commission stated :—"This debt is due to me personally, and, ordinarily speaking, a debt which is due to me is due to the State, and a debt which is due to the State is due to me: but the said amount I advanced from my own funds." According to the Stamp law of Rampur a document executed in favour of the State did not require to be stamped. Held that the lex loci contractus had to be applied and that the note in question not being drawn in favour of the Nawab in his private capacity did not require to be stamped.

* First Appeal No 109 of 1909 from a decree of Pandit Girraj Kishore Datt, Subordinate Judge of Bareilly, dated the 21st of December, 1908.

38 A. 571 = 10 I. C. 257 = 8 A. L. J. 566.

THIS was an appeal arising out of a suit on a promissory note for Rs. 45,000 executed on the 13th of July, 1906, by one Abdul Ghafur then prime minister of the Rampur State in favour of "the Nawab of Rampur." The promissory note was executed in Rampur, and no stamp was put upon it at the time. When the present suit, which was brought against the heirs of the debtor, was instituted at Bareilly, the vakil for the plaintiff stamped it with a one-anna stamp and filed it in Court.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit, holding that so long as the note bore the stamp required by the law of British India, it was immaterial whether the provisions of the Stamp Law at Rampur had been complied with.

The defendants appealed.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the appellants, produced a copy of the Stamp Act of Rampur, which he said was a public document and could be admitted under section 74 of the Indian Evidence Act, and could be admitted as proof of the actual law of the State under sections 78 and 84 of that Act.

(Mr. B. E. O'Conor, for the respondent, objected to the admission of this book in evidence here).

The point for decision was, whether a promissory note, which was not a valid instrument according to the law of Rampur when it was executed, could be stamped subsequently in British [572] India and support a suit brought for the recovery of money alleged to be due under it. He submitted that the law of the place of contract should be taken into consideration and cited Story, Conflict of Laws, Ed. 4, sections 260, 392; Foote Private International Jurisprudence, Ed. 3, 374; Dicey, Conflict of Laws, Ed. 1, rule 147, page 549; Alves v. Hodgson (1). Clegg v. Levy (2), Bristow Sequeville (3). The Court below had relied on the case of In the goods of McAdam (4). That was a case of a power of attorney which was executed in England to operate in India, and was not stamped there, but was admitted in India. A power of attorney stood on a different footing from a promissory note. Unless the note was a good promissory note in Rampur, it could not be validated by subsequent stamping in British India.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor (Babu Jagindro Nath Chaudhri and Babu Lalit Mohan Banerji with him) for the respondent :—

Before a suit relating to a foreign note can be dismissed, the Court must satisfy itself that the document on which it is based is void according to the law of that foreign State and not merely inadmissible in evidence; Chitty, Contracts, Ed. 14, 99. The persons sued on the note were residents of British India; they had property situate in British India, and it was a resident of Rampur who was seeking to enforce a contract against them. Under such circumstances the lower Court was right in disregarding the law of Rampur.

STANLEY, C. J., and GRIFFIN, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit on a promissory note executed on the 13th of July, 1906, by Nawab Abdul Ghafur, the then prime minister of the Rampur State, in favour of His Highness the Nawab of Rampur. The document was executed at Rampur on an unstamped paper. The present suit was instituted on the 5th of March, 1908, against the heirs of Abdul Ghafur, who are residents of British India. The document in question, before being put in Court, was stamped by the pleader who appeared for the plaintiff with a one anna British India stamp. One of the pleas taken by the defendants in the court below was that the document was void by reason of its not being stamped at the time of execution [573] and therefore could not be made the basis of a suit. The court below overruled this plea, holding that it was immaterial whether or not the promissory note in suit complied with the provisions of the Stamp Law of the Rampur State, and that it was enough if it be stamped according to the Indian Stamp Act. The learned Subordinate Judge quoted in support of his view the ruling of In the goods of McAdam (1). That case related to a power of attorney which was executed in England and which was stamped in British India. The court held that the power of attorney which was stamped according to the provisions of the Indian Stamp Act was valid for the purposes it was intended to meet. The court below has decreed the plaintiff's suit in full against the property left by the deceased Abdul Ghafur. The defendants appeal. We do not think we can dispose of this appeal satisfactorily without a finding on the issues which we shall state later on. We are not disposed to accept the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge as to the immateriality of the Stamp Law of the Rampur State applying to the promissory note in suit. There is a considerable current of authority to the contrary, and various authorities have been cited to us by the learned advocate on behalf of the appellants, e.g., Story on the Conflict of Laws, 4th edition, page 392 ; Foote on Private International Jurisprudence, 3rd edition, page 374 ; Dicey on the Conflict of Laws, 1st edition, rule 147, page 349.

We, therefore, under the provisions of order 41, rule 25, refer the following issues :—

(1) Whether according to the law of the Rampur State binding on the parties to the suit a promissory note requires to be stamped to give it legal effect? (2) If not so stamped, is it absolutely void? (3) If not absolutely void, what is its force and effect according to the law in force in the Rampur State?

Such further evidence as may be necessary for the determination of these issues may be taken. Ten days will be allowed for objections after the return of the findings.

On receipt of the findings, which were in favour of the defendants appellants.

[574] Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri, (with him Mr. B. E. O'Conor and Babu Lalit Mohan Banerji), for the respondent, submitted that the loan was advanced by and the note was executed in favour of the Nawab of Rampur and not Sir Muhammad Hamid Ali Khan Bahadur, G. C. S. I. It was a note executed in favour of the State and did not require any stamp, as provided by proviso (c) to section 52, Rampur Stamp Law. If the money had been advanced from the Treasury, the note would have been in exactly this form. It was on the face of it in favour of the plaintiff as Nawab of Rampur and not in favour of him in any capacity other than that of the ruler of Rampur. He cited Bristow v. Sequeville (2). Section 14 of the Rampur Stamp Law authorized the Nawab to remit the duty on any instrument. It must be assumed that he did remit the duty, if any was required, on the instrument the subject-matter of the present suit. Further, section 53 of the Rampur law provided that when a document which required a stamp but was not stamped, was received in evidence, the admission could not be challenged in appeal. The promissory note here was so received and the defendants could not challenge that admission in appeal.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the appellant, argued that the money having been advanced from the private funds of the plaintiff, as admitted by him, the promissory note required a stamp. The Nawab held a dual capacity, one that of the ruler of the State, and the other that of private person. Section 52, proviso (c), of the Rampur Stamp Law exempted all documents which were executed in favour of the State. Here the note was not executed in favour of the State but in favour of the Nawab in his personal capacity, and the money was not advanced from the public treasury. It was, therefore, not merely inadmissible in evidence, not having been stamped in accordance with Rampur law, but absolutely void. Section 52, Rampur Stamp Law, enacts that the instrument shall not be acted upon. It is not a rule of evidence merely. The promissory note was therefore for all purposes void. The reference to section 14 was an after-thought, it not having been either alleged or proved in the lower court that the duty was remitted under any order of the [575] Nawab. Section 53 could not help the plaintiff because the note was never received in evidence by any court in Rampur. The definition of "duly stamped" in section 2, clause (10) of the Indian Act showed that section 36 of that Act could have no application.

STANLEY, C. J. and GRIFFIN, J.—The subject-matter of this litigation is a promissory note executed on the 13th of July, 1906, by Nawab Abdul Ghafur, the then prime minister of Rampur State, in favour of His Highness the Nawab of Rampur. The note was executed at Rampur and was on unstamped paper. Nawab Abdul Ghafur having died, the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted on the 5th of March, 1908, against his heirs, who are residents of British India. Before the promissory note was filed in court, it was stamped by the pleader for the plaintiff with a one anna stamp of British India. One of the defences set up by the defendants was that the document was void by reason of its not having been stamped at the date on which it was signed, and therefore could not be made the basis of a suit.

The Court below overruled this plea, holding that it was immaterial whether or not the promissory note complied with the provisions of the Stamp Law of the Rampur State, and that it was a valid document being stamped according to the Indian Stamp Act.

We were not disposed to take this view and therefore referred several issues to the court below for determination. They were as follows:—

(1) Whether according to the law of the Rampur State, binding on the parties to the suit, a promissory note must be stamped in order to have legal effect?

(2) If not so stamped, is it absolutely void, and

(3) If not absolutely void, what was its force in the Rampur State?

It was contended before the court below that the promissory note in question was not admissible in evidence not having been stamped in accordance with the law of the Rampur State. Section 52 of the Rampur Stamp Act prescribes that any "instrument chargeable with duty but not duly stamped, shall not be [576] admitted in evidence for any purpose by any person having by law, or consent of the parties, authority to receive evidence or shall be acted upon, registered or authenticated by any such person unless such instrument is duly stamped." There are several provisos to this section and amongst others the following, (c) " When any instrument is completed by or in favour of the State, or if it bears a certificate under section 46, then it will be admitted in evidence," &c. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the promissory note having been executed in favour of his Highness the Nawab of Rampur, it was admissible in evidence according to the aforesaid proviso. The Court below held that the note was given to the Nawab in his private capacity for money lent from his private purse and not from the State Treasury and that therefore the proviso above referred to did not apply. It further held under the law of the Rampur State binding on the parties, a promissory note requires to be stamped to have legal effect, and that the promissory note sued on not having been stamped was for all practical purpose absolutely void.

Objections have been taken to these findings under order XLI, rule 26. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the note was completed in favour of the Rampur State and was admissible in evidence and that the Court below was wrong in holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to the benefit of the aforesaid proviso to section 52.

His Highness the Nawab was examined on commission and he deposed to the circumstances under which the note was executed. In answer to the question whether the debt was due to the State or to himself he said:—"This debt is due to me personally, and, ordinarily speaking, a debt which is due to me is due to the State and the debt which is due to the State is due to me. But the said amount I advanced from my own funds." The note is in the following terms:—"I promise to pay to His Highness the Nawab of Rampur on demand the sum of Rs. 45,000, value received, " and is signed by Abdul Ghafur and dated the 13th July, 1906. The argument addressed to us, on behalf of the defendants is that the Nawab occupies a dual capacity, namely, that of ruler of the State of Rampur [577] and that of a private individual independent of the State, and that the money not having been advanced from the funds in the treasury but from money which His Highness had by him at the time the note cannot be regarded as having been completed in favour of the State. We are unable to accede to this contention. The note was drawn in favour of the Nawab of Rampur, and it is not suggested that if the loan had been a loan from the State, the promissory note would have assumed a different form. But it is said that the money was not taken from the treasury but from moneys in the hands of His Highness, and that therefore the note cannot be regarded as having been made in favour of the State. We think that this is too narrow a view of the case. As His Highness in his evidence stated "the debt which is due to me is due to the State, and the debt which is due to the State is due to me." If the note was completed in favour of the State, then the proviso to section 52 is applicable, and the note was in our judgment, admissible in evidence, it being a note in accordance with the law in existence at the place of contract.

The instrument, it is to be observed, is drawn in favour of the Nawab of Rampur, not in favour of Nawab Sir Muhammad Hamid Ali Khan Bahadur, G. C. S. I. It is on the face of it in favour of the plaintiff as Nawab of Rampur and not in favour of him in any capacity other than that of the ruler of Rampur State. For these reasons we think that the claim of the plaintiff was rightly decreed. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that, even if the instrument required a stamp, inasmuch as it was received in evidence in the Courts below, its admission as material evidence cannot be called in question in appeal on the ground that the instrument was not duly stamped (see section 53 of the Rampur Stamp Act). It was also contended that under section 14 of the Rampur Stamp Act His Highness the Nawab has power to remit the duty on any instrument, and that under the circumstances of this case it must be assumed that His Highness in accepting an unstamped promissory note remitted the duty payable in respect of it. In view of our finding on the main issue it is unnecessary to determine the two last mentioned points.

[578] We think that there is no force in the fifth ground of appeal. The second, third and fourth grounds of appeal were not pressed.

For the foregoing reasons the plaintiff is in our judgment entitled to hold the decree which he has obtained. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[22nd April, 1911.]

Jurisdiction—Offence committed in British India—Appeal from conviction—Transfer pending appeal of place where offence was committed to a native state.

An offence was committed within British India. Certain persons were convicted thereof and appealed against their conviction to the appropriate Court in British India. Pending the hearing of their appeal, however, the place where the offence had been committed was constituted part of an independent native State. Held that this subsequent transfer of territory did not deprive the Court in which the appeal had been filed of its jurisdiction to hear it.

[Fol. 34 All. 118; Ref. 34 All. 451.]

IN this case three persons had been convicted and sentenced under section 325, of the Indian Penal Code, by a Magistrate of the Mirzapur district. They appealed against their convictions and sentences to the Sessions Judge of Mirzapur. Pending the appeal, however, the place where the offences had been committed, which had been at the time British territory, was transferred to the newly-created State of Benares. The Sessions Judge therefore returned the memorandum of appeal to be presented to the proper Court of that State. Against this order the appellants applied in revision to the High Court.

Mr. E. A. Howard, for the applicants.

No one appeared for the Crown.

RICHARDS, C. J. and TUDBALL, J. :—The facts of the matter out of which this application in revision has arisen are shortly as follows:—The three applicants were charged under section 325, Indian Penal Code. Applicants Nos. 1 and 3 were sentenced to [579] two years' rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 100 fine, and applicant No. 2 to one year's rigorous imprisonment. The particular place where the offence was alleged to have been committed was then in British India, but by virtue of a notification of the Government of India certain territory, including the place where the alleged offence was committed, has been constituted an independent Native State. The applicants appealed from the conviction to the learned Sessions Judge prior to the constitution of the Native State, as already mentioned. Before, however, the appeal came on for hearing, the transfer of the territory had been actually carried into effect. The learned Sessions Judge, thereupon, by an order, dated the 8th April, 1911, returned the memorandum of appeal to the applicants for presentation in the proper Court in the Benares State, holding that in the events that had happened, he had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. The present application is for the revision of this order. In our opinion the learned Sessions Judge is wrong. The offence was committed in British India, the appeal was presented to the proper Court, the appellants are at present confined in a jail in British India. Under these circumstances we consider that the learned Sessions Judge had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. The learned Sessions Judge says, "it" (that is, the Court of Sessions Judge of Mirzapur) "is no longer a Court of appeal for which persons convicted of offences committed outside British India can ordinarily come." The learned Sessions Judge has overlooked the fact that the alleged offence in the present case was committed in British India. We do not think that the mere fact that the particular locality has ceased to be British India before the appeal has been determined, takes away the jurisdiction of the learned Sessions Judge. We accordingly allow the application, and set aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge with directions to re-admit the appeal and proceed to hear the same.

* Criminal Revision No. 148 of 1911, from an order of W. R. G. Moir, Sessions Judge of Mirzapur, dated the 8th of April, 1911.

Application allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

33 A. 580=8 A. L. J. 692 =10 I. C. 353.

THE facts of this case were briefly as follows:—

Fazal Imam and others executed a mortgage on the 18th of February 1896, hypothecating their muafi and zamindari property in a certain village in favour of Mannu Lal. The plaintiff sued on foot of his mortgage; the defence was that the property mortgaged was a pension and the suit was not maintainable without obtaining a certificate from the Collector, and that according to the conditions of the wajib-ul-arz the land could not be transferred. The lower Court held that under sections 4, 6 and 11 of the Pensions Act, the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit regarding the property, which was a muafi without a certificate from the Collector of the district and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, (with him Babu Piari Lal Banerji and Pandit Uman Shankar Bajpai), for the appellant, contended that the property mortgaged was not a pension within the meaning of section 3 of the Pensions Act. The mere fact that the Government has remitted the revenue does not make the zamindari a pension. He cited Babaji Hari v. Rajaram Ballal (1), Ravji Narayan Mondlik v. Dadaji Bapuji Desai (2), Balvant Ramchandra Natu v. The Secretary of State (3), [581] Panchanadayyan v. Nilakandayyan (4), Lachmi Narain v. Makund Singh (5) and Ganpat Rao v. Anand Rao (6).

The entry in the wajib-ul-arz was a mere surplusage, there being no condition about inalienability in the original grant.

The Hon'ble Nawab Muhammad Abdul Majid, for the respondents, submitted that the land revenue of the property being remitted, the property motgaged came within the definition of pension. The wajib-ul arz clearly prohibited all transfers of property.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, replied.

RICHARDS, C. J. and BANERJI, J.:—This appeal arises out of a suit on foot of a mortgage. The amount due to the plaintiff was a very large sum, namely, Rs. 27,000 odd. He abandoned part of his claim and only sought to recover Rs. 10,000. The property which is the subject of the mortgage is referred to in a document called "proceedings in the Revenue Court, district Banda, dated the 4th of December, 1840." This document will be found printed at page 1 of the respondents' book. The document recites the history of the village, and some ancient sanads would appear to have been produced at the time. It seems that a grant of the village was first made by one Raja Chattar Lal in favour of one Pahari Bhand, who was the ancestor of the defendants. This sanad was succeeded by others, long prior to the establishment of British rule. The document, we referred to, concludes with the following remarks:—"The sanads which have been produced were also taken into consideration. Therefore, under section 9 of the Circular Letter as also under other sections of the said letter, this village seems fit to be held as a muafi from generation to generation as heretofore. I therefore concur in the opinion of the Deputy Sahib as to the maintenance of the muafi." Then follows the order "that this village be maintained as muafi as before." The village has been held as a muafi village up to the present day. It is admitted that the mortgage was made and executed; but the defendants, mortgagors, plead that a suit could not be maintained without a certificate under section 6 of the Pensions Act, XXIII [582] of 1871, and secondly, that it was not competent for the co-sharers to transfer the property at all.

An extract from the wajib-ul-arz of 1880 was given in evidence by the defendants. There the entry is to the following effect:—The jama of this mahal was remitted for the support of the zamindars. It is still remitted by the Government. No co-sharer is competent to transfer property. The learned Subordinate Judge considered that a certificate was necessary under the provisions of the Pensions Act. In our opinion he was wrong. Section 4 provides that no Civil Court shall entertain any suit relating to any pension or grant of money, or land revenue, conferred or made by the British or any former Government. It seems to us clear that the grant of the land was not a "pension." The expression "grant of money" or "land revenue" is defined in section 3 of the Act as including anything payable on the part of the Government in respect of any right, privilege, perquisite or office. Section 8 of the Act throws some light upon what was meant by pensions and grants by Government of money or land revenue, because it is there provided that they are to be paid by the Collector, Deputy Commissioner or other authorized officer. The grant of these villages was certainly not a grant of land revenue within the ordinary meaning of that expression. It is contended, however, that inasmuch as Government remitted the revenue, they must be said to have granted it. We do not think that this is the true meaning of the expression in the Act. If it were, all muafi holdings would fall within the purview of the Act. It is, however, conceded that ordinary muafi can be and is daily trasferred both by way of sale and mortgage, and that the Pensions Act does not apply to ordinary muafi. A Bench of this Court held in the case of Ganpat Rao v. Anand Rao (1) that a grant of land revenue free was not a grant of land revenue within the meaning of the Act. On appeal their Lordships of the Privy Council did not differ from the finding of this Court. The same view was taken in the case of Lachmi Narain v. Makund Singh (2).

[583] The only question which remains is the effect of the entry in the wajib-ul-arz. It seems to us that this entry standing by itself cannot have the effect of making property which prima facie is transferable, untransferable. We do not know under what circumstances the entry was made. In the proceedings of 1840, to which we have referred, there is not the smallest reference to any restraint upon alienation on the grantees. In our opinion the decision of the Court below was wrong.

We, therefore, allow the appeal; set aside the decree of the Court below, and decree the plaintiff's claim with costs in both Courts. We fix six months from this date for payment and direct that the decree be drawn up in the terms of order XXXIV, rule 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Criminal Procedure Code, section 526—Transfer—Riot—Cross cases before same Court—Opinion expressed by Court on evidence in one case no ground for considering it incompetent to try the other.

The fact that a Court before which there are pending two cross cases of riot has, on the trial of the first case, expressed opinions to some extent unfavourable to the accused in the second case is no good ground for holding that the Court is incompetent to try the second case. Asimaddi v. Gobinda Baidya (1) referred to.

[Ref. 23 I. C. 205=15 Cr. L. J. 353 ; Fol : 1 Pat. L. J. 399=37 I. C. 159.]

THE facts of this case are, briefly, as follows:—Two cross cases of riot were sent for trial before the Joint Magistrate of Benares—one faction, Adit Narain, Baij Nath and Prag Dat Singh, on charges under sections 147 and 304, and the other, Hargobind and others, on a charge under section 147. The case of Adit Narain and others was taken up first. The Magistrate committed one member of this party to the Court of Sessions and discharged two of the accused. In his order of discharge the Joint Magistrate observed: —" The aggressors in this case were undoubtedly Hargobind and his party." On the strength of this remark Hargobind and others applied to the High Court for the transfer of the case against them.

[584] Mr. W. Wallach, for the applicants.

The Government Advocate (A. E. Ryves), for the Crown.

TUDBALL, J. : —This is an application for transfer. The case is on all fours with Miscellaneous Case No. 141 of 1909. † The latter case, if anything, is much stronger than the present case. As in that case, so in the present, two parties have been put upon their trial for offences of rioting. The Magistrate has on the trial of one of the parties expressed a certain opinion on the evidence that was before him and has committed one member of the party to the Court of Sessions for trial. The trial of the opposite party is now before him. The basis of the present application is that the Magistrate has already expressed an opinion that the present applicants were the aggressors.

The matter is similar to the case of Asimaddi v. Gobinda Baidya (1). Sufficient reason, therefore, for granting this application has not been shown. The Magistrate will keep in mind the fact that he must act simply and solely on the evidence which is laid before him in the course of this trial The application is rejected.

* Miscellaneous No. 60 of 1911.

† The order in this case was as follows :—

RICHARDS, J :—

This is an application for transfer. The ground for transfer is that the learned Magistrate has already heard a cross case against the other party to an alleged riot. It is said that the learned Magistrate already discharged the other party holding that the present applicants or their party were the aggressors and that the other party merely acted in self-defence. If this application were granted, it would amount to a decision that in no case should any Magistrate decide a case of riot to which there are two parties.

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of STANLEY, C. J., in F. A. No. 177 of 1908.

The first appeal was heard by a Bench consisting of STANLEY, C.J., and BANERJI, J., who delivered the following judgments: —

STANLEY, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of what is alleged to be a mortgage, dated the 29th of August, 1852, executed by the predecessors in title of the plaintiffs against the representatives of the alleged mortgagees.

The Court below dismissed the plaintiff's suit finding the document in question was an out and out sale deed and not a mortgage. Against this decision the present appeal has been preferred on the ground that upon a true construction of the document in question and another document of the 8th of September, 1852, the transaction evidenced by them was a mortgage by way of conditional sale.

In the document of the 29th August, 1852, the entire zamindari of a village called Murlipur Phul, which is stated therein to belong to the executants by right of inheritance, was conveyed [586] to Ilahi Bakhsh and others in consideration of a sum of Rs. 5,500. The operative part of the document runs as follows :—

" We have now sold the entire 20 biswas zamindari property aforesaid together with all the rights and interests appertaining thereto . . . for a sum of Rs. 5,500, to Ilahi Bakhsh, Abdul Rahim, Abdul Karim and Abdul Hakim . . . . . and the aforesaid vendees purchased the aforesaid property from us in consideration of the aforesaid amount. The sale is valid, legal, lawful and enforceable. Accordingly the proposal and acceptance have taken place between the parties. We have received

I see no sufficient reason for granting this application for transfer.

At the same time the Magistrate will bear in mind when hearing the case against the applicants that the case is to be decided on evidence produced in Court before him and not upon anything he may have heard outside Court or on any opinion he may have formed in the course of the other case.

I reject the application.

the whole of the consideration in respect of the property sold from the aforesaid vendees and have brought the same to our use. We have put the vendees into possession and enjoyment of the aforesaid property together with all the cesses and revenue."

This document was presented for registration on the 18th of May, 1853, by the executants, or persons representing them, and the receipt of the consideration was admitted before the registering officer.

On the 5th of September following an agreement was entered into between Ilahi Bakhsh, Abdul Rahim, Abdul Karim and Abdul Hakim, with the executants of the document of the 29th of August, 1852, in which that document is recited as being a purchase of the village in question, and then an agreement for resale is stated in the following terms:—

"As, we, the executants, are now willing to help and treat with kindness the vendors, we the executants of our own free will do hereby covenant and give in writing that if the aforesaid vendors after the lapse of 9 to 10 years from the date of the execution of the aforesaid sale-deed, do pay to us the purchase money as entered in the sale-deed, i. e., the sum of Rs. 5,500 out of their own pocket without mortgaging or selling their property to other persons, we shall forthwith execute a fresh sale deed on receipt of the sale consideration entered in this document and get mutation of names effected in the revenue papers, we shall never deviate from what we have agreed upon. In the event of our refusal they have power to deposit into the treasury attached to the Court the amount of consideration entered in the sale-deed, and after the institution of suit in Court to purchase their property anew. Further, if the aforesaid persons be not ready to purchase the property and to pay the purchase money within the aforesaid time, they shall have no claim to the aforesaid property after the expiry of the period of ten years."

This agreement was presented for registration by the executants on the 19th of May, 1853, that is, the day after the date of registration of the earlier document. I may observe the documents of the kind were not at this time compulsorily registrable.

[587] The learned Judge after a review of the authorities held that the document of the 29th August, 1852, was not a mortgage but an out and out sale, and that any claim on foot of the subsequent document of the 5th of September, 1852, was barred by limitation.

This appeal has been preferred, and the contention of the learned advocate for the appellants is that the two documents must be read together, and that, being so read, they are evidence of a mortgage by way of conditional sale, and that the case is governed by the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balkishen v. Legge (1). If his contention be well-founded, then the plaintiffs appellants are entitled to redeem and to have an account from the defendants of the rents and profits of the property from the year 1852 up to the present time.

On the other hand, it is contended that the two documents are evidence of two different transactions, one being an out and out sale, the other an agreement to resell within a limited time, and that the case is governed by the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (2).

In my opinion this last contention is well founded. I am unable to distinguish the case from that of Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din. In that case the two documents were contemporaneous, being dated the 20th February 1835. By the first document Alam Singh and others, who professed to be the proprietors of certain property, declared that they had of their own accord absolutely sold the entire property to Ganga Din in consideration of a sum of Rs. 4,000 Then on the same day another document was executed by which Ganga Din after the recital of the deed of purchase added :—" I have, as a matter of favour, mercy, kindness and indulgence, executed this deed, and do hereby stipulate that if all these vendors will, within a period of ten years from the date of this deed pay in a lump sum and without interest the whole amount specified above, I shall accept the same and cancel this valid sale. During the aforesaid term I shall remain in possession, collect the rents, enjoy the profits and be liable for loss ; the vendors shall have no concern [588] whatever. I shall not claim interest from the vendors. Nor will they demand profits from me after the expiry of the term. In case the whole of the principal is not paid the vendors shall not be able to cancel the sale by payment of the principal." Sir BARNES PEACOCK, who delivered the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, held, reversing the decisions of the Courts below, that it was clear that "this case was not one of the mortgagor and mortgagee but one of an absolute sale with a right to repurchase within a period of ten years." In that case, it will be observed, both the documents were executed on the same day, which lent colour to the contention that the two transactions were really one transaction. In the case before us there was an interval of 7 days between the execution of the two documents, and the registration of the first document was effected on the 18th of May, 1853, while the registration of the agreement was on the following day. From this it may reasonably be inferred that the parties intended that the transactions should be kept separate and distinct. The documents taken together do not on the face of them constitute a mortgage; and assuming that they are to be read together, there is nothing in them to indicate that they represented a mortgage transaction. Prima facie an absolute conveyance containing nothing to show that the relationship of debtor and creditor is to exist between the parties, does not cease to be an absolute conveyance merely because the vendor stipulates that he shall have a right to repurchase. But there was in this case no stipulation on the part of the vendor that he should have a right to repurchase. It was the executants who undertook to reconvey out of kindness to the vendors, just as in Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din, the vendees " as a matter of favour, mercy, kindness and indulgence " stipulated that their vendors should have that right.

The learned advocate for the appellants strongly relied upon a passage contained in the agreement of the 5th of September, 1852, which runs as follows: —

"In the event of our refusal (i.e., the refusal of the vendees to reconvey) they (the vendors) shall have power to deposit into the treasury attached to the Court the amount of consideration entered in the sale deed and after the institution of a suit in Court to purchase their property again."

[589] His contention is that this provision is a strong indication that the transaction was one coming within the purview of Bengal Regulation I of 1798, a Regulation to prevent fraud and injustice in conditional sales of land under deeds of bai-bil-wafa or other deeds of the same nature. By that Regulation the mortgagor under deeds of this description was empowered to deposit the amount due on or before the stipulated date in the Diwani Adawlat of the city or zillah in which the land might be situate and redeem the property.

Reliance was placed on the language in question in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Balkishen Das v. Legge. In that case Legge executed in favour of Balkishen Das and another, a firm of bankers in Benares, a deed of sale of his estate, the price stated being Rs. 1,50,000. The consideration was not paid in cash, but consisted in part of money unpaid upon a previous mortgage to the banking firm effected on the 8th of April, 1872, and the rest of the consideration was a balance, retained by the banking firm, of the amount then due on an estimate of expenses for conducting certain factories which they financed for the plaintiff. A second document was executed by the banking firm to the plaintiff on the same day whereby the firm agreed to resell the property to Legge if he paid on the 1st of March, 1876, the sum of Rs. 1,65,000, and it was agreed that if the buyers or their heirs should raise any objection to receive the money and relinquish the property, the vendor should be competent to deposit the amount in cash in the treasury by virtue of the agreement and obtain possession of the property. It was further stipulated that if the estimate of the expenditure on the indigo factories should be varied by consent from year to year, then the vendor should be liable to pay along with the sum specified above whatever sum may be found to be due by him at this time. Their Lordships held that there were contained in the two documents indications that the parties intended to effect a mortgage by conditional sale, and that redemption had been rightly decreed in the Courts below. Lord DAVEY, who delivered the judgment of their Lordships, in the course of his judgment, pointed out that mortgages by conditional sale under various names were a [590] common form of mortgage in India, and that this form was introduced to enable Muhammadans contrary to the precepts of their religion, to lend money at interest and obtain security for principal and interest, and that therefore one would expect to find that the transaction would be made to assume the appearance of a sale. Referring to the case of Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din, he observed :—"Their Lordships decided that case on the language of the deeds in question, which they evidently considered showed that the transaction was not such a transaction as is described in the Regulation of 1806, and there was therefore no right of redemption after the expiry of the date fixed." He then later on observes that "the documents in question contain important indications of the intention of the parties. The second deed or ikrarnama provides that if the bankers object to receive the money and relinquish the property, the vendor may deposit the amount in the treasury" by virtue of this agreement "and obtain possession over the ilaqa." "This provision" he said "at once suggests a reference to Regulation I of 1798 as being in the opinion of the parties applicable to the case. It was not suggested that there was any other statutory provision or practice by which such deposit could be made by virtue of the agreement alone without the intervention of the Court in a suit for the purpose, while on the other hand the words exactly describe the procedure under the Regulation." Again he observed :—"The estate was made redeemable only on payment as well of the amount which should be found due at the time of redemption on account of the Basharatpur concern as of the stipulated sum of Rs. 1,65,000. "The practical effect of this was," he held, "to consolidate the debt on the factories' account with the principal sum mentioned in the deed and to give the bankers a security on the taluqa for the debt of the factories. This gives the transaction the character of a mortgage so far as the factory accounts are concerned and if it is to some extent a mortgage, it may well be held to be so entirely."

The facts of that case are unlike those of the present. Here the agreement for repurchase was at the price originally paid for the property, and there was no consolidation of the sum representing the price with a debt on any account such as would give the [591] transaction the character of a mortgage to any extent. The words in the agreement whereby the vendors were empowered to deposit into the treasury the amount of the consideration mentioned in the sale-deed are vague and little weight can be attached to them. Unintelligent draughtsmanship would account for them. The subsequent words "after the institution of a suit in Court" seem to indicate the course which the vendors were to adopt in the event of the vendee's refusal to fulfil his agreement to resell, namely, a suit for specific performance of the agreement. If this be so, the reference to a deposit in Court pointed to a deposit of the purchase money in the Court having seisin of the suit for specific performance. Whatever be the meaning of this passage, it is too obscure and vague in my opinion to justify us in holding that the two documents are to be read together, and that being so read, they constitute a mortgage by way of conditional sale. This is the main plank upon which the learned advocate for the appellants based his argument in support of his contention that this case comes within the ruling in Balkishen Das v. Legge. The best general test of the intention of the parties in cases such as the one before us is the existence or non-existence of a power in the original purchaser to recover the sum named as the price of the repurchase. If there is no such power there is no mortgage [see Williams v. Owen (1).] Lord MANNERS in Goodman v. Grierson (2) adopted a somewhat similar test. He observed:—"The fair criterion by which the Court is to decide whether this deed be a mortgage or not I apprehend to be this:—Are the remedies mutual and reciprocal? Has the defendant all the remedies a mortgagee is entitled to?" Tried by this test there can be no doubt that the transactions before us did not constitute a mortgage. A sale with a provision for repurchase is not common either in this country or in England, but there is nothing illegal or objectionable in such a transaction. The document of the 29th of August, 1852, purports in clear and unambiguous language to be a sale-deed. The document of the 8th of September, 1852, likewise in explicit terms purports to be an agreement for resale [592] within a limited period. There is nothing in them to indicate that the parties did not intend that these documents should operate according to their tenor. There is nothing illegal in a transaction of sale with an agreement for resale within a limited time, and I fail to see why these documents should be interpreted differently from any other document. I would point out that no qualms of conscience in regard to the lending of money at interest and obtaining security for principal and interest could have had any influence on the parties to these transactions inasmuch as we find that a simple mortgage securing principal and interest was given and taken by the same parties on the day of the sale of Murulipur Pnul, that is, the 29th of August, 1852. This mortgage is No. 123C of the record. In it we find an admission by the Mortgagors of the receipt of Rs. 2,500 the consideration for the bond, as also of the receipt of the Rs. 5,500, the consideration for the purchase of Murulipur Phul. By this mortgage another property of the mortgagor was hypothecated in the ordinary form, the mortgagors agreeing to pay principal and interest. It cannot, therefore, be said that it was to avoid the interest question that the other transaction was carried out in the form of a sale and agreement for resale. I am at a loss to understand on what principle of equity or good conscience the plaintiff's appellants can justly claim a right now to redeem or repurchase the property. They or their predecessors in title allowed the period for repurchase to elapse, and now after a lapse of more than half a century seek to convert a sale with an option of repurchase within a limited period into a mortgage by way of conditional sale. The Court below in my opinion rightly dismissed their suit. I would therefore dismiss the appeal.

BANERJI, J.—The question in this appeal is whether the two documents of 1852 together constituted a mortgage known as a bai-bil-wafa mortgage, that is, a mortgage by way of conditional sale, or an out-and-out sale with a contract for repurchase. The test in these cases is what was the intention of the parties. This is to be gathered from the documents themselves and from surrounding circumstances. The first circumstance to which I would refer is, as pointed out by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose in his well-known work on mortgages, 3rd Edition, p. 114, that "a [593] bona fide sale with a condition for repurchase is very rare in this country, while it is a very common practice with mortgagees to take a conveyance of the property from the mortgagor with a condition for repurchase as security for the loan, the mortgagee either taking the rents in lieu of interest or allowing the mortgagor to remain in occupation paying interest on the mortgage money under the name of rent." The next circumstance I would refer to is the fact that in these provinces the Muhamadan forms of conveyancing were followed for a long time, specially in cases in which one of the parties to the transaction was a Muhammadan. [See the observations of EDGE, C. J., in Ali Ahmad v. Rahmat-ullah (1)]. Another circumstance which I may mention is that as Muhammadans are prohibited from taking interest they resort to the device of obtaining an absolute sale with a stipulation for repurchase in order to evade the prohibition as to interest. This is the origin of bai-bil-wafa transactions, under which in the garb of a sale, the creditor enjoys the usufruct of the property in lieu of interest, the transaction being in reality a mortgage. Such mortgages were very common in earlier times and were effected sometimes by the execution of a deed of absolute sale containing a contract for repurchase and often by the execution of two documents one of which purported to be a deed of sale out and out and the other an agreement by the ostensible purchaser to reconvey the property to the apparent vendor. Such transactions have always been regarded as mortgages by way of conditional sale. Among Muhammadan lawyers a long term for repurchase "denotes a mortgage or security for a loan". (See Ghose on Mortgages, p. 77, 3rd edition).

Bearing these circumstances in mind, if we look at the transaction in question; it seems to me to be clear that it was a bai-bil wafa mortgage, that is, a conditional sale, and not an absolute sale with a right of repurchase. The persons who purported to be purchasers were Muhammadans and they were to take possession and enjoy the usufruct They executed, a document by which they agreed to reconvey the property "after the expiry of the term of 9 to 10 years," enjoying in the meantime the usufruct in lieu of the use of their money. It is true the two documents bear [594] different dates, but they were presented for registration about the same time, the one on the 18th and the other on the 19th of May, 1853, and neither of them was delivered before registration, as the endorsement of the registering officer shows. They were, therefore, in fact contemporaneous documents, as in ordinary cases of bai-bil-wafa mortgages. The long term of ten years is another indication that the transaction was a mortgage. Further, the agreement provides that in the event of the executants of it refusing to execute a sale-deed on receipt of the amount mentioned in the document, the nominal vendors would "have power to deposit in the Treasury attached to the court the amount of consideration entered in the sale-deed." This clause, in my opinion, refers to a deposit under Regulation I of 1798, as in the case of Balkishen Das v. Legge (1), and shows that the parties regarded the transaction as one of mortgage to which the Regulation applied. The absence of the words "by virtue of this agreement" seems to me to be immaterial, and I do not agree with the court below that a suit for specific performance was contemplated. This case is in many respects similar to that of Balkishen Das v. Legge referred to above and is distinguishable from that of Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (2) relied on by the court below. The transaction in question was, in my judgment, one of a mortgage by way of conditional sale. I would therefore allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the court below and remand the case to that court for trial on the merits.

The appeal was therefore dismissed in accordance with the judgment of the Chief Justice, and from this judgment the plaintiff appealed.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal (with him Pandit Mohan Lal Sandal), for the appellant :—

The deed is, in form, no doubt a sale-deed. But we have to look at the real intention of the parties. It is the characteristic of a mortgage by conditional sale that it is ostensibly a sale, vide section 58, clause (c) of the Transfer of Property Act. In India the origin of the mortgage by conditional sale is traceable to the desire to get round the prohibition of taking interest by the [595] Muhammadan religion. It was a device by which any mention of interest as such was obviated, and the mortgagee in possession was in receipt of profits in lieu of interest. The forms of Indian conveyancing follow more or less Muhammadan usages. So, a deed which is ostensibly a sale-deed but in reality a mortgage has come to be a common mode of conveyancing, even in cases where the parties may have had no objection to the taking or mentioning of interest as such. There is a presumption, therefore, in India, that a deed like the one in dispute is a mortgage rather than a sale-deed. The document itself clearly indicates that it has been drawn up according to Muhammadan modes of conveyancing. The two documents are to be read together, the second being merely supplementary to the first. If there was only one document, the first part of which was ostensibly a sale, but in the second part there was a condition for return of the party on repayment of the money, then undoubtedly it would be deemed to be a mortgage by conditional sale. The fact that the second part of the document was contained in a separate deed would make no difference in principle.

The intention of the parties is to be gathered from the circumstances. The document was presented for registration by the "vendors." This shows that it remained with them and not with the vendees after execution. Had the transaction as embodied in the first document been intended to be complete by itself, the document would have been made over to the vendees at once. The venders did not part with it before getting the second deed executed in their favour. Registration was delayed for a long time. But the fact is significant that when the parties did register, they registered both documents at the same time. Then, the terms of the agreement contained in the second document as to reconveyance, and especially the stipulations as to deposit in court and subsequent suit, &c., follow closely the provisions as to the mode of redemption and foreclosure of a mortgage which are laid down by Regulation I of 1798, section 2 and the Preamble, and Regulation XVII of 1806, section 7. The case in this respect is very similar to that of Balkrishen Das v. Lepu (1). Redemption of a mortgage is the only case in [596] which a deposit in court previous to the institution of a suit is, or has ever been, allowed; never where the subject-matter is a contract to reconvey. The absence of a covenant to repay the money (the "price") does not necessarily prevent the transaction from being a mortgage. Under the English Law, no doubt, every mortgage must imply a covenant to repay. But that is not so in India. Here, in a mortgage by conditional sale there is no covenant to repay. The test, according to the English law, of the existence in every mortgage of a recoverable debt is the basis upon which the decision in Ghulam Nabi Khan v. Niaz-un-nissa (2) has been rested. The case of Wajid Ali Khan v. Shafakat Husain (3) is in my favour.

The Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru (with him Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba), for the respondents:—

In order to find out what, in this case, the effect of the transaction was intended to be, the real point for consideration is whether the two documents were under contemplation simultaneously; whether the one formed the consideration for the other. Even if the two deeds were executed on the same day, that fact by itself would not necessarily make the transaction a mortgage. If the agreement to reconvey on repayment be a condition of the "sale," then the transaction is a mortgage. But if the sale be absolute and not dependent on any condition, then any subsequent and separate agreement between the parties will not have the effect of making the transaction any the less a sale. The words "on condition" in section 58, clause (c) of the Transfer of Property Act are important. It may be that the parties originally intended and effected a sale out and out; but that subsequently they desire to make the transaction a mortgage by conditional sale. But the sale when once effected created an absolute title; and any subsequent transaction could not derogate from that title and change the sale into a mortgage. It is open to parties to effect a sale out and out and couple it with an agreement that on the money being repaid within a certain time the property would be reconveyed, without there being any idea of a mortgage. Parties are free to enter into such a transaction, and the law will not make it a mortgage. In a sale with a right to repurchase [597] an absolute title at once passes to the vendee who, however, agree to put it at an end if the vendor accomplishes a certain thing within a certain time. In a mortgage by conditional sale the title passing to the "vendee" is not absolute but becomes absolute if the "vendor" fails to accomplish a certain thing within a time fixed by the law.

Had the two deeds been intended together to create only one transaction, namely, a mortgage by conditional sale, the stamp duty would not have been paid twice over. Under Act X of 1829 a deed which was merely collateral to a principal deed was chargeable with the maximum duty of Rs. 8 only. Avoidance of mention of interest could have been no motive for not executing a mortgage in the ordinary way. There was a simple mortgage executed between the parties on the same date in which interest was stipulated for. Again, a few years later the same vendors executed an unambiguous and clear deed of mortgage by conditional sale in respect of another property. This shows that if they intended to make the deed in suit one of mortgage by conditional sale they could easily have done so in a straightforward manner. Registration was not compulsory at that time. So it could not have been with any intention of postponing the effect of the first deed that registration was delayed and ultimately effected nearly simultaneously with that of the second deed. As to the custody of the deed the vendor himself admits that the deed after execution was delivered to the vendees. It is common for a deed to be handed over by the person in whose favour it is to the executant just before the registration so that it may be presented for registration by the executant. There is nothing in the terms of the first deed to show that any condition was imposed or contemplated. This case is therefore different from that of Wajid Ali Khan v. Shafakat Husain (1). In the second deed the vendees do not talk of "returning the property" but of "executing a fresh sale-deed," treating it as an entirely new transaction. And the execution of a fresh sale-deed, or indeed, any document is nowhere required by the Regulations for the purpose of freeing a property from a mortgage and returning it to the mortgagor. To sum up:—The long interval of seven [598] days is very much against the appellant. On a correct interpretation of the terms of the second deed it appears that there is no provision for a deposit in Court previous to the institution of any suit.

The appellant never put forward any claim to being a mortgagor till now, which is just before the expiry of 60 years. There is no indication whatever that the parties in any way contemplated the existence of a debt which was to be repaid. There must be a debt before there can be a mortgage; Ghulam Nabi Khan v. Niaz-un-nissa (2). The case of Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (3) is in my favour.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal replied.

RICHARDS, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of an alleged mortgage. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed and the appeal coming before a bench of this Court, consisting of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Banerji, the learned Judges differed, hence the present appeal under the Letters Patent.

The facts appear very fully from the judgments of our learned brothers, and it is only necessary very shortly to refer to them.

On the 29th of August, 1852, the predecessors in title of the plaintiff executed a deed in favour of the predecessors in title of the defendants. The document on the face of it was an out-and-out transfer by way of sale of the properties now sought to be redeemed.

On the 5th of September, 1852, another deed was entered into between the same parties. This document recites the sale-deed of the 29th August and proceeds as follows:—

"As we, the executants, are now willing to help and treat with kindness the vendors, we, the executants, with our own free will, do hereby covenant and give it in writing that if the aforesaid vendors after the lapse of 9 or 10 years from the date of the aforesaid sale-deed do pay to us the purchase money, &c., we shall forthwith execute a fresh sale-deed on receipt of the sale-consideration entered in this document and get mutation of names effected in the revenue papers."

The deed goes on to provide that in default of payment at the end of 10 years the grantors shall have no further claim to the property.

[599] The plaintiff contends that those documents must be read together, and if they are read together they constitute a mortgage by conditional sale within the meaning of section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, clause (e); that the plaintiff notwithstanding the time that has elapsed has still a right to redeem, and that therefore his suit ought not to have been dismissed.

The Transfer of Property Act was not, of course, in force when the document of the 29th August, 1850, was executed, but it is not contended that the Act introduced any change in the law as to what constituted a mortgage by conditional sale. The defendants contend that the deed of the 29th of August was what, on the face of it, it purports to be, namely, an out-and-out sale, and the subsequent document of the 5th of September was also what it purports to be, namely, an act of grace, and that assuming it conferred on the plaintiff or his predecessors in title any rights at all, such rights could only be exercised according to the actual terms of the deed and ceased and determined on the expiration of the period of ten years mentioned in the latter deed.

The plaintiff argues that the form of mortgage by conditional sale is very common, particularly where the mortgagees are Muhammadans, that although a mortgage by conditional sale is more frequently carried out by a single deed, nevertheless such a mortgage carried out by two deeds is not uncommon and was still less uncommon in the year 1852. He lays great stress on the improbability of the grantees in the deed of 29th August, 1852, if in fact they were absolute vendees, foregoing their rights as such and becoming mortgagees in possession for a term of ten years.

The defendants rely on the unexplained, as they contend, interval of seven days between the execution of the two deeds, the express language of the latter deed and certain other facts and circumstances to which I shall refer hereafter, as demonstrating that the two deeds were quite independent and ought to be given effect to accordingly.

It seems to me that if we held that at the time of the execution of the first deed the parties intended that the second deed also should be executed, we ought to hold that the two deeds [600] constituted a mortgage by conditional sale and that the plaintiff has a right to redeem. On the other hand if, at the time of the execution of the sale-deed, there was no intention of executing the second deed, the defendants are entitled to have the latter construed strictly and quite independent of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and the law of mortgages.

There can, in my opinion, be no doubt that if the two deeds were of even date, an almost irresistible presumption would arise in favour of the transaction being a mortgage. I shall now very shortly refer to a few facts and circumstances relied upon by the parties.

The sale-deed was not registered until the 18th of May, 1853, and it appears from the registration certificate to have been presented for registration by the ostensible vendors.

The deed of the 5th of September was registered on the 19th of May, 1853, and was presented for registration by the ostensible vendees.

The plaintiff contends that the presentation of the ostensible sale-deed for registration shows that the so-called sale-deed must in the interval have remained undelivered in the hands of the vendors. I do not think that this inference can be drawn. It is a very common practice for the deed to be presented by the party against whose interest it is, so as to make repudiation thereafter more difficult.

If we can believe the plaintiff's own witness, Narain, the sale-deed was given over to the ostensible vendees on execution.

The parties entered into another transaction on the 29th August, 1852. This was a simple mortgage. It recites the sale of mauza Murlipur Phul, as a sale, not as a mortgage, nor as a mortgage by conditional sale. The interest is at a low rate, but it shows that the grantees in the first mentioned deed of 29th of August, 1852, though Muhammadans, had no scruple in lending money on a mortgage which expressly provided for the payment of interest. On the 17th July, 1863, the parties entered into another transaction which was on the face of it a clear mortgage by way of conditional sale. This deed, no doubt, was executed some ten years after the first transactions, but it cannot be left altogether out of consideration. It shows that in the year 1863 the parties [601] when they wanted to have a mortgage by conditional sale, adopted the more usual form of one single deed instead of two.

The deeds of the 29th of August, 1852 (ostensible sale-deed) and 5th September, 1852, each bears a stamp of Rs. 32. If the transaction had been a mortgage, stamp of Rs. 32 (or if carried out by two deeds Rs. 38) would have been sufficient. Lastly, it seems to me that no explanation has been given of the interval of 7 days between the execution of the two deeds. If the two deeds were all along dependent one on the other and constituted a mortgage by conditional sale, why were both deeds not ready and executed the same day? As already mentioned, there was a simple mortgage executed on the 29th August. The plaintiff's advocate referred us to the evidence of Narain, where the witness states that there were differences between the grantors, and suggests that this explains why the two deeds were not executed on the same day. I cannot accept this explanation. It perhaps might explain the delay in registration, but it does not explain the interval of 7 days. Furthermore, I have already pointed out that another deed of simple mortgage was executed on the 29th of August. Differences between the grantors ought, it seems to me, just as much to have delayed the execution of this deed as the execution of the deed of the 5th of September. As to the argument based on the improbability of the vendees converting themselves into mortgagees, it may have been that the predecessors in title of the defendants considered that it was unlikely that the plaintiffs would ever be able to redeem, and that the grantees would in any event gain the advantage of getting possession with the good will of the grantors. However this may be, I do not think that this matter can outweigh the other circumstances of the case. After careful consideration I have come to the conclusion that we ought to hold that at the time of the execution of the deed of the 29th of August, 1852, the parties to it intended that there should be an out and out sale of mauza Murlipur Phul and that the deed of the 5th of September following was the result of a subsequent arrangement between the parties, and that therefore the suit was rightly dismissed by the court of first instance. In my opinion the language of the deeds themselves, and the surrounding [602] circumstances, so far from showing that it was the intention of the parties on the 29th of August, 1851, merely to make the property security for money lent, on the contrary show that the intention was that there should be an out and out sale. The case of Balkishen Das v. W. H. Legge (1) was decided on the language of the documents and surrounding circumstances peculiar to that case, and for this reason cannot, I think, be relied on in the present case.

I would dismiss the appeal.

GRIFFIN, J.—The intention of the parties has to be gathered from the documents themselves, the circumstances attending their execution and also from the conduct of the parties. The reason usually assigned for the execution of deeds of conditional sale instead of ordinary mortgages is that Muhammadans who abide strictly by the tenets of their religion object to receiving interest on money lent. The vendees in the present case, who are Muhammadans, have no such scruples, for on the same date, i.e., 29th of August, 1852, the plaintiff or his predecessors in title executed a deed of mortgage bearing interest in favour of the vendees in respect of another property. The sale was complete or absolute on 29th of August, 1852. The document in clear and unmistakeable terms indicates that it was a sale out and out. Mutation of names took place in respect of the property on 7th September, 1853, and ever since that date the vendees have remained as owners of the village. If it had been the intention of the plaintiff or his predecessors in title to execute only a mortgage-deed on the 29th August, 1852, it is difficult to imagine why they should have consented to execute an out and out sale-deed. That the agreement of the 5th September, 1852, was the result of an afterthought is, in my opinion, indicated first, by the lapse of seven days since the date of the execution of the sale-deed, and further by the fact that in order to execute the agreement the plaintiff had to incur the further expense of purchasing a fresh stamp-paper for Rs. 32.

If it had been the intention of the parties on the 5th of September 1852, that the sale-deed of the 29th August of the same year should not operate as a sale-deed, but that the defendants [603] were to remain in possession merely as mortgagees, the simplest and most direct methods for the plaintiff to adopt would have been on 5th September, 1852, to tear up the sale-deed and execute another document setting out the intention plainly and distinctly.

I would therefore agree with the view taken by the learned Chief Justice.

I would dismiss the appeal.

TUDBALL, J.—I am fully in agreement with my learned colleagues in the view they have taken of the case.

It is clearly a question of intention. On the 29th of August, 1852 two documents were executed, one an out and out sale of the property in question and another a simple mortgage-deed (bearing interest) of other property. The Muhammadan vendees, therefore, clearly had no scruple in taking interest and in openly declaring this in writing.

If, therefore, the parties intended a mortgage in both cases, there was no reason why they should in the one case have executed what on the face of it is an out and out sale deed.

The agreement to resell on payment of the purchase money was executed seven days after (5th September, 1852). There is no explanation of this delay.

The witness, Narain, is one of the original vendors. He admits that Ilahi Bakhsh wished to purchase the property, but says that he was only willing to mortgage and that the two deeds were executed because Ilahi Bakhsh stated that as a Muhammadan he could not openly take interest. This statement is disproved by the simple mortgage deed of the 29th of August, 1852.

It is suggested at the bar that the Muhammadans wished to evade the usury laws which were then in force and forbade the taking of more than 12 per cent. interest. There is no material on record to indicate the profits of this village in 1852, and the resultant interest on the amount paid by the vendees.

In regard to registration it has first to be noted that under the law, as it then stood, registration was not compulsory, and the sale was complete on the 29th of August, 1852. Moreover, though the registration was delayed until May, 1853, even then the two documents were not registered together but on separate dates.

[604] On the evidence of Narain himself the sale deed up to the time of registration remained with the vendees and not with the vendors. It does not follow from the bare fact that the vendors handed it to the Sub-registrar in May, 1853, that it had till that date remained in their (the vendor's) hands.

It is contended that the language used in the deed of agreement, where it sets forth the action which the vendors might take to enforce the agreement in case the vendees failed to carry out their promise, is a reference to the procedure which was then in force under Regulation I of 1798 for the redemption of a mortgage, and clearly indicates the intention of the parties. In the first place I think the document has not been properly translated. The word 'and' has no place in the original. In the next place the language would apply in a certain degree to a suit for specific performance of contract. But in any case we have to look to the intention of the parties at the time when the sale-deed of the 29th of August, 1852, was executed, and it is not possible to say from this language in the deed of the 5th of September, 1852, that on the 29th of August, 1852, the parties intended a mortgage and not a sale. I would further point out that, though the vendors live in this very village and two settlements have taken place since the year 1852, they have never put forward at such settlements a claim to be recorded as mortgagors. The vendees have all along been recorded as full owners. The parties clearly understood what a mortgage was, including a mortgage by conditional sale, as is shown by the subsequent litigation (and its results) on the simple mortgage deed of the 29th of August, 1852. In my opinion there are not sufficient grounds for holding that the transaction entered into by the parties on the 29th of August, 1852, was other than what it purported to be on the face of the sale-deed of that date. The case is clearly distinguishable from the case of Balkishen Das v. Legge (1) and is similar to that of Bhagwan

Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1); in fact, is a far stronger case than the latter in that there was an interval of seven days between the two documents. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

[605] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before the Hon'ble Mr. H. G. Richards, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Tudball.

GANGA SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. CHEDI LAL AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs).*

Pre-emption—Wojib ul-arz—Custom—Evidence—Nature of evidence required to establish a custom of pre-emption.

The plaintiffs claimed a right, based upon contract or custom, to pre-empt a sale of zamindari property. The property was situate in one of the three mahals of a village named Suram. The plaintiffs were not co-sharers with the vendors in that mahal: the vendees were strangers.

In 1873 the village Suram consisted of a single mahal, and the village wajib-ul-arz of that date contained the following reference to pre-emption:—"In future if any pattidar wishes to transfer his share by sale * * * to a stranger * * * first, the sharers in the patti khas, then pattidars in the thok, and then digar pattidaran deh shall have a right to purchase."

In 1883 perfect partition took place, and the village was divided into three separate mahals.

A fresh wajib-ul-arz was drawn up for each of the new mahals, but in each the provisions regarding pre-emption were copied verbatim from the wajib-ul-arz of 1873.

Held (1) that the plaintiffs had failed to establish any right of pre-emption based on contract; (2) that the oral evidence was worthless as supporting the custom set up by the plaintiffs, and (3) that the evidence afforded by the wajib-ul-arzes of 1873 and 1883 was quite insufficient to establish the right claimed by the plaintiffs. If such right was to be regarded as one based on an alleged custom. Dalganjan Singh v. Kalka Singh (2) referred to. Auseri Lal v. Ram Bhajan Lal (3) and Sardar Singh v. Ijaz Husain Khan (4) discussed.

Observations by RICHARDS, C. J., on the proper method for a Court to approach the consideration of pre-emption suits based upon custom.

THIS was a suit for pre-emption of certain zamindari property situate in one of the mahals of the village of Suram, pargana Ouraiya. In 1873 this village consisted of a single mahal and the wajib-ul-arz of that date contained the following reference to pre-emption:—"In future if any pattidar wishes to transfer his share by sale * * * to a stranger * * * first, the shares in the patti khas, then the pattidars in the thok, and then digar pattidaran deh shall have a right to purchase." In 1883 perfect [606] partition took place and the village was divided into three mahals. Fresh wajib-ul-arz were framed, but in each the provisions as to pre-emption were copied verbatim from the wajib-ul-arz of 1873. The plaintiffs were not co-sharers in the mahal in which the property sold was situated. The vendees were strangers. There was no reliable evidence outside the wajib ul-arzes above referred to as to the existence of a right of pre-emption based either on contract or custom. The Court of first instance (Subordinate Judge of Mainpuri), however, decreed the plaintiffs' claim on the basis of the wajib-ul-arzes. The defendants thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Babu Sarat Chandra Chaudhri (for Dr. Satis Chandra Banerji), for the appellants.

Mr. M. L. Agrawala (with him the Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal), for the respondents.

RICHARDS, C. J.—This is an appeal in a suit for pre-emption. The admitted facts are as follows:—This property in question is situate in mauza Suram, pargana Ouraiya. In 1873, mauza Suram constituted a single mahal. The wajib-ul-arz of that date is produced and contains the following reference to pre-emption :—

"In future if any pattidar wishes to transfer his share by sale . . . to a stranger . . . , first the sharers in the patti khas, the pattidars in thok, and then digar pattidaran deh shall have the right to purchase."

In the year 1883 perfect partition took place and mauza Suram was divided into three separate mahals. A copy of the wajib-ul-arz on partition was copied out as the wajib-ul-arz for each of the new mahals.

In the events which have happened, the plaintiffs are not now co-sharers of the vendor, that is to say, they are not co-sharers in the same mahal, while the defendants are strangers. This view is, I think, supported by abundant authority, and if it is correct, it follows in the present case that the custom of pre-emption which existed in 1873, is the same custom which existed when this suit was instituted.

Now what was the custom which existed in 1873? It was a custom (leaving out immaterial preferential rights) for sharers in [607] the village to pre-empt as against strangers. But in 1873 every sharer in the village must have been also a co-sharer with the vendor, because the village was the one single mahal. It follows that there could never have been a custom of pre-emption in favour of persons who were not co-sharers with the vendor. This is sufficient to dispose of the case, unless it can be contended that co-ownership was a matter of no importance. I think it could hardly be contended for a moment that mere residence in the village would confer a right to pre-empt, or, that it was likely that such a custom would have grown up. It is absolutely clear that possession of a share in the village was an essential condition. The wajib-ul-arz itself so provides. I cannot see why the possession of a share in the village was essential unless co-partnership with each other was also essential. Under the Muhammadan law from which customs of pre-emption are said to have been borrowed, partnership is the most important fact. The importance of the existence of partnership between the pre-emptor and the vendor in pre-emption cases of zamindari property was considered at great length and I think fully recognized by the five Judges who decided the case of Dalganjan v. Kalka Singh (1). I propose to quote at some length from the judgment in this case, because, if the existence of co ownership is essential or important in pre-emption, it should be borne in mind when considering the probability or improbability of the existence of the custom claimed by the plaintiff in the present case and the weight to be attached to the wajib-ul-arz as evidence of it. At page 10, the Chief Justice says :—" The most essential feature of the co-parcenary body is the joint and several responsibility of the co-sharers for the payment of the Government revenue assessed on the mahal, coupled, in cases of zamindari tenure, with the holding and management of the whole of the lands of the mahal by all the co-sharers in common. It is for the mahal for 'the local area held under a separate engagement for the payment of the land revenue,' not for a village or other local area not being a mahal, that the settlement officer frames the wajib-ul-arz. It is meant as a record of the contracts, or customs of the co-sharers of the mahal. [608] This being its object, it is prima facie unlikely to include any contract or custom which is absolutely independent of the continuance of the mahal as a fiscal and proprietary unit or of the coparcenary body for which it is framed. Next, what is pre-emption ? It is a right very closely connected with the objects of the coparcenary system. Its essential purpose is the exclusion of strangers from the co-parcenary body and the maintenance of the existing proprietary body throughout all changes of ownership. It thus prima facie implies that the coparceners desire to preserve and not to destroy their mutual connection, and is prima facie inapplicable after that connection has been served by a perfect partition."

Again at page 12 the Chief Justice quotes from the case of Motee Sah v. Mussumat Goklee (1) :—" Now, an essential condition of the existence of a right of pre-emption is that the parties claiming such a right shall be coparceners in the same estate as those against whom the claim is made, a relation between the parties which is extinguished by the very operation of partition and the separate proprietorship thereby established." The learned Chief Justice adds :—" I infer that the wajib-ul-arz in that case confined the right of pre-emption to coparceners of the vendor," and it may be urged that the very question we have in this case to decide is whether or not the wajib-ul-arz in the present case confines the right of pre-emption to co-parceners of the vendor.

Practically speaking, the two wajib-ul-arzes of 1873 and 1883 are the only evidence of the existence of rights of pre-emption in the village or mahal.

The oral evidence is quite worthless as supporting the particular custom claimed by the plaintiffs. The learned Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed the suit. The defendants appeal.

The question is, have the plaintiffs a right of pre-emption based either on contract or on custom ? It seems to me absolutely clear that the plaintiffs have no right based on contract. If any right of pre-emption existed other than a right based on custom, such right must exist by virtue of a contract, the evidence of which is the partition wajib-ul-arz of 1883, but the plaintiffs [609] cannot rely upon this wajib-ul-arz as a contract. They were no parties to it. The wajib-ul-arz of 1883 in question is the wajib-ul-arz for mahal Bihari Lal, in which the plaintiffs are not co-sharers and have no concern. If the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1883 is a record of contract the contract was between the co-sharers in mahal Bihari Lal.

In my judgment the case of the plaintiffs must fail unless they can establish the existence of a custom giving them a right of pre-emption notwithstanding that they are not co-sharers of the vendors.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

33 A. 605=8 A. L. J. 996 =12 I. C. 98.

I wish to say a few words as to what I consider as a general rule is the proper method for the court to approach the consideration of pre-emption suits based on custom, because I think that the neglect of such method has led to much confusion and supposed conflict of judicial decisions. I think the same cause also has led the Courts into attempting to draw, what, with great respect, I must call almost ridiculous distinctions between different wajib-ul-arzes, particularly when regard is had to the circumstances under which such documents were prepared and the class of persons who prepared them.

In pre-emption cases based on custom the proper issue ought to be "does the custom alleged by the plaintiff pre-emptor exist." The onus lies on the plaintiff, and he must establish his case by the production of sufficient evidence. The proper issue is not what is the true construction of this or that wajib-ul-arz. No doubt it is quite true that the court will have to consider, amongst other things, the language of the wajib-ul-arz when that document is adduced in evidence. But the fact that the court has to consider the language of the wajib-ul-arz does not make the construction of the wajib-ul-arz the real issue, or the equivalent of the real issue in the case. This is not a mere verbal distinction. It is a real distinction, which, I think, ought to be carefully borne in mind. I am speaking, be it remembered, of cases of pre-emption based on custom. In cases based on contract the considerations may be quite different.

To continue. After considering the evidence, (whether such evidence consist solely of the wajib-ul-arz, or partly of the wajib-ul-arz and partly of other evidence), it is the duty of the [610] Court to come to a conclusion whether the fact of the existence of the custom is "proved," "disproved" or "not proved." I am using these expressions with the meaning given to them by section 3 of the Evidence Act. If the fact is proved, the plaintiff is of course entitled to a decree. If it is disproved, or not proved, the plaintiff's case fails.

During the argument numerous decisions were referred to, and the case has been presented to us as of considerable difficulty. It seems to me, however, that if we are at liberty to apply the simple and elementary rules which I have mentioned above, all difficulty quickly disappears. As I said before, the evidence in the present case must be treated as consisting of the two wajib-ul-arzes, which are verbatim copies of each other. I am clearly of opinion that partition does not abrogate or cause an existing custom of pre-emption to cease to exist. The custom continues after partition, unless the co-sharers in each new mahal enter into a new arrangement between themselves. It might perhaps be open to the co-sharers in one mahal to make a contract with the co-sharers in the other mahals. But this would be an unusual contract, and it would require clear evidence to prove it, This, with all respect, I think, is not the question. The question is, are we reasonably satisfied upon the evidence that the custom claimed by the plaintiffs exists? The wajib-ul-arz is not the custom. It is evidence of the custom, and in considering the wajib-ul-arz we are entitled to consider the condition of the village at the time the record was made, the possibility, or impossibility, the probability, or improbability of such a custom then existing, and whether or not the officer who prepared the wajib-ul-arz was really recording the custom claimed. Again, at page 28 the Chief Justice says:—"We are interpreting and applying a particular custom of which the plaintiff claims the benefit. In considering who is entitled to the benefit of a custom it is essential to see who are the persons among whom it has in fact habitually prevailed. It cannot be claimed by anyone who is not a member of the class thus determined. Now there can be no doubt as to what was the class of persons who at the time when the wajib-ul-arz was framed, habitually exercised the right of pre-emption by virtue of the custom. They were the co-sharers of the undivided mahal which [611] the village Sarai Sitan then formed and no others. There was no distinction between shareholders in the village and co-sharers of the entire village, there was only a single class of co-sharers. That is the only class among whom the custom actually prevailed, and to whom therefore the right belonged. It is now sought to apply the custom for the benefit of the plaintiff, who stands in a totally different relation to the village, to the vendor, and to the property sold. He is not a co-sharer of the entire village. He is not a member of the class who exercised the right of pre-emption at the time when the custom was recorded. He is a member of a class which only came into existence through the partition, persons who have shares in a particular sub-division of the village. He is not even a co-sharer of the vendor. To allow him to pre-empt under the old wajib-ul-arz would be, in my opinion, to change the custom while professing to apply it." The other Judges appear to have agreed with the learned Chief Justice. KNOX, J., says :—" I concur in all that the learned Chief Justice has written."

It seems to me that, the more unusual a custom or usage is, the stricter ought to be the proof of its existence, and that this applies to customs or usages of pre-emption just as much as to any other custom or usage. If the custom claimed is of a common or usual nature, the wajib-ul-arz may be sufficient proof and justify the court in coming to the conclusion that the custom exists. If the particular right of pre-emption claimed is of an unusual nature, the wajib-ul-arz may be almost worthless as evidence or quite insufficient to prove the existence of the custom. In the present case, I think that the custom claimed by the plaintiffs is of an unusual nature, and in support of this view I refer to the passages which I have quoted above and adopt what the learned Chief Justice has said on the importance of co-ownership in pre-emption. If this vexed question of pre-emption in the province of Agra is to be settled by legislation (and I hope it may be), I doubt very much whether any authority who would be likely to be consulted would suggest the propriety of giving a right of pre-emption to persons who were not co-sharers in the mahal. The expression pattidar deh in the wajib-ul-arz of 1873 clearly applied to co-owners, but, [612] even assuming for the purposes of argument that the expression strictly construed means simply "sharer in the village" and not "co-sharer in the village", nevertheless, after taking into consideration the time and circumstances under which the wajib-ul-arz was prepared and the constitution of the village, so far from believing that the custom claimed by the plaintiff existed, I believe that it did not exist. I am certainly quite unable to say that the existence of the custom has been proved.

The only evidence produced, viz. the wajib-ul-arz, does not convince me. The learned counsel for the respondents has referred to a number of authorities, and amongst them the case of Anseri Lal v. Lal Ram Bhajan Lal (1) and the case of Sardar Singh v. Ijaz Husain Khan (2).

The first of these cases was a first appeal and the court had to find on the question of fact. The terms of the record in the wajib-ul-arz were very similar to the present case. STANLEY, C. J., held that the sharer in the village who was not a co-sharer with the vendor, had a right of pre-emption. At page 610, BURKITT, J., says:—" Having had an opportunity of perusing the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, I have come (though not without some hesitation) to the conclusion that his decision as to the meaning to be given to the words mauza or deh when used in a wajib-ul-arz is correct." Later on he says:—" I have no doubt that in a large number of cases the word deh, or mauza or gaon crept into the new wajib-ul-arz through the ignorance or carelessness of the settlement officer's muharrir when copying the wajib-ul-arz of the parent mauza." STANLEY, C. J., at page 609 says:—" Finding then no ambiguity whatever in the terms of the new wajib-ul-arz, it appears to me that the court is bound to construe them according to the plain sense of the words used, and that we ought not to put a construction contrary to the plain sense in view of anything dehors the documents." It seems to me, with all respect, that this was not the correct way of considering the question. Does it not appear as if BURKITT, J., was finding in favour of the existence of the custom (a question of fact) on evidence which he considered of no weight or value whatever. If the view taken by STANLEY, C. J., be [613] correct, the result might be that the Court, tying itself down to particular words used by an ignorant or careless muharrir, would find in favour of the existence of an unusual and unnatural custom which it was perfectly certain never existed at all, unless it shut its eyes to all other considerations save the actual words in the wajib-ul-arz.

In my opinion both the cases relied on are contrary to the view taken by the entire Bench which decided the case of Dalganjan Singh v. Kalka Singh. In the present case, I think that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong under the circumstances in thinking that there could be a new custom or any variation of the custom after the partition, and that he ought to have applied his mind to considering what was the custom recorded in the year 1873, and whether or not the custom that was then recorded was a custom which entitled a person who was not a co-sharer with the vendor to pre-empt in the case of a sale by one of the co-sharers in the village Had he done so, and considered the great improbabilty, if not impossibility, of such a custom ever having existed; if he had taken into consideration that the record in the wajib-ul-arz must have been the result of instructions given by the co-sharers to the officer on matters concerning their coparcenary rights, I think it very improbable that he would have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff had proved the existence of the custom he claimed.

The learned Subordinate Judge might fairly have come to the conclusion that a custom of pre-emption existed among the co-sharers, but not the custom claimed by the plaintiffs, that is to say, a custom giving a right to a person who was neither a co-sharer with the vendor nor in the mahal. I have already given my reasons for holding that the plaintiff cannot succeed on the basis of contract. I would allow the appeal.

TUDBALL, J.—I fully agree with the learned Chief Justice. The plaintiffs claim the right to pre-empt, though at the date of the sale in question they had no share in the mahal, and were therefore not co-sharers with the vendor therein. If the claim be based on contract, then their suit fails for the reasons given by my learned colleague. If their claim be based on custom, then the custom put forward is one under which a person owning a share in a [614] separate mahal, (that is, a separate and distinct portion of a village which consists of several mahals), and who is not a member of the co-parcenary body to which the vendor belongs and is therefore not a co-sharer with the latter, has a right to pre-empt because the vendor has transferred his share to one who previously owned no share in any of the mahals in the village. In other words, the plaintiffs say :—"Though we are not co-owners with the vendor, still we own a share in one of the mahals in the village and the custom gives us a right to pre-empt." To establish his custom they produce the wajib-ul-arz of 1873, a document drawn up prior to partition and which for the purposes of this judgment I assume to contain the relation of an existing custom. That custom was one under which a member of an undivided coparcenary body could pre-empt if any member of that body sold his share to a stranger. The object of the custom was clearly to prevent the introduction of an outsider into the coparcenary body. Such a stranger might be very unwelcome to the other members. But this is not the custom which the present plaintiffs now put forward. The original coparcenary body has split up into several distinct and separate such bodies, no one of which has any further connection or concern, in any way, with any of the others. The words "pattidar deh" were used in the wajib-ul-arz of 1873 at a time when there was only one mahal. It does not follow that the courts must on the bare meaning of those words throw on one side and entirely leave out of consideration that co-ownership which was at the root of the custom itself. The custom, as re-corded in 1873, did not and could not refer to the state of affairs as they now are, when there are pattidars in the village who are not co-owners in a great part of the village with each other. The record of the custom in 1873 must be read in the light of the then existing state of affairs in order that its true meaning may be grasped. The object of the custom, the cause of its growth and existence must also be kept in view. Paying regard to all these points it is clear to my mind that the document in question does not prove the custom which is now put forward by the plaintiffs.

Turning now to the wajib-ul-arz of 1883, drawn up at partition for this mahal, we find that it is merely a verbatim copy [615] of the old one of 1873. If it is not a record of an agreement between the co-sharers of this mahal, it must be the record of a custom existing among the co-sharers of the mahal which had only just come into existence and in which no new custom could possibly have sprung up. The wajib-ul-arz, it must be noted, is drawn up, not for a village, but for a mahal, and is supposed to set forth custom obtaining among the co-sharers therein. If it be taken that it related to the old custom which had previously existed, and which was not necessarily destroyed by the partition, we are again met with the difficulty that the old custom contemplated the existence of co-ownership between the vendor and the pre-emptor. In the present circumstances that co-ownership does not exist. Muhammadan law gives the right of pre-emption, first of all, to shafi-i-sharik, then to shafi-i-khalit and, lastly, to shafi-i-jar. It originally applied to small plots of land and houses. In this country it has been extended to zamindari estates, but never on the ground of vicinage alone. Where two co-sharers of such an estate have perfectly partitioned their shares so as to entirely put an end to co-ownership in every way, it has been distinctly ruled more than once that under the Muhammadan law the right of pre-emption is lost; because after such a partition neither can be a shafi-i-sharik or a shafi-i-khalit ; and vicinage alone in such cases gives no right of pre-emption. It is worthy of note that co-ownership in Muhammadan law gives a prior right of pre-emption, and the customs which have sprung up among Hindus as well, in the case of such estates, have always had as their basis the existence of co-ownership among those persons to whom the custom applies. Of course it is conceivable that a custom of pre-emption might possibly spring up among the separate owners of separate mahals or separate villages for some special reason. It would be an unusual and extraordinary custom, and the person alleging it would have to prove it by clear, cogent and convincing evidence. A wajib-ul-arz is not conclusive evidence of any custom, and where a plaintiff puts forward such an unusual custom and cannot point to a single instance of its exercise within the memory or knowledge of man, the court will be justified in holding that the plaintiff has not proved the custom. In the case of an unusual and extraordinary [616] custom (other than that of pre-emption) in which no instances are proved of the exercise thereof, the courts have hesitated to hold that a custom is proved by the bare production of one or more wajib-ul-arzes ; and I can see no reason why the same rule should not apply to the very unusual and extraordinary custom which is now put forward in this case, under which a plaintiff who is not a co-sharer in the mahal and is not a co-owner with the vendor in anything, claims a right to prevent a man selling his property to whomsoever he pleases. The clear issue is the existence or non-existence of this unusual custom. Can the plaintiff be said to have proved it by a wajib-ul-arz drawn up when the state of the village was very different to what it now is, and when co-ownership in one unit, namely, the mahal, existed and all pattidaran deh were co-owners with each other which they now are not. In my opinion such evidence is not only insufficient but does not in the least go to establish the custom which is now put forward. I would, therefore, allow the appeal.

BY THE COURT:—The order of the Court is that we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the court below, and dismiss the plaintiffs' claim with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Act No. IX of 1908 (Indian Limitation Act), section 8—Limitation—Amendment of plaint after expiry of limitation—Suit for pre-emption—Zamindari property—Incorrect statement of extent of share claimed.

In a suit for pre-emption under the Muhammadan law of a zamindari share it was found that the necessary conditions of the Muhammadan law had been fulfilled; but, there being some doubt as to the exact share sold, the plaintiff had specified it in his plaint as 15 biswansis, when in fact it amounted to 17 biswan-

sis. Held that it was within the competence of the court to allow the plaintiff to amend his plaint so as to claim the larger share, even after the period of limitation for the suit had expired.

[Dist: 36 All. 370; 64 I. C. 29; Ref: 66 I. C. 208=20 A. L. J. 159; Rel: 79 I. C. 287=50 Cal. 878=27 C. W. N. 1007;]

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

One Musammat Hakiman sold certain zamindari property to Muhammad Sadiq on the 16th of December, 1907. The price [617] settled was Rs. 1,800. The property sold consisted of a 17 biswansi share, 2 biswansis of which had come to the vendor by inheritance from her daughter. The plaintiff made the talab at the time, but made the demand with reference to 15 biswansis only which he believed at the time was the entire share that Hakiman could dispose of. He filed the suit on the last day allowed by the law of limitation, but having found out his mistake as to the extent of the share sold, he applied for amendment of the plaint. His application was allowed and he was granted leave to sue for the entire 17 biswansis, but when the application was granted the period of limitation for the suit had expired. The Courts below, however, decreed the claim. The defendant vendee appealed.

Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan, for the appellants :—

According to Muhammadan law the plaintiff ought to have claimed the entire property sold. His demand was ineffective. Disabilities which saved limitation in ordinary cases did not apply to pre-emption suits. Section 8 of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908) was clear on the point. See also Durga Singh v. Bisheshar Dayal (1). Even if the plaintiff did not know the exact amount of the share owned by the vendor that was no excuse.

Maulvi Gulam Mujtaba, for the respondents :—

The plaintiff purported to claim the entire share sold. The Court to which application for amendment was made was the proper Court to consider the question. It was too late to question it now. Section 107, clause 2 of the Civil Procedure Code gave new powers to appellate Courts. The Court exercised its discretion, and there was no reason to call it in question. Ram Lal v. Harrison (2), Khem Karan v. Har Dayal (3) and The New Fleming Spinning & Weaving Co. v. Kessowji Naik (4) were referred to. The amendment having been granted related back to the time of filing the suit.

Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan replied.

RICHARDS, C. J. and TUDBALL, J.:—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption of certain zamindari property based on Muhammadan law. The defendant, Musammat Hakiman, sold [618] the property to the appellant, Muhammad Sadiq, on the 16th of December, 1907. The sale-deed was duly executed and registered, and it set forth that the share sold was in or about a 24 biswansi share. As a matter of fact, the share which the Musammat had was a 17 biswansi share, and this has been decided in the suit brought against her and her vendee by the other co-sharers. The plaintiff when he instituted his suit only claimed a 15 biswansi share, alleging that that was the share which the vendor had actually sold. The suit was instituted on the last day of limitation. Afterwards the plaintiff came to understand that the real share sold was, as we have said before, a 17 biswansi share, and accordingly he was allowed to amend the plaint by claiming a 17 biswansi share instead of a 15 biswansi share. The first Court found that the formalities necessary under the Muhammadan law had been duly performed and the lower appellate Court accepted the finding. The plaintiff's suit was accordingly decreed.

In appeal it has been urged that the amendment was an amendment which ought not and could not have been made having regard to the provisions of the Limitation Act, and, secondly, that the Courts below were wrong in holding that the preliminaries required by the Muhammadan law had been fulfilled. The Courts are allowed by the Code ample power to amend, and we are slow to interfere with any amendment which the lower Courts have power to make, and which they in the exercise of discretion have made. We think, however, that no Court would have power to allow a new cause of action to be introduced into a plaint after that cause of action had become barred by limitation. The real question in the present appeal is whether or not we are bound to regard the amendment which was made, namely, to allow the plaintiff to claim 17 biswansis instead of 15 biswansis, as the introduction of a new cause of action, or whether it may be regarded as a correction of the description of the property.

With regard to the due performance of the formalities of the Muhammadan law, the evidence, which was believed by both the Courts below, was to the effect that the vendee informed the plaintiff in the present suit that he had purchased the "share of [619] Musammat Hakiman." There was no specification of exactly what the share was, and the plaintiff at once said without waiting to ask any questions that he claimed his right to pre-empt. We think that the Courts below were entitled on this evidence to hold that the formalities had been fulfilled. Of course the demand was made in the presence of witnesses.

There was a great deal of confusion as to what was in fact the actual share of the Musammat. We have already pointed out that although she purported to sell a share equal to about 24 biswansis, her real share was 17 biswansis. After consideration we have come to the conclusion that the amendment in this case may be looked upon as a correction of the description of the property. Looked upon in this light it was an amendment which the Court below was entitled to make; and if it was an amendment which the Court was entitled to make, we think that limitation must be reckoned as from the date of the presentation of the plaint, as explained by section 3. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

8 A. L. J. 610

The owner of land through which a river or other natural channel flows is bound, within certain limits, as between himself and other riparian owners, not to do anything which shall obstruct the flow of the water or materially interfere with their rights. But such owner is not bound to keep the channel clear so that the amount of water that can pass down it may not be diminished.

THE facts of this case were as follows: —The parties were zamindars of adjoining villages. The drainage water from some neighbouring hills flowed through three natural channels which joined each other at a point situate within the plaintiffs' villages. From this point the water flowed through a natural channel running through the defendants' villages and on to a streamlet further down. At some previous time the water from the [620] above-mentioned point used also to flow through a natural channel, named the Deosia channel, which ran through the plaintiffs' villages, but which had become silted up in course of time. The defendants built an embankment which obstructed the flowing of the water through their villages on to the streamlet. The water, therefore, accumulated in and flooded the plaintiffs' villages causing great damage. The plaintiffs brought a suit for the removal of the embankment and other reliefs. The lower Appellate Court came to the findings that the embankment was not an entirely new construction, and that the inundation of the plaintiffs' villages was due as much to the silting up of the channel of the Deosia drain as to the existence of the embankment; and the suit was dismissed. The plaintiffs appealed.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala (with Munshi Kalindi Prasad), for the appellant:—

It is my natural right to have the water flow down as it does. If the gradual silting up of one natural channel has diverted the course of the water into another natural channel then I am entitled to have the water flow down this second channel as it now does. Illustration (h) of section 7, clause (b), of the Easements Act applies to this case. The plaintiffs' villages are on a higher level than those of the defendants'; and the ruling in Imam Ali v. Poresh Mundul (1) fully applies to the present case. I also relay on Abdul Hakim v. Gonesh Dutt (2). It is not necessary for me to show exactly what share each defendant had in causing the obstruction, nor the exact extent to which the enbankment built by the defendant has caused an obstruction; Thorpe v. Brumfitt (3). It was no part of the plaintiffs' duty to keep clear the Deosia channel against the process of gradual silting up. They are in no way responsible if a natural channel ceases to exist owing to natural caues.

Munshi Gokul Prasad (with Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba), for the respondents.

It was not the case of the plaintiffs, as set out in their pleadings, that the natural channel through Deosia had silted [621] up. It is for the plaintiffs, when there is a passage on their own land, to see that it is kept clear and that the burden is not thrown entirely on another person's land. The plaintiffs cannot by their own omission to clear the Deosia channel cast an additional burden on the defendants. They may clear it or allow it to silt up just as they please as long as they do not, by their omission, cause detriment to the defendants' land. Illustration (h) to section 7 of the Easements Act is not applicable. Here the claim is to allow the water to flow out of the plaintiff's land and not within it as contemplated in that illustration. The case in I. L. R. 8 Calcutta is distinguishable. There the defendants had stopped up all the passages for flow. In the case in 8 Chancery appeals the question, so far as it is material to the present case, was whether it was necessary for the plaintiff to show which of the defendants had caused the damage and to what extent. That is not the question in this case. Here the question is, to what extent has the joint action of the defendants caused an infringement of the plaintiffs' rights.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, in reply:—Illustration (h) does apply. The defendants' action has altered the quantity and the force of the water flowing through my lands.

CHAMIER, J.—This was a suit by the appellants to have a bandh removed which had been built by the respondents, for a perpetual injunction restraining the respondents from building a bandh at the place in question, and for damages.

South of the villages of the parties is some high ground, the drainage from which passes first by several natural channels through four of the appellants' villages. From a point north of the appellants' village Sarkohi, the drainage passes on in one natural channel to the appellants' village Dobri. Further north again this channel branches out into channels, one running east to the place where the bandh in question has been erected at a point marked "T" in the map and the other running north and ultimately falling into the Garhai nadi. The latter channel for a part of its course is known as the Deosia channel or drain, and it seems that an arm runs out of it eastward and joins the other channels somewhere near the point "T" which is in the respondents' village. The appellants say that the respondents in Katik [622] 1312 Fasli, built a new bandh at "T," which so blocked the natural drainage as to cause the appellants' village Dobri to be inundated. The respondents' case was that the bandh in question is an old bandh, that the drainage passes away from the appellants' villages through the Deosia channel; that the appellants have blocked up this channel, thereby interfering with the natural drainage, and that the respondents have caused no damage to the appellants.

The findings of the first court are clear enough. It finds that the bandh in question is an old one and caused no damage to the appellants' land; that the appellants blocked up the Deosia drain and have themselves to thank for the inundation of their fields.

On appeal the District Judge said:—"If any inundation of the Dobri lands did take place, it must have been due as much to the blocking up of Deosia drain either by silting up or artificial means. As to the existence of the bandh at 'T', I am of opinion, therefore, that it is not satisfactorily proved that the inundation of the plaintiffs' lands was caused solely by the bandh at 'T', and therefore the defendants are not responsible for any loss which may have been suffered by the plaintiffs, apart from the fact (sic) whether the bandh in dispute was old or new."

Later on he says:—"I am therefore of opinion that the bandh in dispute is not proved to be an entirely new construction, and supposing it to be new, it is not proved that the inundation of the plaintiffs' lands was due entirely to the existence of the bandh in dispute."

The words "either by silting up" in the first finding rob it of any value that it might otherwise have possessed. We asked counsel for the respondents whether he could produce any authority for the proposition that the appellants are bound to keep the Deosia channel clear. He was unable to do so. What is called the Deosia channel is a natural not an artificial channel and I know of no authority for the proposition that the owner of land through which a river or other natural channel flows is bound to clear it out from time to time so that the amount of water that can pass down it may not be diminished. Such an [623] owner is bound within certain limits as between himself and other riparian owners not to do anything which shall obstruct the flow of the water or materially interfere with their rights. If from natural causes a river or channel passing through A's land silts up, with the result that more water is thrown into another river or channel running through B's land, and B blocks the river or channel on his land so as to throw the water back on to and flood A's land, A cannot be held to have contributed to this result, if all that can be said of him is that he has not kept the river or channel on his land clear. A is not responsible for the silting up of the channel on his land. If after the river or channel flowing through A's land has silted up, B blocks up the river or channel flowing through his land with the result that A's land is inundated, the result must be regarded as being due to B's action alone and B is prima facie liable for the consequences, though he may show that he has acquired a right to block up the channel partly. In my opinion, therefore, the first finding of the District Judge does not enable us to dispose of this appeal. There should also be a fresh finding on the question whether the bandh is new or old. I would remit the case to the lower appellate court for fresh findings upon the second and third issues framed by the first court.

KARAMAT HUSAIN, J.—I agree.

BY THE COURT :—The order of the court is that the case be remitted to the lower appellate court for fresh findings upon the second and third issues framed by the first court. Ten days will be allowed for objections on return of the finding.

The lower appellate court will take such additional evidence as the parties may adduce.

After due inquiry the Magistrate ordered him to file a bond with one surety to keep the peace for a certain period. He filed the bond required, and it was accepted by the Magistrate. Khan, proceeded to cancel the bond and remitted Fakhr-ud-din to jail until such time as he should furnish a bond with a satisfactory surety.

Against this order Fakhr-ud-din applied in revision to the High Court.

Babu Sital Prasad Ghosh, for the applicant.

Section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not warant an order like that passed by the District Magistrate. His power was confined to the mere cancelling of the bond. He should not have passed such an order. Applicant had to remain in jail for a fortnight as he was not supplied with a copy of the order earlier and could not file a revision before.

The Government Advocate (Mr. A. E. Ryves), for the Crown, was heard in reply.

TUDBALL, J.—The applicant, Fakhr-ud-din Khan, was called upon by a Magistrate of the first class to show cause under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. After due inquiry the Magistrate ordered him to file a bond with one surety to keep the peace for a certain period. He filed his bond together with his surety and this was accepted by the Magistrate. The District Magistrate, subsequently, being of opinion that the [625] person who stood as surety was apparently unfit, in that he could exercise no influence over Fakhr-ud-din Khan, passed an order to the following effect :—"Accordingly I cancel the bond of the surety and direct that Fakhr-ud-din be detained in jail, until he is able to furnish such a surety as shall exercise proper control over him. Fakhr-ud-din Khan has accordingly been put in jail." The only section in the Code which enables a District Magistrate to cancel such a bond is section 125, but reading this section together with sections 118 and 121, it is quite clear that the bond contemplated by section 125 is the bond which has been given by the person against whom the order has been passed under section 118. Schedule V of the Code contains the form of the bond which is usually taken in such cases : form 11 is that which is taken in cases in which sureties also have to be provided. It was open to the District Magistrate to cancel the bond which was given by Fakhr-ud-din Khan, in the present case, under this section. But there is no section in the chapter, under which he is empowered to take the step which he has taken. It would no doubt have been open to him, if he had thought fit, to send the information and also the evidence relating to it, to the Magistrate who had passed the original order, and it might possibly have been open to the Magistrate to reject the surety. But the District Magistrate is not authorized to pass the order that he has done, nor is he empowered to send the accused to jail in this manner. I admit the application, set aside the order of the District Magistrate. The applicant will be released at once.

Order set aside.

Held that there may be a valid transfer of property for the purpose of financing a suit upon the terms that the property or the proceeds realized from the litigation shall be divided between the transferor and transferee irrespective of the fact whether or not there was any agreement for the payment of consideration "win or lose." The duty of the Court in such a case is to determine whether or not the agreement is a fair agreement to supply funds and does not purport to have been made so as to be inequitable or for improper objects, as for the purpose of gambling in litigation or of injuring others by encouraging unrighteous suits. Ram Coomar Coondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee (1) followed.

Held also that, although as a general rule where an assignee sues on his assignment and proves it, an adverse party cannot take the objection that there was no consideration, the rule is not invariable and would not apply where the transferor being a party to the litigation had never admitted the assignment, but on the contrary had pleaded that it was fictitious and without consideration. Manshankar Pranjivan v. Bai Muli (2) followed.

of February, 1901, was fictitious and without consideration and that he was the real owner of the mortgagee rights.

The court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's claim for sale of half of the property, but upon appeal this decree was set aside and the suit of the plaintiff dismissed in toto. The ground upon which the learned Additional District Judge dismissed the suit was, that the alleged deed of sale was fictitious and was illegal in view of the fact that there was no present consideration paid. In his judgment he observed :—" The Munsif found that no money passed and that the intention was that plaintiff should try his luck in suit." Then the learned Judge refers to the authorities to be found in Mr. Gour's work on the Transfer of Property Act and later on remarks :—

" If the arrangement was that proceeds should be divided after suit and realization of money without any agreement as to the payment of some consideration in any case, win or lose, it seems to me that the transaction cannot be regarded as a bona fide conveyance of a right, but on the other hand must be looked on as a mere nominal and fictitious transfer having for its object simply and solely the putting of plaintiff in a position to sue."

He accordingly holding this view of the law dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The principal question argued in this appeal is that the view of the law propounded by the learned Judge is erroneous, and this contention is in our judgment well founded. The learned Judge was of opinion that an arrangement made on a transfer of property that the property, or the proceeds of the property, after suit should be divided between the transferor and transferee would not be a binding agreement as being opposed to public policy, but [628] must be regarded as a nominal and fictitious transaction, unless there was also " an agreement as to the payment of some consideration in any case, win or lose." This is not the law as it is laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The law is thus stated in Ram Coomar Coondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee (1) :—

" Their Lordships think it may properly be inferred from the decisions above referred to, and especially those of this tribunal, that a fair agreement to supply funds to carry on a suit in consideration of having a share of the property, if recovered, ought not to be regarded as being per se opposed to public policy. Indeed cases may be easily supposed in which it would be in furtherance of right and justice, and necessary to resist oppression, that a suitor who had a just title to property, and no means except the property itself, should be assisted in this manner. But agreements of this kind ought to be carefully watched, and when found to be extortionate and unconscionable, so as to be inequitable against the party ; or to be made, not with the bona fide object of assisting a claim believed to be just, and of obtaining a reasonable recompense therefor, but for improper objects, as for the purpose of gambling in litigation, or of injuring or oppressing others by abetting and encouraging unrighteous suits, so as to be contrary to public policy, effect ought not to be given to them."

This language is clear and precise and is authority for the proposition which has been pressed before us in argument by the learned counsel for the appellant, namely, that there may be a valid transfer of property for the purpose of the financing of a suit upon the terms that the property or the proceeds realized from the litigation shall be divided between the transferor and transferee irrespective of the fact whether or not there was any agreement for the payment of consideration " win or lose." The duty of the court in such a case is to determine whether or not the agreement is a fair agreement to supply funds and is not of the nature referred to in the later portion of the remarks of their Lordships. Under these circumstances it appears to us that before we determine this appeal we should have a finding upon the following issue, namely, whether in view of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council the transfer in this case was a valid transfer.

The learned counsel for the appellant objects to our referring this issue on the ground that where an assignee sues on his assignment and proves the assignment, an adverse party cannot take the objection that there was no consideration. We do [629] not think that the ordinary rule applies to the circumstances of the present case. The transferor is a party to the litigation, and he pleaded that the sale-deed transferring the mortgage was fictitious and without consideration, and that he was the real owner of the mortgagee rights. This plea did not, it is true, find favour with the learned Munsif, but the lower appellate Court set aside the decree of the Munsif in toto. In the case of Manishankar Pranjivan v. Bai Muli (1) BIRDWOOD and PARSONS, JJ., held that, although in ordinary cases it is the rule that where an assignee sues on his assignment and proves it, an adverse party cannot take the objection that there was no consideration, yet that, under the particular circumstances of that case that rule did not apply. One of the circumstances in that case was that there was on the record no admission of the assignment by the assignor. In the case before us, so far from there being on the record an admission of the assignment by the assignor, there was a direct denial by him that there was any valid transfer. We are supported in the view which we take by this decision, which has our approval, and we think that in the present case the Court was and is bound to determine whether or not the plea set up by Sri Ram and also by Harbans, namely, that the transfer was fictitious and without consideration is true in substance and in fact. We, therefore, must remit an issue upon the question of the validity of the transfer.

There is also another question which we think ought at the same time to be determined by the lower appellate Court, namely, whether Musammat Dhapo held any, and if so, what portion of the property which she purported to mortgage, by adverse possession. We refer this issue as also the following issue: Whether, having regard to the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council the assignment of the 5th of February, 1901, was fictitious and without consideration. We refer these issues to the lower appellate Court under order XLI, rule 25. The Court shall take such additional evidence as may be tendered, and on return of the findings the parties will have the usual ten days for filing objections.

[630] On return of the findings the following order was passed:—

RICHARDS, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—On the first issue referred to the Court below, the finding of that Court is against the plaintiff appellant. An exception has been taken to that finding, but the objection raises questions of fact which cannot be determined in second appeal. The learned counsel for the appellant asks us to reconsider the order by which we referred issues to the Court below. Even if we had power to do so, we are not inclined to re-open the questions, which were fully discussed and considered, and in regard to which a decision was come to as a result of such consideration. We may also observe that we see no reason for thinking that the decision arrived at, to which one of us was a party, was incorrect. In view of the finding of the Court below on the first issue referred the appeal must fail. We accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CHANDHAN AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. BISHAN SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

[6th May, 1911.]

Act No. VII of 1870 (Court Fees Act), section 7, clause v. (d)—Court fee—Suit to recover a two-thirds share in certain specific plots sold—Court fee payable on market value.

Where a Hindu widow possessed of certain zamindari property of the total area of 17 bighas 6 biswas, assessed to a revenue of Rs. 19-7-0, sold 11 bighas and 11 biswas out of the same, which was practically two-thirds of what she possessed, and specified the actual plots sold: Held, in a suit by two out of three reversioners to recover two-thirds of the property thus alienated, that, the claim being for specified plots and not a definite share of the whole estate paying revenue, the Court fee should be paid on the market-value of the property in suit and not five times the Government revenue.

[Fol: 77 I. C. 781=46 M. L. J. 345=1924 M. W. N. 338; Rel: 46 M. L. J. 346.]

ON the memorandum of appeal being filed, the Stamp Reporter made the following report:—

"The suit which gave rise to this appeal related to the property of Nar Singh, Fateh Singh and Bansi Singh. Musammat Dharmi, the life-estate holder, out of the entire property in her possession as such, sold specific plots of land, measuring 11 [631] bighas, 11 biswas, to the defendants vendees. The estate of which the land sold formed part was 17 bighas, 6 biswas in area and the revenue assessed on the entire share was Rs. 19-7-0. The plaintiffs, who, along with the defendant No. 4, the karewa husband of the vendor, alleged themselves to be the reversioners of the last male owner, came into court seeking to set aside the sale-deed executed by the life-estate-holder in favour of the defendants vendees, on the allegation that she by reason of her remarriage with the defendant No. 4, had forfeited her right to her former husband's property, and that the plaintiffs, along with the defendant No. 4, were entitled to the immediate possession of the property, hence the suit for recovery of possession over a two-thirds part of the property sold by cancelment of the sale-deed aforesaid, or in the alternative for a declaration that the sale-deed will not be binding on the plaintiffs after Musammat Dharmi's (vendor's) death.

"In answer to the plaintiffs' suit the defendants vendees pleaded, inter alia, that the plaint was insufficiently stamped, inasmuch as the court fee ought to have been paid on the market value of the land and not on five times the revenue. In dealing with this issue the learned Additional Judge observed:—

"In the plaint, the plaintiffs have, following the sale-deed, denoted the property in dispute both by the fractional share, as well as by number of the plots appertaining to No. 31 Khewat; out of which a two-third share is claimed. The latter description does not indicate that any specific plots are claimed. It only shows the plots appertaining to the whole of Khewat No. 31. I therefore hold that a court fee on the market value of the plots appertaining to No. 31 Khewat is not necessary."

"In my opinion the view taken by the learned Judge below is not correct. As it is detrimental to public revenue, I beg to submit that the fee should be paid on the market-value of the property claimed. The property sold was 11 bighas, 11 biswas in area, denoted by specific plots in the sale-deed. The claim related to the two-thirds of the property sold and not to the two-thirds of the entire khewat. Thus, though the property sold was a part of the entire revenue-paying estate, yet (1) it was not a definite fractional share of the whole, and (2) the plots sold are not separately assessed with revenue. The case, therefore, in my humble opinion, is not governed by section 7, clause v (b) [632] of Act No. VII of 1870, but it is a case to which section 7, clause v (d) should be applied, and therefore the court fee is payable on the proportionate market-value of the share claimed, i. e. on Rs. 2,000 for possession plus Rs. 10 on the relief as to cancelment of the sale-deed. This being so, a court fee of Rs. 135 is payable. Rupees 13-6-0 having been paid, there is therefore a deficiency of Rs. 121-10-0 × 2=Rs. 243-4-0, to be made good by the plaintiffs appellants for this court and the court of first instance.

The following objection was preferred by Mr. A. H. C. Hamilton, for the appellants:—

"The Stamp Reporter has misunderstood the sale-deed. It shows that besides the specific plots of lands the other rights and interests of the zamindari have been sold. Such being the case, the appellants cannot be put into the physical and actual possession of the property in suit, unless it is partitioned. The view adopted by the court below is right, and the Stamp Reporter cannot go behind that order."

The Stamp Reporter made the following further report:—

"The learned counsel for the appellant objects to the correctness of the office report, the case is, therefore, referred under section 5 of Act VII of 1870, for decision of the Taxing Officer. In support of my view I beg to cite the case of Baija v. Mir (1) and an unreported decision of this Court in S. A. No. 506 of 1904, dated the 17th August, 1905."

The Taxing Officer referred the case to the Taxing Judge.

"I refer this case, so far as it relates to the memorandum of appeal, as none of the rulings brought to my notice seem to relate to cases precisely on all fours with the present.

"The suit is for recovery of a two-thirds share in certain specific plots, measuring 11 bighas, 11 biswas, forming part, viz., two-thirds,* of an estate comprising 17 bighas, 6 biswas, and assessed to Rs. 19-7-0 revenue. The Additional Judge has held that the plaint which bears a court fee calculated on five times the revenue of 2/3 × 2/3 × Rs. 19-7-0 is correctly stamped. In his [633] view the claim was not for specific plots, and therefore the court fee is payable under section 7, v. (b).

"The court fee is payable under section 7, clause v (b) when

(1) Land which is the subject of the suit forms an entire estate paying annual revenue to Government.

This is not applicable to the present suit.

(2) Forms part of such an estate and is recorded as separately assessed to revenue.

Likewise not applicable.

(3) Forms a definite share of an estate, paying annual revenue to Government. In my opinion this also is not applicable. Possession is sought not of a definite share, say, two-thirds of an estate paying Revenue to Government, but two-thirds of certain specific plots. These specific plots constitute as regards area, two-thirds of the estate assessed to revenue, but do not constitute definite share * of the estate paying annual revenue to the Government, i.e., of the whole estate. Had what was sold been simply two-thirds of the whole revenue-assessed estate, without specification of plots, and had the claim been for recovery of possession of two-thirds of such two-third share or 4/9 of the whole estate, the suit would have fallen under section 7, v (b).

* Strictly speaking it is not quite two-thirds.

(1) Weekly Notes, 1894, p. 174.

"As it is, it seems to me to fall under section 7, v (d), and Court-fees to be payable on the market value."

33 A. 630=8 A. L. J. 798 =11 I. C. 816.

The following was the decision of the Taxing Judge:—

TUDBALL, J.—This is a reference by the Taxing Officer. The facts are briefly as follows:—A Hindu widow was in possession of certain zamindari property, to wit Khata Khewat 31, the total area was 17 bighas and 6 biswas, and it was assessed to a revenue of Rs. 19-7-0. She transferred 11 bighas, 11 biswas, out of the 17 bighas, 6 biswas, specifying in the sale-deed the actual plots which she transferred. Two out of three reversioners have now sued to recover two-thirds of the property, thus alienated. The question arises whether the Court fees are to be paid under section 7, clause v (b).

[634] Eleven bighas and 11 biswas are for all practical purposes two-thirds of 17 bighas and 6 biswas. But the lady did not sell a fractional two-thirds share in the whole estate; if she had done so, her transferee would have been the owner of a two-thirds share in each and every plot, and liable to pay two-thirds of the revenue. But as matters stand, it is not possible to say what is the actual revenue on the specified plots now sold. It is impossible to calculate the Court fee on five times the Government revenue and therefore the Court fee must be calculated under section 7, clause 5 (d). The land is part of an estate paying revenue, but is not a definite fractional share of such an estate. The Court fee is therefore payable on the market value.

I allow one month's time to make good the deficiency.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

A certain house in Bulandshahr was the property of two brothers, members of a joint Hindu family. The plaintiff respondent entered into a contract with them for the purchase of the house. The contract was made on the 17th of May 1906, but was not reduced to writing. The plaintiff came to know that the defendants 1 and 2 the owners of the house, were about to sell the house to defendants 3, 4,5 and he, on the 27th of July 1906. [635] served the vendors and the vendees with a notice of his right to enforce the contract. The defendants, first party, had accepted Rs. 500 by way of earnest-money from defendants, second party, on the 5th of July, 1906, and they executed a sale-deed in their favour on the 3rd of September, 1906. The deed was registered on the 5th September, 1906. The plaintiff then sued for specific performance of the contract in his favour. The defendants pleaded want of a binding contract, and absence of notice till after the acceptance of earnest-money. They further said that the plaintiff had been acting as agent for another and could not sue himself. In addition to the enforcement of the contract, the plaintiff also prayed for cancellation of the sale-deed in favour of defendants, second party, wherein the price of the house was mentioned to be above Rs. 5,000. The first Court found that the contract for the sale of the house was entered into by one of the brothers, but that it was subject to the approval of the other brother, and further that plaintiff had been acting as agent for a third party and dismissed the suit. The District Judge found that there was a complete contract between the parties and that the brother making it was competent to act alone and decreed the suit. The defendants purchasers appealed.

Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhuri (Mr. B. E. O'Conor and Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru with him), for the appellants:—

An appeal did not lie to the District Judge, as the valuation of the deed sought to be cancelled was over Rs. 8,000. He had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal; Pirthi Singh v. Maru Singh (1). Both reliefs were necessary for the plaintiff. In questions of Court fee all that was to be seen was the relief asked for. Besides, according to section 27 of the Specific Relief Act, notice had to be given before payment of earnest-money by the third party.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, Babu Durga Charan Banerji and Babu Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for respondents, were not called upon.

RICHARDS, C. J., and BANERJI, J.:—This appeal arises out of a suit for specific performance of a contract for the sale of a house. The defendants appellants are subsequent purchasers of the house [636] which, upon the finding of the court below, was agreed to be sold by the owners of the house to the plaintiff. A number of defences were pleaded. First, that the sale to the plaintiff was negotiated by one of two brothers who have not the authority of the other brother. Secondly, that the plaintiff represented that he was purchasing, not for himself, but for a third party. Thirdly, that the appellants were transferees for value, in good faith, without notice of the previous contract with the defendants.

In our opinion all these defences are concluded by the findings of the Court below. In our opinion, in coming to the conclusion which the lower Appellate court came to, no mistake in law was made.

There was one other matter argued in the appeal, namely, that the claim being one to set aside a sale, the consideration for which was above Rs. 5,000, the appeal did not lie to the District Judge and the decree was ultra vires.

The plaintiff, no doubt, set forth in clause (b) of the prayer in the plaint a claim that the deed of transfer in favour of the appellants may be declared null and void as against the plaintiff. In our opinion the plaint and the prayer ought to be and can be read as a claim for specific performance against the owner of the house and subsequent puchasers who had bought with notice of the contract together with such incidental and proper relief as the Court ought to give in a suit of this nature.

The learned advocate for the appellants cited the case of Pirthi Singh v. Maru Singh (1). In that case the plaintiff brought a suit for sale on foot of a mortgage. He also made parties to the suit a number of other persons who had held prior incumbrances against the property, and he claimed that it might be declared that these prior incumbrances had been paid off and discharged. In our opinion it is only necessary to state the nature of that suit to show that it was quite different from the present suit. The present suit is neither more nor less than a suit for specific performance of a contract against the original vendor and subsequent vendees with notice. The prayer which the appellants contended was an independent cause of action is [637] merely an incidental relief to the claim for specific performa of the contract.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

The plaintiff was lambardar of a village, and according to the wajib-ul-arz was entitled to pre-empt. On the 2nd of March, 1909, the vendors sent a notice addressed to the plaintiff and his brother, members of a joint family, that he was going to sell the property to the vendees for Rs. 1,500. The notice was delivered on the 15th of March, 1909. It gave a week's time within which the plaintiff was to comply with its condition. The plaintiff was, at the time the notice was delivered, away from home, and on the 22nd his brother replied to the notice offering Rs. 800 for the property, which he said was its real value. The property was sold to the vendees, on the 29th of March, 1909. The plaintiff then filed the present suit for pre-emption. The Court of first instance held that there was no waiver of the right of pre-emption by the plaintiff and further found that Rs. 911-1-9 was the real price [638] paid. It decreed the suit conditional upon the payment of Rs. 911-1-9. The lower appellate Court found that the price paid was Rs. 1,500. It held that the plaintiff must be deemed to have waived his right, inasmuch as he did not reply to the notice sent by the vendors, for, the plaintiff alone being entitled to preempt, the reply sent by his brother could not avail him. It relied on Bhairon Singh v. Lalman (1) and Muhammad Wilayat Ali Khan v. Abdul Rab (2). The suit was accordingly dismissed.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Sarat Chandra Chaudhri (for Munshi Gokul Prasad), for the appellant, contended that the rulings relied upon by the Appellate Court did not apply, because in those cases no steps were taken by the pre-emptor to comply with the notice addressed to him. In the present case one notice had been sent to the plaintiff and the brothers of the plaintiff, who formed a joint Hindu family, and the reply having been sent by the brother of the plaintiff, the latter was entitled to rely upon it. Further, at the time the notice was delivered, the plaintiff was not at home, and there was no finding by the appellate court as to when he returned, so that probably if he had sent a reply the seven days, margin would have been long past. Consequently the question reduced itself to this, viz., whether the plaintiff should be deemed to have lost his right, because there was a difference as to the price as between himself and the vendor. If the difference was due to a bona fide belief in the mind of the plaintiff that the price at which he offered to purchase was the actual price and the vendor and the vendee were simply putting forward an inflated price, the plaintiff could not be held to have waived his right; Lajja Prasad v. Debi Prasad (3) Amir Chand v. Ishar Das (4) Karim Baksh v. Khuda Baksh 5).

The real issue, as held in Amir Chand's case, was whether the plaintiff bona fide believed that the actual price was Rs. 800. In the present case the property, a few years back had been purchased by the vendor himself for Rs. 800: the plaintiff when [639] asked by the vendor to purchase had offered Rs. 800: the reply sent by the plaintiff's brother distinctly stated that Rs. 800 was the real price and that the price demanded by the vendor (Rs. 1,500) was fictitous and incorrect, and finally the first Court held that Rs. 911-1-9 was the real price paid. In his plaint the plaintiff said that Rs. 800 was the real price, but offered to pay such price as the Court might determine. It was submitted that these facts went to show that the plaintiff entertained the belief bona fide.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the respondents, submitted that the rulings relied upon for the appellant did not apply. In the present case the plaintiff seemed to have fixed his own price. It was not stated in the reply to the notice that he believed the real price to be Rs. 800. The plaintiff did not offer to pay such price as the court might fix. The plaintiff was lambardar, and according to the wajib-ul-arz the right to pre-empt was personal to him, and in fact he did not join his brothers along with him in the suit. The plaintiff, however, was extremely negligent, and he could not avail himself of the reply his brother had sent. The plaintiff in any event should be made to pay the costs of the defendant in all courts, because the true price had been found to be Rs. 1,500.

Babu Sarat Chandra Chaudhri was not called upon to reply.

RICHARDS, C. J., and BANERJI J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption which has been dismissed by the lower appellate court on the ground that the plaintiff must be deemed to have refused to purchase the property when it was offered to him before the sale to the defendants vendees and thus waived his right of pre-emption. The property was sold to the defendants vendees for a consideration of Rs 1,500. The plaintiff alleged in his plaint that this amount was not the actual amount of consideration paid, but that the real consideration was Rs. 800. The court of first instance was of opinion that the real consideration was Rs. 911-1-9. The lower appellate court, however, found that the actual consideration was Rs. 1,500. It appears that before the sale, namely, on the 2nd of March, 1909 the vendor [640] sent a notice addressed to the plaintiff and other members of his family in which he stated that he was about to sell the property to the vendees for Rs. 1,500 and he asked the plaintiff and his cosharers to purchase the property for that price. The notice was actually delivered on the 15th of March, 1909. The time allowed for sending a reply was one week. On the 22nd of March, 1909, the plaintiff's brother sent a reply, in which he said that he and his co-sharers were willing to purchase the property for Rs. 800, which he said was the real price of the property. The plaintiff himself sent no reply, and for this reason the learned Judge was of opinion that, as the plaintiff himself paid no attention to the notice sent by the vendor, he was not entitled to rely on the reply which was sent by his brother. We do not agree with the learned Judge on this point. It is true that the plaintiff as lambardar had the right of pre-emption, but he was a member of a joint Hindu family, and the vendor issued his notice to all the members of the joint family. The reasonable view to take in respect of the reply is that it was sent on behalf of all the persons to whom the original notice was addressed and as an answer to that notice. Therefore it must be taken to be an answer, not only on behalf of the plaintiff's brother, but also on behalf of the plaintiff himself. The effect of this answer was that the plaintiff was willing to purchase the property for what was the real consideration for the sale. The plaintiff and his co-sharers did not believe that Rs. 1,500 was the real consideration and therefore they refused to purchase for a price which they honestly believed to be considerably in excess of the real price. The fact that the court of first instance found the real price to be far below the amount mentioned in the sale-deed and the notice is a circumstance which suggests that the plaintiff was justified in believing that the property was not being sold for the price mentioned. The plaintiff swore that the property had been purchased by the vendor for Rs. 800 only a few years before the date of the sale in question.

So that it may be reasonably inferred that in refusing to purchase for the price mentioned, the plaintiff was under the bona fide belief that the refusal to purchase was due to the belief that the price of the property had been greatly inflated. That being so, this case comes within the [641] purview of the ruling of this Court in Lajja Prasad v. Debi Prasad (1). In that case it was held that a person having a right of pre-emption does not lose it by refusing to purchase the property at the price at which it was offered to him, because he believes that such price is in excess of the real price, where the belief is entertained and expressed in good faith. This case was followed in Amir Chand v. Ishar Das (2); Bholi Bibi v. Fahima Bibi (3) and in Karim Bakhsh v. Khuda Bakhsh (4). In accordance with these rulings we must hold that the plaintiff has not forfeited his right of pre-emption. Having regard, however, to the fact that he made untrue allegations in his plaint and deposition and also to the fact that the actual price has been found by the lower appellate court to be Rs. 1,500, we are of opinion that he must bear the costs of the litigation.

We accordingly allow the appeal and decree the plaintiff's claim for pre-emption conditional upon his paying Rs. 1,500 within two months from this date. In any event the plaintiff must pay the costs of the respondents in all courts. If the plaintiff fails to pay the purchase money and the costs within the time fixed, the suit will stand dismissed.

Appeal decreed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

33 A. 641=8 A. L. J. 719 =10 I. C. 908.

THE material facts were as follows :—

On the 3rd of December, 1910, an order was passed directing a company called the Shri Baldeo Mills Company, Limited, to be wound up. That order was duly notified in the Government Gazette. Certain share-holders thereafter applied to the Judge on the 7th of February, 1911, to reconsider and revoke the order, on the ground that they had no notice, and no opportunity was given to them to put forward their objections. The application was refused by an order of the same date. On the 25th of February, 1911, they filed an appeal purporting to be from this order, but mainly directed against the validity of the order for winding up. At the time of filing the appeal in the High Court an order was prayed for and obtained directing notices of filing the appeal to issue under section 169 of the Companies Act. There was no prayer for an order, and no order was made, extending time for service of notice of appeal. The notices were not served till the 25th of March, 1911. On the appeal coming up for hearing :

The official liquidator appeared in person and took a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal :—

Although the appeal is, on the face of it, from the order rejecting the application for re-hearing, as a matter of fact, the grounds are directed against the validity of the order of the 3rd of December, directing the company to be wound up. The latter order, not having been appealed against within three weeks from its date, as required by section 169 of the Companies Act, has become final, and no appeal calling that order in question can now be heard. Again, from whichever order the appeal may be deemed to be, notice of it was not served within three weeks from the date of the order. The words "notice is given" in section 169 mean "notice is served ;" and the section contemplates that the appeal should be properly filed and notice thereof be served within three weeks from the date of the order appealed against, unless the time is extended [643] by the Court of Appeal. The case of Wall v. Howard (1) is an authority for this. In that case the notices were not served till the 7th of June, 1894, and it was held that the notices were not given till that date. It was open to the appellants to pray for an extension of time under section 169, but they did not do so. The requirements of the section are not fulfilled by obtaining an order, within three weeks, directing notices to issue.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the appellants, in reply to the preliminary objection :—

The appellants had no notice of the order of the 3rd of December, and so could not appeal within three weeks of that date. A party must have notice of an order before he can appeal from it. At all events we have a right of appeal against the order of the 7th of February ; for, under section 169, there is an appeal from any order passed in the course of the winding up.

Then, as to the question of notice. Section 169 does not expressly lay down that notice is to be served within three weeks. Had that been the intention of the Legislature, it would have distinctly said so. Section 169 says that notice is to be given within three weeks. If that be held tantamount to service of notice then great hardship will result ; for, in the majority of cases, even with the greatest promptitude on the appellant's part notice may not be served within the prescribed time on respondents, share-holders, living in different parts of the country. All that the appellant can do is to get an order within time for the issue of notices ; he can have no hand in the service of those notices. It is sufficient compliance with the requirements of the section if notices are "ordered to be given" within the prescribed time. The cases do not lay down that "given" means "served." In the case in I. L. R. 18 All. the order which could be appealed against was that of the 30th of April, 1894; and the appeal was filed on the 2nd of June, 1894. There the appeal itself was filed more than three weeks after the date of the order complained of ; and it was not necessary to decide any other point. The present question did not, therefore, arise in that case. In the case of [644] Lakshminarasayya v. Venkanna (1) there are some observations in my favour at p. 579 of the report, although the point was not expressly decided. He further cited Ramanappa v. The Official Liquidator, Bellary Brucepetta Stock and Loan Transacting Company Limited (2) and In re Sarawak and Hindustan Banking and Trading Company, Limited (3).

KNOX and PIGGOTT, JJ. :—The appeal before us is on the face of it an appeal against the order of the District Judge, dated the 7th of February, 1911. The order in question is an order refusing to revoke an order passed by him on the 3rd of December, 1910, which order was for the winding up of a company known as Shri Baldeo Mills Company, Limited, Hathras. A preliminary objection is taken by the Official Liquidator to the hearing of this appeal on the ground that the appeal is time-barred. The objection sets out two grounds on which the plea of limitation is pressed. The first is that the order winding up the company was passed on the 3rd of December, 1910, and has become final. Section 169 of the Indian Companies Act, while allowing appeals from any order or decision in the matter of winding up of a company, provides further that no appeal will be heard unless notice of the same is given within three weeks after the order complained of has been made in the manner in which notices of appeal are ordinarily given under the Code of Civil Procedure unless such time is extended by the court of appeal. Secondly, even if the appeal be taken to be against the order, dated the 7th of February, 1911, it is still out of time. The memorandum of appeal was presented within three weeks from the 7th of February, 1911, but notice was not given until long after three weeks had passed. In our opinion the preliminary objection is a good one and prevails. We were referred to several cases by the learned advocate for the appellants, namely, Ramanappa v. The Official Liquidator, Bellary Brucep tta Stock and Loan Transacting Company, Limited (2), Lakshminarasayya Setti v. Venkanna Setti (1), R. Wall v. J. E. Howard (4), In re Sarawak and Hindustan Banking and Trading Company, Limited (3). We have considered all these cases, and in our [645] opinion the position taken up in all these cases are against the appellants. The appeal is beyond time and is dismissed with costs. Separate sets of costs will be allowed in case of the Official Liquidator, respondents Nos. 4 and 5 and respondent No. 33.

DUTTA AND OTHERS (Defendants), v. KHEDU (Plaintiff).*

[11th May, 1911.]

Civil Procedure Code (1908), sections 99, 107, schedule II—Arbitration—Appellate court, powers of—Reference once made unaffected by death of party.

An application for a reference to arbitration under schedule II to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, may be made to an appellate court as well as to a court of original jurisdiction, and the court is bound to accept and act upon such application if made by all the parties interested in the appeal. When an application for arbitration has been made, it will not lapse by reason of the death of one of the parties; but if the right to sue survives, the arbitration must be proceeded with after substitution of the representatives of the deceased party. Perumalla Satyanarayana v. Perumalla Venkata Rangayya (1) referred to.

IN this case when the suit was in appeal before the lower appellate court (District Judge of Benares) all the parties interested applied for a reference to arbitration under the second schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. The Judge however rejected the application holding that the powers conferred by the second schedule to the Code were not exercisable by an appellate court.

Babu Piari Lal Banerji, for the appellant:—

The order of the lower court cancelling the reference to arbitration is illegal. An appellate court can refer a case to arbitration. The learned Judge has held that the law dealing with arbitration no longer forms part of the Civil Procedure Code, as the second schedule cannot be said to be a part of the Code. This reasoning is not sound.

Munshi Haribans Sahai for the respondent:—

The lower court says that under section 2, clauses (1) and (18) of the Civil Procedure Code, 'Code' includes 'rules' and 'rules' mean 'rules and forms contained in the first schedule or made under section 122 or 125.' Therefore the second schedule is [646] not part of the Code. Further, the appeal abates, as one of the appellants Gurudatta is dead. The reference to arbitration is also therefore now of no force. The appeal is based solely on one ground. The order was only an interlocutory order. At most it was an irregularity only, and was covered by section 99 of the Code. In section (1), clause (2) of the second schedule the word 'shall' is directory only and not mandatory; and jurisdiction does not cease till the order of reference is made; Abdul Hamid v. Riaz-ud-din (2). The fifth schedule has been referred to in sections 154 and 155 of the Code. At any rate, an order for reference should not be made on the original application, inasmuch as the arbitrator had already made an award before any order for reference was made.

Babu Piari Lal Banerji, in reply.

The appeal does not abate on the death of an appellant. The cause of action survives and the reference to arbitration holds good. Perumalla v. Perumalla (1).

It will be open to the legal representatives of Gurudatta to refuse to join in the reference afterwards. The law of arbitration was related to a separate schedule, because a new enactment is to be passed on the subject. There is some difference between mere submission and reference to arbitration. It was the policy of the law to allow parties to choose their own forum. The word 'shall' should be construed as mandatory. He quoted Sheo Dat v. Sheo Shankar Singh (1), Perumalla v. Perumalla (2), Abdul Hamid v. Riazuddin (3), Ramjidas Poddar v. Howse (4), and Raza Ali v. Fida Ali (5).

KARAMAT HUSAIN and CHAMIER, JJ:—When this case was before the lower appellate court all parties joined in an application to the court that the matters in difference between them should be referred to arbitration, and an arbitrator was named in the application. The court declined to make a reference to arbitration because in its opinion schedule II of the Code of the Civil Procedure was no part of the Code and therefore section 107 of the Code did not confer upon an appellate court the power to make a reference to arbitration conferred upon courts of first [647] instance. This view cannot be supported. The second schedule to the Code is as much an enactment as any other part of the Code, and there is no doubt that the lower appellate court in this case had power to make a reference to arbitration as prayed by the parties. Under paragraph 3, schedule II, the court ought to have referred the matters in dispute to the arbitrator named in the application. It is contended that the error committed by the court is cured by section 99 of the Code. But, inasmuch as the error resulted in the substitution of the Judge's decision for the decision of the arbitrator, it is impossible to hold that the case is governed by section 99 of the Code. Then it was suggested that it would be useless to remand this case to the lower appellate court, because one of the parties to the original application has died. It seems clear, however, that the authority of an arbitrator is not necessarily revoked by the death of one of the parties to a proposed arbitration. In the present case the right to sue survived, and therefore after substitution of the representative of the deceased party the case should have been referred to the arbitration as prayed. We are supported in this opinion by the decision of the Madras High Court in Perumalla Satyanarayana v. Perumalla Venkata Rangayya (2). We allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court, and remand the case to that court for disposal according to law. Costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause.

REVISIONAL CIVIL.

33 A. 647=8 A. L. J. 791 =11 I. C. 814.

[648] The facts of this case were as follows:—

THE plaintiff lived in a house, of which his father was entitled to possession as executor of a certain will, in Benares. During his temporary absence the defendant took possession of the house. On his return to Benares the plaintiff brought a suit for possession under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The court of first instance was of opinion that the father alone could sue for recovery of possession and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff came in revision to the High Court.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal (with him Mr. A. H. C. Hamilton), for the opposite parties, raised a preliminary objection to the hearing of the application:—

The ground on which the revision is sought is that the lower court was wrong in law in holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to sue. A mere mistake of law is not a sufficient ground for revision. Besides, the plaintiff has another remedy open to him; he can bring a regular suit for recovery of possession. Having another remedy, he is not entitled to come in revision.

Babu Jogendro Nath Chaudhuri (with him Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji and Babu Harendra Krishna Mukerji), for the plaintiff applicant:—

The only question for determination in a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act is, whether the plaintiff has been in actual possession. That question was found for the plaintiff. The court, however, held that the possession was not juridical possession. But, under section 9, the mere fact of possession is sufficient; it need not be juridical. The plaintiff was entitled to a decree under section 9; and in dismissing his suit the lower court has failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law. A revision lies under such circumstances. I am supported by the analogous case of Rudrappa bin Sankappa v. Narsingrao (2).

The other remedy, a regular suit for possession, which is open to the plaintiff is of an entirely different character from the one given by section 9. In a regular suit the plaintiff has to prove his title; but in a suit under section 9 no proof of title is required. The benefit and privilege conferred by section 9 are not available to the plaintiff by the other remedy. There is no other [649] remedy enforcing a mere right to continuance of possession. Strictly speaking, the plaintiff has no other remedy, as he has no title in himself.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal referred to Jwala v. Ganga Prasad (1).

KNOX and PIGGOTT, JJ.:—The petitioner instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Benares for possession. It was a summary suit brought in accordance with section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff's possession was not, as he expresses it, juridical, but merely physical, and that he enjoyed possession as representative of his father, who was the person entitled to possession, and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has come to this Court in revision. We have the authority of the case of Jwala v. Ganga Prasad (1) for refusing to interfere in revision in cases like the present, where another Civil Procedure Code (1908), order V, rules 15-23—Practice—Issue of summons—Summons transmitted for service to Court having jurisdiction in the place where defendant resides—Question of sufficiency or insufficiency of service to be determined by Court serving summons.

Where a summons is sent by a Court in which a suit is filed to a Court within the jurisdiction of which the defendant resides for service on the defendant, it is the serving court and not the issuing court with which, ordinarily speaking, rests the decision whether such summons has been properly served or not, though possibly there may be cases in which the issuing Court may find it necessary to re-open the question of service and to decide thereon. Roma Nath Bural v. Guggodonandan Sen (1) dissented from. The provisions of order V, rules 15 to 23, discussed.

[650] IN this case one Brij Mohan Lal filed a suit against Dwarka Prasad in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Agra. Summons was issued to the Munsif of Muttra on the 9th of April, 1910, for service on Dwarka Prasad. The date fixed for hearing was the 10th of May, 1910. A process-server subordinate to the Munsif's Court at Muttra went to the village where Dwarka Prasad was supposed to be residing. He made a return of the process on the 20th of April and in that return he said that he had effected substituted service under order V, rule 17. The Munsif of Muttra examined the process-server on oath touching his proceedings and declared that summons had not been duly served. With this declaration he ordered the summons to be returned to the Additional Subordinate Judge of Agra. No further steps appear to have been taken before the day appointed for hearing. On the day fixed for hearing the Additional Subordinate Judge took up the case and came to the conclusion that service upon Dwarka Prasad had been properly made. He therefore gave a decree ex parte against Dwarka Prasad. The defendant applied under order IX, rule 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure for restoration and re-hearing of the suit. This application was rejected. The defendant thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Pandit Shiam Kishan Dar, for the appellant.

Munshi Gulzari Lal, for the respondent.

KNOX and PIGGOTT, JJ.:—This is an appeal from an order passed by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Agra, rejecting an application made to him under Order IX, rule 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The applicant had in his petition alleged that the summons in the original case had not been duly served upon him. We find on looking at the record that the Additional Subordinate Judge of Agra had issued a summons to the Munsif of Muttra for service on Dwarka Prasad, on the 9th of April, 1910. The date fixed for hearing was the 10th of May, 1910. A process-server subordinate to the Munsif's Court at Muttra went to the village where Dwarka Prasad was supposed to be residing. He made a return of the process on the 20th of April and in that return he said that he had effected substituted service under order V, rule 17. The Munsif of Muttra [651] examined the process-server on oath touching his proceedings and declared that summons had not been duly served. With this declaration he ordered the summons to be returned to the Additional Subordinate Judge of Agra. No further steps appear to have been taken before the day appointed for hearing. On the day fixed for hearing the Additional Subordinate Judge took up the case and came to the conclusion, upon what grounds one cannot tell, that service upon Dwarka Prasad had been properly made. He therefore gave a decree ex parte against Dwarka Prasad. In the appeal from the order dismissing the application for rehearing the appellant takes the plea that the summons was not duly served upon the appellant, and that he had no notice of the suit.

It is contended that the return made by the Munsif of Muttra should be accepted as strong evidence that the summons was not duly served, and that the view taken by the Munsif of Muttra was the right and proper view, inasmuch as the serving officer's report shows that Dwarka Prasad was not at the time of the service present in the village and that there was no one authorized to receive summons on his behalf. Our attention was also drawn to the fact that there was evidence to show that Dwarka Prasad had not been to this village for a year or more, and that the plaintiff himself admitted that Dwarka Prasad had not been to the village for four months preceding the service. On the other hand it is contended before us that the Additional Subordinate Judge was the proper Court to say whether the service was properly effected or not, and reliance was placed in support of this contention on Romanath Bural v. Guggodonandan Sen (1). The procedure regarding service of summons is to be found in order V, rules 15 to 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Rule 21 lays down that the summons may be sent by the Court from which it is issued to any Court which has jurisdiction over the place where the defendant resides. The Court receiving the summons is directed by rule 23 to proceed as if the summons had been issued by that Court and shall then, by which we understand when the proceedings authorized have been taken, return the summons to the Court by which it was issued together [652] with the proceedings, if any, with regard thereto. The method which the Court has to adopt in serving processes is governed by the rules contained in order 5, and also such rules as may from time to time be laid down by this Court. In accordance with those rules the processes are to be entered in a register kept for the purpose and made over to the process-server. The process-server should carry out services, if possible, in one of the methods prescribed by rule 16 or rule 17. In the present case he appears to have endeavoured to effect service under rule 16, and as that was impossible, to have adopted the procedure prescribed by rule 17. There is no doubt that he was in error regarding the house upon the outer door of which he affixed the copy of the summons. It was not the house in which the defendant ordinarily resided at that time. But apart from this error his procedure was according to the rule. He returned the process to the Court from which he had received the summons with the report of service endorsed thereon. The Munsif of Muttra upon the return of the summons together with the affidavit of the serving officer went on under rule 19 to endorse a declaration to the effect that the summons had not been duly served. Appendix B, form No. 10, which provides for cases in which a summons for another Court is to be returned, shows that the procedure of the Munsif was correct. Obviously he is the person who is in the best position to decide whether the process has been duly served or not. The process-server is attached to his Court and he should be far better able to judge how far he is or is not telling the truth than a Court situate miles away and in whose presence the evidence regarding the service of process is not and cannot with proper regard to convenience be taken. Seeing that in this case the Munsif of Muttra acting with the powers given him by rules 23 and 19 had certified that the process had not been duly served, it was a very serious step for the Additional Subordinate Judge of Agra, without apparently any other evidence before him, to overrule this certificate and to declare that the process had been duly served. We are not prepared to say that there may not be cases in which the Court originally issuing the summons may find it necessary to re-open the question of service and to decide thereon. But such cases [653] should be rare, and it appears to us that under such circumstances the Court issuing the process should only act upon good and a strong evidence which comes or is brought to its notice. Order 5, rule 23, directs that the Court upon receipt of the process from another Court shall proceed as if it had full power to carry out the procedure laid down in rule 23. We see no reason why such procedure should be limited to all but the last sentence of rule 19, and why we should read into rule 19 that only the Court issuing the process is the Court that can declare that the summons has been duly served. It is easy to conceive that such a view of rule 19 may easily lead to unnecessary and round about procedure. If the contention were sound, it would mean that the Court receiving the summons may upon hearing the affidavit of the process-server come to the conclusion that it is the duty of the process-server to return to the village and make further search or that when a process-server has wrongly omitted to effect substituted service under rule 17 to order the process-server to go back and effect such substituted service. But whatever its opinion, it would not be able to issue the necessary orders, but would have to leave the orders to the Court issuing the summons. No advantage is gained by returning the summons to the issuing Court and then having it sent back by the issuing Court to the second Court to carry out a procedure of this kind. With due respect to the view taken in Romanath Bural v. Guggodonandan Sen (1), we are not prepared to follow what is therein laid down. In the present case we are satisfied that the Munsif of Muttra took the right view that the service had not been sufficient. It follows therefore that under order IX, rule 13 Dwarka Prasad was entitled to have the ex parte order and decree set aside and the case re-heard. We allow the appeal, set aside the order appealed from and direct the Additional Subordinate Judge to re-admit the case upon the file of pending cases and dispose of it according to law. Costs here and hitherto will abide the event.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

A mortgage-deed was executed by one Ram Sahai, who had two sons, Boli and Sundar, who were at the time joint with him. Boli attested the deed, and died subsequently, leaving two sons. The mortgagee sued after the death of Ram Sahai and Boli, and asked for a decree for sale against the mortgagors' son and grandsons. The latter pleaded absence of legal necessity for the alienation, which was also alleged to have been made without their consent. The court of first instance found that the transfer was made without legal necessity and without the consent of Sundar, but, as the grandsons had not been born at the time of the mortgage, the Court decreed the claim against them. Upon appeal by the grandsons the lower Appellate Court upheld the finding regarding absence of necessity; held that Boli was not estopped by reason of having attested the deed, and exempted the share of the appellants.

Upon second appeal by the plaintiff, the decree below was affirmed. The following judgment was delivered by KNOX, J.

"This appeal is another ingenious attempt to get behind findings of fact based on evidence. The learned vakil for the appellant ignores the fact that the findings are dead against him and tries to get rid of the decree by attacking points which in the face of the findings are against him. The appeal is dismissed with cost."

The plaintiff appealed under section 10 of the Letters Patent. The appeal was originally heard by STANLEY, C. J., and GRIFFIN, J., who remitted an issue. The appeal then came on for hearing before RICHARDS, C. J., and BANERJI, J.

Babu Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the appellant, relied on Chuttan Lal v. Kallu (2) and argued that upon the finding [655] that the grandsons were not in existence when the mortgage was made, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree against them and their share in the property.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the respondents, submitted that the mortgagor not having made the transfer with the assent of his coparceners who were then in existence, and there being no necessity for it the mortgage was invalid and created no charge upon any portion of the

RICHARDS, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit to enforce a mortgage. The mortgage was made in the year 1891 by one Ram Sahai. Ram Sahai had two sons, Boli and Sundar Lal. Boli left surviving him two sons, Babu Lal and Munshi Lal. The suit was instituted in the year 1909 against Sundar Lal, Babu Lal and Munshi Lal. The defence was that there was no legal necessity and that therefore Ram Sahai had no power to mortgage the ancestral property. The Court of first instance found that there was no legal necessity for the loan. It however, gave a decree for the sale of two-thirds of the property, exempting one-third as being the share of Sundar Lal, who had not consented to the mortgage. This was not very accurate, because on partition the share of Sundar Lal in the property after the death of his father would have been one-half and not one-third. On appeal by Babu Lal and Munshi Lal, the lower Appellate Court affirmed the finding on the question of legal necessity and dismissed the plaintiff's suit to the extent of a further one-third. Why it gave a decree for sale of one-third we do not know. However, the question does not arise, inasmuch as neither Babu Lal nor Munshi Lal appealed. The plaintiff then preferred an appeal to the High Court. The case coming before our learned brother, he dismissed the appeal, whereupon the present appeal was preferred under the Letters Patent. A Bench of this Court remitted issues to the Court below as to whether Babu Lal and Munshi Lal were born in the year 1891 when the mortgage was made. The finding on this issue is that neither was born until some [656] time subsequently. It is now contended on behalf of the appellant that inasmuch as neither Babu Lal nor Munshi Lal was alive at the date of the mortgage they cannot question the validity of the mortgage.

A passage to be found at page 449 of the 7th edition of Mayne's Hindu Law was referred to. It is as follows:—"A son cannot object to alienation validly made by his father before he was born or begotten, because he could only by birth obtain an interest in property which was then existing in his ancestor." It seems to us that in order that the alienation should bind sons who are afterwards begotten, it must be a valid and effectual alienation. On the very same page Mr. Mayne says:—"On the other hand, if the alienation was made by a father without necessity and without the consent of sons then living, it would not only be invalid against them but also against any son born before they had ratified the transaction; and no consent given by them after his birth would render it binding upon him.' In the present case the family at the time of the alienation consisted of Ram Sahai and his two sons, Boli and Sundar Lal. It is clear on the finding of the Court that Sundar Lal gave no consent. The attempted alienation was therefore invalid and ineffectual.

There is abundant authority, if it was wanted, that where there is no legal necessity, one of the co-parcenary body cannot alienate the ancestral property without the consent of all the other members; see Kali Shankar v. Nawab Singh (1). The case of Chuttan Lal v. Kallu (2) was also relied upon on behalf of the appellant. In that case it would appear that there had been a valid alienation before the birth of the member who afterwards sought to impugn its validity.

(1) (1909) I. L. R. 31 All. 507.

(2) (1910) I. L. R. 33 All. 283.

In our opinion the decision of our learned brother was correct and we therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Act No. IX of 1872 (Indian Contract Act), sections 10 and 11—Guardian and minor—Sale of his own property by guardian to minor—Sale valid if for benefit of minor.

A certificated guardian transferred some immovable property belonging to himself to his minor wards in satisfaction of money which he owed to them. After the guardian's death the minors sued his heirs for possession of the property. Held, on the finding that the transaction was bona fide and for the benefit of the minors, that the transfer in their favour was valid and could be enforced by them as against the heirs of their late guardian.

THIS was an appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of KARAMAT HUSAIN, J. The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment under appeal, which was as follows :—

"One Mul Chand, who was a certificated guardian of the two plaintiffs, Ulfat Rai and Balak Ram, executed a sale-deed of some immovable property belonging to himself in favour of his minor wards, and applied for mutation of names, but died before the passing of possession to the minors After his death the minors brought an action for possession of the property. The court of first instance, on the authority of Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (1), dismissed the suit on the ground that a contract to which a minor is party is void. On appeal the decree of the court of first instance was affirmed by the lower appellate court. The lower appellate court in its judgment says, 'Mul Chand, deceased, who executed the sale deed in their favour, happened to be their certificated guardian, but there is nothing in the sale-deed or the plaint to show that he acted in his dual capacity in this transaction. He did not make the contract with himself as guardian of his wards. His contract was clearly with the wards themselves, and it was therefore void ab initio.' The plaintiffs have preferred a second appeal to this court, and two points are argued before me. The first is that when the guardian contracted and sold the property to his wards he must be deemed to have purchased it himself as guardian, and that the minors must not be deemed to be a party to the conveyance of sale. In the face of the finding recorded by the lower appellate court I cannot accede to this contention. The minors must be deemed to be a party to the conveyance of sale. The second is that as the sale was made in favour of a minor the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in I. L. R 30 Cal. 539, has no application In support of this contention the learned vakil relies on certain observations made in Meghan Dube v. Pran Singh (2). Those observations are as follows :—' The first plea raised on behalf of the appellants is that [658] the contract on which the suit is based is void, inasmuch as the mortgagee was a minor at the date of the execution of the mortgage-deed. The learned vakil for the appellants relies upon the ruling of the Privy Council referred to above upon which the court of first instance had based one of its conclusions. That was a case in which their Lordships of the Privy Council held that a contract made by a minor was absolutely void and not merely voidable. That, however, is not the case here. The contract in this case was made by persons of full age, but the person in whose favour the mortgage-deed was executed was a minor. The question of validity of the mortgage does not in our opinion arise.' The learned vakil on the basis of the above observations says that in the case before me the sale was made by a person of full age and the minors in whose favour the sale was made were vendees and that, therefore, the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council does not govern this case. I am of opinion that a contract to which a minor is a party, be he a promisee or a promisor is void, and with the greatest respect to the observations made by the learned judges in Meghan Dube v. Pran Singh, I find myself unable to hold that the sale in favour of the minors, because the vendor was of age, is not void. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs."

The plaintiffs appealed.

Munshi Gulzari Lal, for the appellants, submitted that the Privy Council ruling had no application and that there was no prohibition in law against a minor being a transferee. In this case it must be held that Mul Chand acted as guardian in the matter of sale. He relied on Meghan Dube v. Pran Singh (1).

Munshi Govind Prasad, for the respondents, relied on Nanakotti Narayanga Chetty v. Logalinga Chetty (2), and an unreported judgment of KNOX and PIGGOTT, JJ., in E. F. A. 92 of 1910, decided on the 10th of May, 1911, and contended that the plaintiffs as minors could not enter into a contract of sale. The finding of the lower appellate Court was that Mul Chand did not act as their guardian in the matter of the sale and this finding was binding in second appeal.

RICHARDS, C.J., and BANERJI, J.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are very simple. One Mul Chand was the certificated guardian of the plaintiffs. He managed their property for some time and shortly before his death he found himself indebted to them in the sum of Rs. 2,500. In order to discharge this liability he transferred by a document, which on the face of it appears to be a sale-deed, certain immovable property to the minors. He next proceeded to make an application [659] to have mutation of names effected for the benefit of the minors, but before this matter could be carried out Mul Chand died. The defendants, who are the heirs of Mul Chand, then entered into possession. One of the minors has now come of age, and he brings this suit on behalf of himself and his minor brother to recover the property which was transferred into their names by Mul Chand. The defence is that a contract for sale with a minor is absolutely void and reliance is placed on Mohori Bibee v Dharmodas Ghose, (3). This defence on the face of it is very unmeritorious. It certainly would be a very fraudulent defence, if it had been put forward by Mul Chand, but it is to be said in his favour that if he had lived he never would have put forward the defence which is now put forward by his heirs. In our opinion the proper inference to be drawn from the peculiar facts of this case is that Mul Chand acting on behalf of the minors transferred into their names the property in question. If Mul Chand, as guardian of the minor, had negotiated with a third party and purchased on their behalf certain property and had it transferred into the names of the minors, we do not think it could for a moment be said that the transfer would be void. We do not think that the mere fact that the property in question was the property of Mul Chand can make any difference where we find that transaction was for the benefit of the minors. No doubt if a certificated guardian had fraudulently transferred certain property of his own for more than it was worth to the minors, the minors would be able to repudiate the transfer on the ground of fraud. There is, however, nothing in the Transfer of Property Act which makes a minor incapable of being the transferee of immovable property. He cannot transfer immovable property, it is true, but that is a different thing from becoming a transferee.

We consider that under the circumstances of this case we are entitled to make and ought to make every reasonable presumption in favour of the minors, and we consider that we are quite justified in presuming that Mul Chand in his capacity as guardian of the minors accepted the transfer on their behalf In the view that we hold it is not necessary to express any opinion upon [660] the broad question as to what would be the effect of a transaction in which it was clearly shown that a minor acting entirely in his own behalf con racted for and purchased immovable property. This case is devoid of all merits. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of this court and of the courts below and remand the case to the court of first instance for determination of the other question. The plaintiffs will have their costs of the appeal to this court and of the lower appellate court. The costs in the court of first instance will abide the event.

Appeal allowed.

THE facts of this case are as follows :—

A certain piece of land in village Gangoli, district Saharanpur, measuring 3 bighas and 10 biswas, was alleged by the plaintiffs to be part of an endowment comprising a mosque, a grave-yard, a takia (fakir's stand) and a shrine of one Hazrat Abdulla Nekmard. The Muhammadan defendants and their ancestor, Haji Shah, were mujawars, attendants who received a part of the offerings at the shrine, but had no right of transfer. They held the property subject to the will of the plaintiffs and other Muhammadans, and the superintendence of the property was in the hands of the plaintiffs and their ancestors. Defendants [661] Nos. 1 to 3, the Muhammadan defendants, had sold to defendants Nos. 4 to 7, the Hindu defendants, a portion of the land, alleging it to be their property, and plaintiffs therefore brought the present suit stating that the sale had been made at the instigation of the Hindus of the village, who had claimed the mosque as a temple on two previous occasions in 1844 and 1861, and had raised a dispute in consequence of which there had been both civil and criminal litigation, and that at both times the mosque had been held to be waqf property, and all the Muhammadans of the village had a right to use the shrine, the mosque, the grave-yard, the takia and the land attached for upkeep and maintenance for the performance of their religious ceremonies and the burial of their dead. The defence set up by the Muhammadan defendants was that the tomb on the land was that of their ancestor Abdulla Nekmard, and that it as well as the land which surrounded it was their private property of which they held possession as owners. There might be a few graves on the plot, but they were of their ancestors only. It was not a public grave yard, the defendants having long had their houses on the land, and having let out part of the land itself. They further alleged that the suit had been instituted by Abu Nasar at the instigation of some of the other plaintiffs, Kallu, Abdul Hasan and Ghissa, whom one of the defendants, Imam-uddin, had prosecuted for assault and criminal trespass, and that the plaintiffs, if they had any cause of action, should bring a suit under section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Defendants Nos. 4 to 7 supported this written statement.

It was held by the court of first instance that the property was waqf; that the plaintiffs had held possession within twelve years preceding the suit, and that the defendants had acted prior to this litigation as trustees only and that their alienation was not bona fide. It consequently decreed the suit.

The lower appellate court was of opinion that possession had not been proved by the plaintiffs, but that they had a right to sue as members of the Muhammadan community, and it upheld the decree.

The defendants appealed.

[662] Mr. Nihal Chand (for Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji), for the appellants:—

The wajib-ul-arz and the other documents in the case had not been interpreted correctly by the courts below. Properly construed, they showed that the property was transferable, and appellants had acquired a valid title therein. Plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree for possession, as possession had not been shown, and they had no cause of action. The proper remedy of the plaintiffs lay in a suit under section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Mr. Abdul Raoof, for the respondents.

Defendants were not mutawallis and were as much trespassers as any body. Every Muhammadan of the locality had a right to prevent the deterioration of the waqf property. The plaintiffs had a right to sue as Zamindars and as members of the public: Zafaryab Ali v. Bakhtawar Singh (1), Jawahra v. Akbar Husain (2). The right was confined to the local Muhammadans. Plaintiffs had a right of prayer in the mosque, and therefore they were interested in its protection and maintenance. There were no trustees in this case. The mujawars were mere trespassers. The cause of action arose on the sale of the property.

Kazi Hassan v. Sagun Balkrishna (1) and Muhammad Abdullah Khan v. Kallu (2) were referred to.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, in reply :—

Section 539 was amended in 1888, and a large number of cases were overruled. Plaintiffs had no cause of action. They could not bring a suit for possession merely because they possessed a right of entry. Plaintiffs were not prevented from exercising their right of entry. Section 30 of the Civil Procedure Code also applied. A declaration was purely a discretionary remedy in this case. There was no interference with the rights of any body by the sale. He referred to Amir Ali's Muhammadan Law p. 545-9. Amir Ali and Woodroffe, Civil Procedure Code, page 365.

KARAMAT HUSAIN and CHAMIER, JJ. :—This was a suit by the respondents who are some of the Muhammadan residents of Kasba [663] Gangoli in the Saharanpur district for a declaration that 3 bighas odd of land situated in the Kasba was waqf property, that certain sale deeds executed by the Muhammadan appellants in favour of the Hindu appellants were invalid, for possession of the property alienated, and for other reliefs. The respondents' case was and is that in the Kasba in question there has for a very long time been a shrine dedicated to one Abdulla Nekmard, a mosque, grave-yard, a takia, and various buildings ; that the land and all the buildings thereon are waqf; that all the Muhammadans of the Kasba have a right to use the shrine, mosque, grave-yard, and takia, and that the land which has been alienated was originally made waqf for the purpose of providing for the expenses of the mosque and takia. The respondents alleged that the Muhammadan appellants were mujawars attached to the mosque and takia. The appellants pleaded that the Muhammadan appellants were owners of the property which they had alienated. The first court found that the land and buildings were all waqf ; that the transfers which had been made were invalid, and that section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure which was in force at the time the suit was brought, did not bar the suit and it decreed the claim. Its decision was confirmed on appeal by the District Judge who held that the property was waqf and that the suit was not barred by limitation. The first question for decision in this second appeal is, whether there is evidence to support the finding that the property is waqf. The District Judge rests his decision principally upon documentary evidence which begins with a Goshwara Khatauni prepared under Regulation IX of 1833 and ends with certain public documents dated as recently as 1897. We think that it is unnecessary to detail these documents. In our opinion they fully justify the conclusion of the learned Judge that the property was made waqf many years ago, and has been treated as such until recently and that the Muhammadan defendants are no more than mujawars, although they in fact claim to be the proprietors of the property. The 13th ground of appeal to the District Judge was that the suit was barred by section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Judge notes in the course of his judgment that this ground of appeal was not taken in the memorandum of appeal to his Court, but the [664] question was raised in the course of the argument, and we think we are bound to take notice of it. It seems to us quite clear that the suit is not one of the kind or kinds contemplated by section 539 of the Code of 1882 or section 92 of the present Code of Civil Procedure. But if it is not a suit of the kind contemplated by those sections the question arises whether the plaintiffs respondents have any right to maintain the suit. It is quite clear that all the Muhammadan residents of the Kasba could have joined in a suit of this description to protect the waqf property, and that if the respondents had obtained the leave of the Court under section 30 of the Code, they could have maintained the suit on be half of the Muhammadan community.

They did not attempt to obtain permission of the Court, but in view of the fact that no objection on the ground of the absence of such permission was taken to the suit, either in the Court of first instance or in the lower appellate Court, and to the fact that the objection based upon section 539 of the Code of 1882 was dropped in the lower appellate court, we think that it would be wrong to dismiss the suit on the ground that the permission of the Court was not obtained under section 30 of the Code. It seems that according to the decisions in Muhammad Abdullah Khan v. Kallu (1), Jamal-ud-din v. Mujtaba Husain (2) and Kazi Hassan v. Sagun Balkrishna (3) the respondents are entitled to maintain the suit themselves without reference to the provisions of section 30 of the Code. In either view, therefore, we must hold that the suit is maintainable. It seems to us, however, that whether the respondents are regarded as suing for themselves or on behalf of the whole Muhammadan community of the Kasba, they are not entitled to a decree for possession of the property. They are entitled only to a declaration that the transfers mentioned in the first prayer for relief are invalid on the ground that the property is waqf. In this view it is unnecessary to consider the question which was raised in the Court below as to whether the plaintiff's respondents were at any time in possession of the property.

[665] For the above reasons we allow the appeal in part and in lieu of the decree for possession of the property we declare that the transfers made by the Muhammadan defendants in favour of the Hindu defendants are invalid. As the appeal has in substance failed and the point on which the decree has been modified was not taken in the grounds of appeal. We direct that the appellants pay the costs of the respondents.

Appeal dismissed.

THE following pedigree explains the position of the parties to this appeal and other persons to whom reference will be made:—

RAM CHARAN DUBE.
(died June 1878).

Deoki Nandan =Sonkali

Laohhmi Prasad.

Kali Prasad (died Maroh 1887).

Sarup Narain.

Jainti Prasad (died 18-9) = Mundra, defendant.

Triloki (died 20th April 1908) =Kishori, plaintiff.

Deoki Nandan died in his father's lifetime. Kali Prasad was alleged to have become a fakir, but he returned and filed a suit [666] for partition, in which a decree was made on the 6th of June 1874, giving him a one-third share. Jainti Prasad died in 1889, and after him Sarup Narain continued in possession. He was succeeded by his son Triloki, and the latter by his widow Kishori. Mundra, the widow of Jainti Prasad, executed a lease of two villages, Misraulia and Gular Bahar, claiming that they were her husband's self-acquisition. She set up a gift by Ram Charan and a will of Kali Prasad in favour of the two brothers. Musammat Kishori then filed the present suit to have the lease set aside, alleging that these documents had never been given effect to, and that the brothers had taken the estate jointly in the natural course. The court of first instance held that Jainti Prasad and Sarup Narain were joint; that the gift was of no operation, as Ram Charan was joint with them, and that they were the natural heirs of Kali Prasad. The defendant appealed, alleging that the brothers were not joint, as they used to live separately. The District Judge held that the property had been held in severalty, as there had been a gift. As mutation did not correspond to the actual shares, there must have been family exchanges and transfers of the property. The plaintiff appealed.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sunder Lal (with him Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji and Munshi Govind Prasad,) for the appellant:—

The whole property was joint and ancestral. The will and the deed of gift were executed, but had never been given effect to. The property had devolved in the natural course. The will of Kali Prasad merely declared his natural heirs to be heirs. It simply said 'jo bhatijyan hamare hain waris apna qayam karke likh dete hain.' The gift by Ram Charan was invalid because the property was joint family property. There was no specification of shares even. There was no evidence as to any partition in the family save that about Kali Prasad's. This was comprised in the decree of the 6th of June, 1874, which merely defined his share as one-third. This partition could only be effective as between the brothers, but would not affect the brother's sons. Therefore Sarup Narain and Jainti Prasad continued to be joint.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

[667] There may have been partition as between Kali Prasad and Ram Charan, but there was no partition inter se between Ram Charan, Lachhmi Prasad and his sons. Probably Lachhmi Prasad was alive on the date of the gift by Ram Charan. There can be only two theories in the case. Either on the partition by Kali Prasad, the rest of the family continued joint, or there was also a division between them consequent on the partition. Assuming that there was this fresh partition, Lachhmi Prasad would have got his share of the property, and that share would be joint as between him and his two sons, and Ram Charan's own share would descend to them as joint property. The decree of the 6th of June, 1874, was also in the plaintiff's favour, because it also did not specify any shares except that of one-third awarded to Kali Prasad.

The question is whether Jainti Prasad and Sarup Narain were joint when Jainti Prasad died. No actual partition between them was proved as a matter of fact. The court of first instance found that they were joint. The lower court did not go into the question at all. If there was no actual evidence of partition, there was no inference of partition in law. Assuming that Ram Charan and Lachhmi Prasad got one-third each, Lachhmi Prasad's one-third share would be joint as between Sarup Narain and Jainti Prasad. There was no proof even that Sarup Narain and Jainti Prasad were born at the time of the partition suit. Therefore Lachhmi Prasad and his sons were joint, and as between the sons there was no partition.

Lachhmi's interest was inherited jointly by his sons and became joint property. In any case, the two villages, Misraulia and Gular Babar, would be joint property, and these very villages had been leased out by the respondent. There was no specification of shares in the will by Kali Prasad. The whole property was therefore given jointly to two members of a joint family, and would descend to them as joint property ; Venkayyamma Garu v. Venkataramanayyamma Bahadur Garu (1). This was a very strong case, and it did not accept the Allahabad ruling on the point, though the latter was so reasonable. The [668] Privy Council held that under an intestacy, daughter's sons would take jointly. Not only the sons of one daughter, but the sons of several daughters residing in several families at several places would all hold a joint estate in any property that descended to them, and that property would possess all the incidents of joint family property. Their Lordships of the Privy Council overruled Jasoda Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh (2), which had laid down that if any property that was not joint property came into the possession of joint members of a family, it would not be joint property.

This ruling applies if there is no separate specification of shares, i. e., if the gift or sale be made jointly. I may refer to the case of a joint purchase. This is the case of a joint gift. These are modes of acquisition of property. The ordinary presumption of Hindu Law is in favour of jointness. The instance of the funds being separate only rebuts that presumption. If there are six members in a joint family property given only to three or four, would it be joint as between these three or four. There is no getting out of the Privy Council case. The facts are almost parallel. Property is held here jointly. Sons and nephews may not be co-owners, yet they hold it jointly. The contrary must be shown by him who alleges separation. No difference can be made, because persons in the ascending or descending line do not share in the joint property; Radhabai v. Nanarav (1), Mankamna Kunwar v. Balkishan Das (2), Durga Dei v. Balmakund (3) and Ram Pershad Singh v. Lakhpati Koer (4).

The course of conduct later on in the family would show the devolution of the property. It was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove adverse possession. She succeeded to it in the natural course. It was alleged that there was no denial of defendant's title before suit. It was unnecessary, because defendant was not in possession, and it only became necessary when she executed this lease. If Ram Charan, Lachmi Prasad, and [669] his sons were joint, the latter succeeded to the property by inheritance and held it jointly. If partition was assumed, the interest of Lachhmi Prasad was still joint with that of his sons, and the share of Ram Charan came to them jointly; as also did Kali Prasad's interest in his share. The villages under lease were covered neither by the gift nor by the will. They devolved on the plaintiff, and the defendant had no title. The lease was invalid in law.

Babu Surendra Nath Sen (with him the Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru) for the respondents :—

The decree of the 6th of June, 1874, was not a mere declaratory decree, as it contained a patition of revenue-paying property. The terms of that decree themselves show that it was a partition decree. It was passed on two suits for partition, one against Ram Charan and one against Lachhmi Prasad and the widow of Deoki Nandan. A decree for one-third would never have been passed unless there had been persons in the suit representing particular units of the family. The nature of the tenancy was converted from joint tenancy to tenancy in common as soon as the Court had to determine a share. It was not necessary for the decree to separate Lachhmi Prasad and his two sons. The ruling in 29 Allahabad does not affect the case. So long as Ram Charan's share was not determined, Kali Prasad's could not be found. Hence the shares of both Ram Charan and Lachhmi Prasad had to be found. In 29 All. 93. half had been given to uncle and half to his brother's two joint sons, it was not necessary there to determine the shares of the two sons. They were treated merely as members of one branch. The same principle applies here; Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (5). Kali Prasad did not continue joint even after the decree, because the will declared that he was the sole and absolute owner, and he executed a sale deed to Ishri Prasad of one-third of his own one-third share on the 14th of August, 1874.

I would invite the attention of the Court to the gift of Ram Charan. The gift militates against the theory of jointness. What could be the ostensible object of making a gift to his natural heirs, who were already members of a joint family? The [670] parties to the decree constituted the aggregate units of the joint family; Parsotam Rao v. Radha Bai (6). As to the case of daughters, the general rule was that daughters took a joint estate, and if one of them died, her sons could not succeed as against the others. There was no question of Hindu Law, but entirely of construction; Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dasse v. Denobundoo Mullick (7). One should look to the surrounding circumstances only if there was an ambiguity in construction. In 1878, the testator could have no anticipations that Jainti Prasad would die young, because if Jainti Prasad would have left any children, they would not inherit. A presumption of joint tenancy existed in Hindu law but not in English law. It would be a question of construction in each case. and would not be held joint merely because the donees happened to be joint; Vydinada v. Nagammal (1). There was a conflict of judicial opinion on this point, till Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (2), which overruled 11 Mad. and held that documents were to be subject to natural interpretation and not to technical rules of English Law. Rewun Persad v. Mussumat Radha Beeby (3), Mankamna Kunwar v. Balkishan Das (4), Gopi v. Jaldhara (5), Bhoba Tarini Debya v. Peary Lall Sanyal (6), Bai Diwali v. Patel Bechardas (7) and Karuppai Nachiar v. Sankaranarayanan Chetty (8) were also cited.

As to the argument that the documents had not been given effect to, there was a clear finding of fact in the judgment of the lower Court, and this ground could not be urged in second appeal. The two villages of Misraulia and Gular Bahar were merely reclaimed jungle and so had not been mentioned by name in the deeds. Their lordships had to look at the deed of gift only by itself; Zahuran v. Rahim (9). Mere continuity of possessoin was not adverse possession. The latter had not been proved.

Munshi Govind Prasad, in reply.

[671] CHAMIER, J.—The following pedigree explains the position of the parties to this appeal and other persons to whom reference will be made:—

After the death of Deoki Nandan, which occurred many years ago, Ram Charan, his sons Kali Prasad and Lachhmi Prasad, and his grandsons Jainti Prasad and Sarup Narain constituted a joint family. In 1874, Kali Prasad brought suits against Ram Charan, Lachhmi Prasad and Sonkali for partition and possession of his share in the family property and obtained decrees which established his right to possession of a one-third share. In August 1876, Kali Prasad made a will whereby he left his shares in the villages Katyalu, Bisauli, Kanura and Badhya, to his nephews, Jainti Prasad and Sarup Narain. In January, 1878, Ram Charan executed a deed of gift whereby he transferred to the same two persons his ancestral and acquired shares in the four villages mentioned above and other property. All the males in the family have died. The dates on which they died are not material. It is only necessary to state that Jainti Prasad predeceased his brother Sarup Narain, and on Jainti's death mutation of names in respect of the shares standing in his name was made in favour of the respondent, Musammat Mundra. On the death of Sarup Narain, mutation of names in respect of the property standing in his name was made in favour of his son, Triloki Narain, and on the latter's death in favour of the appellant, Musammat Kishori. It may be mentioned here that Musammat Sonkali was at one time recorded with Jainti and Sarup as one of the proprietors of shares in two villages called Misraulia and Gular Bahar, a fact which seems to have puzzled the lower appellate court. The explanation is to be found in the deed of gift executed by Ram Charan, whereby he gave his [672] shares in certain jungle land to Musammat Sonkali for life and thereafter to his two grandsons. That land, as the lower appellate court has shown, is now known as Misraulia and Gular Bahar. With the exception of these two villages the whole of the property in the six villages with which we are concerned in the present case was for many years recorded in the names of Jainti Prasad and Sarup Narain.

The respondent, Musammat Mundra, having made a lease of her recorded shares in two of the villages in favour of the respondent, Mahant Beni Bibikanandgir, and having in other ways shown that she intended to claim a widow's estate in the property recorded in her name, the appellant brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, claiming a declaration that she is the owner and in possession of the property recorded in Musammat Mundra's name, and that the lease is invalid. The appellant's case is that the brothers, Jainti and Sarup, held all the property recorded in their names as members of a joint family; that on the death of Jainti the whole passed to Sarup Narain, on the latter's death to Triloki Narain, and on his death to the appellant who has been in undisputed possession for many years. The respondent's case is that the decree of 1874 operated to sever the interests of Kali Prasad, Ram Charan and Lachhmi Prasad; that each took a one-third share, Lachhmi Prasad taking one-third for himself and his two sons; that Jainti Prasad and Sarup Narain each took a separate interest under the will of their uncle, Kali Prasad, and under the deed of gift executed by their grandfather, with the result that the interest of Jainti, which is the property now in dispute, passed on his death to his widow, Musammat Mundra.

The first question is as to the effect of the decree of 1874. There is no doubt that the decree operated to sever the share of Kali Prasad from the shares of the rest of the family. The appellant referred to the decisions in Durga Dei v. Balmakund(1) and Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (2) and contended that as shares were not actually allotted by the decree to Ram Charan and Lachhmi Prasad, these two should be held to have remained joint in estate. The respondent referred to the case of [673] Ram Pershad Singh v. Lakhpati Koer (3), and contended that Ram Charan and Lachhmi Prasad should be regarded as having held separately after the decree, because in order to determine the shares of Kali Prasad it was necessary to determine the shares of Ram Charan and Lachhmi Prasad, and because the evidence shows that they held their shares separately after the decree. They might, no doubt, have elected to remain in union, but the evidence shows that they did not. Ram Charan, as already stated, transferred his shares to his grandsons, and there is other evidence to support the view of the lower appellate court that Ram Charan held a separate share after the decree of 1874.

The second and most important question in this case is whether Jainti Prasad and Sarup Narain took separate interests under the will and deed of gift, as contended by the respondents, or took the property as undivided co-parceners, as contended by the appellant. The latter does not suggest that the two brothers took the property as joint tenants in the sense of the English law. Her learned advocate relied principally upon the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Venkatayyamma Garu v. Venkataramanayyamma Bahadur Garu (1). That case does not appear to me to have any real bearing on the question which we have to decide. There the question was whether the sons of a daughter who were members of a joint family with their father and had succeeded to their maternal grandfather's estate on the death of their mother, took the property as undivided co-parceners (i.e. jointly) or as tenants in common. It has been pointed out by the Madras High Court, see Karuppai Nachiar v. Sankaranarayanan Chetty (2), that that decision cannot be regarded as laying down a rule that all property coming to two or more persons who happen to be members of a joint family is taken by them jointly, i.e., with the rights of co-parceners in a joint family. Moreover, we have to deal here not with succession on an intestacy, to which alone the ruling of the Privy Council can be applied, but to a case of property passing under a deed of gift. The nature of the interests [674] taken by the two brothers depends upon the language of the will and deed of gift, and, if the language is ambiguous, upon any presumption or rule of construction that may be applicable to such documents. There is nothing either in the will or the deed of gift which gives any indication as to whether the testator or donor intended that the two brothers should hold as undivided co-parceners or as tenants in common with separate interests. There are cases, e. g., Vydinada v. Nagammal (3) and Mankamna Kunwar v. Balkishan Das (4), in which it has been held in accordance with a rule of English law that a gift or bequest to two persons without more creates a joint tenancy, but their Lordships of the Privy Council have disapproved of the application of this rule to the will of a Hindu and have observed that the principle of joint tenancy is unknown to Hindu law except in the case of co-parcenary between the members of an undivided family ; Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Kam Chandra Dutt (5). As regard may be had to surrounding circumstances in order to ascertain the meaning of the testator in the one case and of the donor in the other, the learned advocate for the appellant has relied upon the fact that the brothers were at the time of the gift and will members of a joint family and has pointed out that this circumstance was relied upon by this Court in the case of Mankamna Kunwar v. Balkishan Das (4) as a reason for holding that a joint tenancy had been created by a deed of gift. The respondent's learned vakil contended that the authority of the last mentioned case was much weakened by the erroneous application of a rule of English conveyancing to the construction of a deed of gift executed by a Hindu, and he referred to a later case of Gopi v Jaldhara (6), in which, following a decision of the Privy Council, one of the same Judges declined to apply that rule to the construction of a will executed by a Hindu. The learned vakil referred also to the case of Bai Diwali v. Patel Bechardas (7). There, property had been given to two brothers who were members of a joint Hindu family. One died leaving a widow, and it was held that she was [675] entitled to half the property as heir of her husband. The facts of the present case are very much the same. It was suggested that, as this Court in the case of Mankamna Kunwar v. Balkishan Das (1) relied upon the fact that the donees were living as undivided co-parceners as a reason for holding that the donor intended that they should hold the property passing to them under the deed of gift, in the same manner we should give the same weight to a similar circumstance in the present case. That would not be a proper way of using a reported decision. One document cannot be construed by reference to decisions on other documents executed in different circumstances and containing different language. We must determine for ourselves what weight should be attached to the fact that the two brothers, Jainti Prasad and Sarup Narain, were living in union when the will and deed of gift were executed in their favour. It was suggested that a passage in the judgment of the Privy Council in Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (2), to the effect that the principle of joint tenancy is unknown to the Hindu law except in the sense of co-parcenary between the members of an undivided family recognizes the possibility of property being given or devised to two or more Hindus to be held by them in co-parcenary under the Hindu law. But the context shows that nothing of the kind was intended or contemplated. Their Lordships were considering only the incidents of the right of survivorship between joint tenants under the English law. There seems to be a difficulty in treating a gift or devise of property to two members of a joint family as gift or devise to them of property to be held as undivided co-parceners, for, as pointed out in the case of Bai Diwali v. Lalee Bechardas (3), such a devise or gift would create interests in favour of the issue of the donees who might be unborn at the time of the gift on the death of the testator. I see no reason whatever for supposing that either Ram Charan or Kali Prasad intended that any children that might be born to either of the brothers should on their birth acquire an interest in the property. It must be remembered that the two brothers were at the time joint with [676] their father, Lachhmi Prasad, and others, and the fact that the gift and devise were made to them only suggests that there was no intention to benefit any other members of the joint family whether then in existence or to be born thereafter. It must also be remembered that Ram Charan had already given some property to Lachhmi Prasad to be held by him separately. In the circumstances I am unable to come to the conclusion that either Kali Prasad or Ram Charan intended that the two brothers should hold the property given to them as undivided co-parceners. The fact that the two brothers were joint is not in my opinion a sufficient reason, in the present case, for holding that the donor and testator intended that they should hold the property as undivided co-parceners. The lower appellate Court held that the brothers took in severalty, and I am not satisfied that that decision is erroneous.

The question of limitation is disposed of by the finding of the lower appellate Court that, though there is no good evidence of possession on the part of Musammat Mundra, there is no good evidence that her relatives ever held adversely to her.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

KARAMAT HUSAIN, J.—I agree.

THE facts of this case are fully stated in the order of Tudball J. referring the appeal to a Bench of two Judges.

"The facts of this case as held by the Court below are as follows:—

"In the year 1879 there was a joint Hindu family consisting of Hulas Rai and his two sons, Dal Chand and Gulab Rai. Dal Chand was then a minor of some 8 or 9 years of age. Gulab Rai was an adult. The family home was at Daulatgarh, a village in the Bulandshahr district Gulab Rai purchased a house in that year, situated in the town of Bulandshahr. There is no evidence to show that at that time there was any nucleus of family property or any family funds of any sort. The present plaintiff appellant obtained a money decree against Gulab Rai and Dal Chand in recent years Hulas Rai is dead. Gulab Rai executed a sale deed of the house in question in favour of the contending defendant, Tunda Mal. The plaintiff attached it in execution of his decree Tunda Mal objected on the ground that it belonged to him, and it was released. Thereupon plaintiff brought this suit for a declaration that the house belonged to Gulab Rai and Dal Chand and was liable to attachment and sale in execution of his decree. In his plaint he merely alleged that Gulab Rai and Dal Chand were both owners of the home, without stating how or when they acquired it. He then mentioned the circumstances of the attachment and the objections raised and the decision thereon. He then alleged that Gulab Rai had in order to defeat and defraud him executed a fictitious and collusive sale deed in favour of Tunda Mal without any consideration. Gulab Rai being dead on the date of institution of the suit, his daughter was made a defendant in his place. Tunda Mal defended the suit He pleaded (1) that Gulab Rai alone was the owner of the house; (2) that the sale was a bona fide sale for consideration; (3) that Dal Chand was separate from Gulab Rai. Both the courts held:—

(1) That Gulab and Dal Chand were joint.
(2) That the sale to Tunda Mal was bona fide and for consideration.

[678] "The Munsif, however, held that as Gulab and his brother were joint, the presumption was that the house was acquired from joint family funds, and therefore Gulab Rai alone had no power to sell it, it being joint family property. He therefore held the sale to be invalid in law and decreed the claim. The lower appellate Court, however, held that, there being no evidence to show that Gulab Rai purchased the house out of joint family funds, the presumption was that he had acquired it for himself. The Munsif relied on the decision in Lamraj Rai v. Salik Rai (6). In this case the pleadings disclosed the fact that the family was possessed of property. The lower Court relied on the ruling in Hem Nath Rai v. Janki Rai (7), in which it was held that to render property in the hands of members of a joint Hindu family joint property, the consideration for its purchase must have either proceeded out of ancestral funds or have been produced out of the joint property or by joint labour ; but neither of these alternatives is matter of legal presumption. It can only be brought to the cognisance of the Court by evidence, and he who wishes to establish it must produce that evidence. Both these two decisions were given by Judges of this Court sitting singly. The case for the plaintiff appellant as put forward now is that the family was joint and therefore presumably joint in estate as well as in food and worship. Accordingly the presumption is that Gulab Rai acquired the house out of joint family funds. Admittedly there is no evidence whatsoever that in 1879 there were any joint funds. The opposite party alleges separation. It is urged on his behalf that there can be no presumption that the joint family possessed any funds at all. Mr. Justice AIKMAN in Ramraj Rai v. Salik Rai, ruled that it was not necessary to show that the family was possessed of means, wherefrom the property might have been acquired, but the pleadings in that case disclosed the fact that the family was possessed of property. Here they do not, and considering the state of the pleadings it seems to me hard to hold that the presumption is that this house was acquired out of family funds. It is neither admitted nor proved that there was any nucleus of family property. My attention has been called to certain rulings and decisions of the Calcutta High Court. In view of the conflict, however, between the two rulings of this Court mentioned above, I refer the matter to a Bench of two Judges."

Mr. Abdul Raoof, for the appellant, contended that the whole question in the appeal was whether the burden had been rightly laid upon the plaintiff. The presumption of law in the case of every Hindu family was that it was joint in food, worship and estate, so that the person who alleged the contrary was bound to prove it. The Courts below had found that the brothers lived jointly and the first Court had further found that there was some business carried on by the family ; therefore the defendant was bound to prove that the house was the exclusive property of Gulab Rai. The presumption being that a Hindu family was joint in estate, it was incumbent upon the defendant to prove that [679] the house, acquired as it has been when the family was joint, was Gulab Rai's exclusive property. The plaintiff was not bound to prove that there was a nucleus of property by means of which the house was acquired. He relied on Taruck Chunder Totadar v. Joodheshteer Chunder Koondoo (1), Gobind Chunder Mookerjee v. Doorgapersaud Baboo (2), Jagmohandas Kilabhai v. Allu Maria Duskal (3) and Ramraj v. Salik Rai (4). He criticised the ruling of KNOX J., in Hem Nath Rai v. Janki Rai (5) as being in conflict with the above cases, and having overlooked the statement of the law contained in Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage, 7th ed., p. 365, section 290.

Babu Sarat Chandra Chaudhri (for Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri), for the respondent, Tunda Mal, argued that in every case the plaintiff must lay the foundation by stating proper facts. In the present case all that was alleged was that the two brothers were the owners of the house in suit, and the fact was denied by the respondent, who further alleged that the house was the self-acquired property of Gulab Rai. From this statement it would by no means follow that the house was joint property. The normal condition of every Hindu family was that it was joint, i. e., it had not entered into a partition, but there was no presumption that such family possessed property. In order to be joint property the consideration for its purchase must have proceeded either out of ancestral funds, or have been produced out of joint property or by joint labour. None of these could be presumed. In each one of the cases referred to by the other side it appeared from the pleadings that there was joint property, and consequently onus was thrown on the party who alleged separate acquisition. Further, the case of Dhurm Das Pandey v. Shama Soondri Dibiah (1) did not support the conclusion of COUCH, C. J., for in that case possession of property was admitted and was not presumed. The single fact of living in commensality would not raise the presumption that the family possessed property; Dhunookdharee Lall v. Gunput Lall (2), Khelut Chunder Ghose v. Koonj Lall Dhur (3), Musst. Soobheldur v. Boloram [680] Dewan (4). But the former two rulings were decisions of Division Benches, and the third was a full Bench case. PONTIFEX, J., in 12 B. L. R., 349, was inclined to hold that the plaintiff must prove that there was a nucleus of property; Dwarka Prasad v. Jamna Das (5). The case in 19 Bombay dealt with the question whether a succession certificate would be necessary for the realization of a 'debt' and must be limited to its peculiar facts. Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage, 7th edn., p. 367, section 291, was also relied upon. The finding in the present case was that there was no proof of the existence of ancestral funds. The suit must, therefore, fail.

Mr. Abdul Raoof, in reply, cited Kanhia Lal v. Debi Das (6).

CHAMIER, J.—The appellant having obtained a decree against two brothers, named Gulab Rai and Dal Chand, attached a house in Bulandshahr, alleging that it was the property of the judgment-debtors. The respondent, Tunda Mal, objected on the ground that he had purchased the house from Gulab Rai who had been sole owner of it.

The objection was allowed. The appellant then brought the present suit claiming a declaration that the house was the joint property of Gulab Rai and Dal Chand; that the sale by Gulab Rai was consequently invalid, and that the house was liable to be attached in execution of the appellant's decree. The first court decreed the claim, but the decision was reversed by the lower Appellate Court.

It has been found that the house in question was purchased by Gulab Rai at a time when he was living in union with his father and brother. But there is no evidence that the family ever possessed any joint property. If there is a presumption that the house was joint family property and the burden of proof lies on respondent to prove that the house was the self-acquired property of Gulab Rai, the claim must be decreed, for the respondent has not attempted to prove that the house was acquired by Gulab Rai with his own funds. All that was proved is that the house was acquired in the name of Gulab Rai alone. On the question [681] of the burden of proof the Courts below have differed. The first court followed the decision of AIKMAN, J., in Ramraj Rai v. Gulab Rai (7). The lower Appellate Court followed the decision of KNOX, J., in Hem Nath Rai v Janki Rai (8).

The point came before COUCH, C. J. and GLOVER, J., in the case of Taruck Chunder Totadar v. Joodheshteer Chunder Koondoo (9). SIR RICHARD COUCH observed that there had been a conflict of decisions in the Calcutta High Court which it was impossible to reconcile. He referred to the decisions of the Privy Council in Neelkisto Deb Burmono v. Beerchunder Thakoor (10) and Dhurm Das Pandey v. Shama Soondri

Dibiah (1) as justifying the view that, as every Hindu family was presumably joint in food, worship and estate, if one member of the family was found to be in possession of property the presumption would be not that he was in possession of it as separate property acquired by him but as member of a joint family. His judgment in the later case of Gobind Chunder Mookerjee v. Doorgapersaud Babuo (2) shows that his view was not accepted by other members of the court. In the case in 3 Moo. I. A., at p. 240, their Lordships of the Privy Council said :—"It is allowed that this was a family who lived in commensality, eating together, and possessing joint property. It is allowed that they had some joint property, and there can be no doubt that under these circumstances the presumption of law is that all the property they were in possession of was joint property until it was shown by evidence that one member was possessed of separate property." This passage has often been referred to as justifying the view that property found in possession of one member of a joint family cannot be presumed to be joint family property unless there is evidence that the family possessed some joint property. But COUCH, C. J., referring to this passage said :—"Now with regard to what their Lordships say as to the family being possessed of property.....the rule that the possession of one of the joint owners is the possession of all would apply to this extent that if one of them was found to be in possession [682] of any property, the presumption would be not that he was in possession of it as separate property acquired by him, but as a member of joint family." It seems to me that the passage cited from the judgment of their Lordships shows the necessity of proof that a family has some joint property, before it can be presumed that property held by any one member is joint family property. My view is supported by the judgment of MELVILL and KEMBALL, JJ. in Lakshman Mayaram v. Jamnabai (3), in the course of which the passage in question and the decision of the Privy Council in Luximon Row Sudasew v. Mullar Row Bajee (4), are referred to as authorities for the proposition that when there is ancestral property by means of which other property may have been acquired, then it is for the party alleging self-acquisition to prove that it was acquired without any aid from the family estate. The necessity of establishing the existence of a nucleus of joint family property before the property in possession of any one member can be presumed to be joint family property is recognised in the cases of Moolji Lilla v. Gokuldas Vulla (5), Toolseydas Ludha v. Premji Tricumdas (6) and Dwarka Prasad v. Jamna Das (7). The statement of SARGENT, C. J. in Jagmohandas Kilabhai v. Allu Maria Duskal (8) that the decision in Taruck Chunder Totadar v. Joodheshteer Chunder Koondoo (9) had always been followed by the Bombay High Court cannot refer to the point now under consideration. In Kanhia Lal v. Debi Das (10) BLAIR and BURKITT, JJ. said :—"We hold that as the defendants set up their separate acquisition in a suit for the partition of a joint family, which admittedly was possessed as such of some property, the presumption of law was that the whole of the property of each individual belonged to the common stock." This is in accordance with the view taken by the Bombay High Court. In the case of Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiya

Lal (1) the Privy Council said:—"It is admitted that Durga Prasad and his sons lived together as a joint Hindu family, and it is established that there [683] was a considerable nucleus of ancestral property in his hands after the partition (between Durga Prasad and his brothers). The onus was, therefore, on the respondent to prove that his subsequently acquired property was his separate property." Their Lordships thus recognized the necessity of establishing the existence of some joint property, before the property held by all the members could be presumed to be joint. In the case decided by AIKMAN, J. mentioned above, there was proof that the family possessed some property. That was sufficient to justify the presumption which the plaintiff wished the court to make, and I do not understand why AIKMAN, J. went as far as he did. The text-books treat it as settled law that there is no presumption that a family has any joint property and that it cannot be presumed that property found in the possession of any one member is joint family property unless it is shown that the family as such possessed at least some property. See Ghose on Hindu Law, 2nd edition, p. 368, Mayne's Hindu Law, 7th edition, pp. 364 and 368. The weight of authority is clearly in favour of the view stated in the text-books.

For the above reasons I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Muhammadan law—Shias—Dispute between husband and wife as to wife's dower—Arbitration—Award transferring property of husband to wife—Further conveyance unnecessary.

A Muhammadan husband and wife of the Shia persuasion referred a dispute relating to the wife's dower to arbitrators, who, under a registered award, transferred the absolute ownership of the husband's property in præsenti to the wife, reserved possession of it to the husband for life with control over the income, and provided that in the event of the wife predeceasing her husband, he should continue in possession for life, while in the event of the husband dying [684] before the wife, she should be owner and the heirs of the husband could not interfere. Mutation of names followed in favour of the wife, who executed a mukhtarnama in favour of her husband for the management of the property conveyed to her under the award:—

Held, that the award was sufficient to transfer the ownership of the property covered by it in præsenti to the wife, and no conveyance need have been executed. Ram Baksh v. Mughlani Khanam (2) followed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

33 A. 683=8 A. L. J. 746 11 I. C. 762.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

On the 10th of June, 1907, one Muhammad Ibrahim Ali died without any issue. His wife, Musammat Salim-un-nissa, had predeceased him on the 5th of April, 1907. Musammat Salim-un-nissa in her life-time brought a suit againt her husband for dower, which had been fixed at Rs. 24,000. Besides this, Ibrahim Ali had incurred other debts also. The suit was referred to arbitration by a registered agreement, dated the 5th of April, 1881. Two pleaders, Mazhar Ali and Barkat Ahmad, were appointed arbitrators, and they delivered an award on the 17th of June, 1881. The award laid down that in view of the dower debt, the ownership of the entire property of Ibrahim Ali was to pass to Musammat Salim-un-nissa subject to certain limitations. These were that Ibrahim Ali was to enjoy the income of the property during his life-time subject of course to his wife's maintenance, and that he could possess no right of alienation, but that if an alienation became necessary to pay off his other debts Musammat Salim-un-nissa would have to consent to such a transfer.

In pursuance of this award, Ibrahim Ali applied for mutation of names in favour of Salim-un-nissa, and had a general power of attorney executed by her in his own name. This continued to be the condition of affairs down to the 5th of April 1907, the date of Salim-un-nissa's death. During this period, Salim-un-nissa had exercised ownership by executing several leases of the property. On her decease, Ibrahim Ali had the names of her heirs entered in the revenue papers. This was about twenty days before his own death, which accrued on the 10th of June, 1907.

The plaintiff, who was an heir of Ibrahim Ali, sued for her share of the property. Defendants 1 to 3 were the heirs of [685] Salim-un-nissa, while the defendants 4 to 7 had been merely added pro forma, being the other heirs of Ibrahim Ali. The plaintiff alleged that the heirs of Salim-un-nissa had been entered in the papers as Ibrahim Ali had become insane towards the close of his life. The fact of insanity had been found established by the court below, but it was held immaterial to decide the real question in the suit—the acquisition of their rights by the defendants 1 to 3.

The court of first instance dismissed the suit. On appeal the District Judge held that the award was merely a nominal transaction made with intent to defeat the heirs of Ibrahim Ali, who was a Shia, and otherwise prevented by Shia law from interfering with the interest of his heirs. He also held that the award was not sufficient to transfer the property and decreed the suit.

Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri (with him The Hon'ble Nawab Muhammad Abdul Majid and Maulvi Shafi-uz-zaman), for the appellants :—

The award is not fictitious. It was given effect to by mutation, by delivery of possession and by many acts of ownership. It has been said by the lower court that the award by itself was not sufficient to create a valid transfer, that it could only direct transfers, but that these would not be operative unless there was an express conveyance by deeds properly executed. The award as well as the submission to arbitration was made in 1881, before the Transfer of Property Act came into force. Hence alienations of property could be made by mere word of mouth. No deed was necessary. No suggestion had been made in the lower court that the arbitrators had exceeded their power. It was a case of long acquiescence, and the question had never been raised in that form. There was nothing in the award to vitiate it. It was merely a transfer of ownership with a reservation of the usufruct to the transferor. If the arbitrators were merely carrying out the wishes of Ibrahim Ali, they were only creating an estate in favour of the wife with the consent of the husband. In India, conveyance was recognized by the acts and conduct of the parties themselves. The passing [686] of possession was not necessary for a transfer; Chokhey Singh v. Jote Singh (1).

There were three points in the case—(a) whether the award and the submission to arbitration could legally create a right in favour of Salim-un-nissa; (b) what was the nature of the estate conveyed by the award, and (c) whether the award had been followed by proper conveyances.

As to the first point, the award was a good and genuine award. The intervention of arbitrators could not be less efficacious than a registered deed. By some people, even greater sanctity was attached to an award than to a mere transfer, for instance, in partition cases, whether a panchayatnama was executed for the sake of mere formality, though all arrangements had previously been made about the partition. As to the third point, conveyances were not necessary to the validity of a transfer; Ram Bakhsh v. Mughlani Khanam (2).

It was idle to suggest seriously that the transfer was nominal. The award was neither unlawful nor against public policy; Nasir-ul-Haq v. Faiyaz-ul-Rahman (3).

The interest in the property which Ibrahim Ali retained was not exactly a life-estate. He retained control over the property; but he had no right in the corpus. If a life-estate is given to A with remainder to B, that would be very much like a will. But when a vested remainder is given by a registered instrument, is it a will? It created a present interest and not a future one. Ibrahim had no power to revoke the transfer, whereas a will is always revocable. This was the second point in the case. The learned Judge holds that it was a device to defeat the interests of the heirs, as Ibrahim, being a Shia, could not do so himself, and therefore it was invalid, being colourable. It was a valid transfer of rights, and therefore inheritable. It was said that the case was governed by the law of estoppel but could the husband have receded from the consequences of his act? Could he have applied for a mukhtarnama in his own name if he had not accepted the award?

The only two points in the case—whether the transaction was real, and if so, whether the estate it created was legal—were concluded by the findings in the case. The lower appellate court had found that the document was merely a device. It had observed that there was not real dispute about the dower between the husband and the wife. The lower court had taken a very strong view. The award had been followed by a decree, but still it was set aside. The whole motive of Ibrahim Ali was to get round the rule of Shia law in favour of the heirs. It was a dodge to evade the law of inheritance. The transaction was a peculiar one. Ibrahim Ali was master of the property in his life-time. The Musammat was to be owner only on his death. There was no transfer of ownership. The estate of Salim-un-nissa would not vest in her unless she survived her husband. Salim-un-nissa predeceased her husband, and her estate never vested in her; Saiad Kasum v. Shaista Bibi (1), Abdul Wahid Khan v. Nuran Bibi (2), Mussamut Humeeda v. Mussamut Budlun (3).

Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba (with him the Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal), for the other respondents:—

Mutation merely followed up the proceeding on paper. It is generally effected to strengthen a false case. It was an attempt to get round the Muhammadan law. That law would apply to a compromise between parties to a suit, if the effect thereof was to impair the proprietary interest of the heirs, Ibrahim Ali could not transfer the interest he did and furthermore he did not actually do so, as his wife died before him.

Babu Jogindra Nath Chaudhri, in reply.

KARAMAT HUSAIN, J.—One Ibrahim Ali and his wife Salim-un-nissa, both governed by the Shia law, under an agreement registered on the 25th of April, 1881, referred their dispute relating to dower and the mode of its payment to arbitrators. The arbitrators, Mazhar Ali and Barkat Ahmad, under an award registered on the 29th of September, 1881, transferred the [688] absolute ownership of Ibrahim Ali's property in præsenti to Salim-un-nissa, reserved possession of it to Ibrahim Ali for his life, gave him control over its income, and provided that if Musammat Salim-un-nissa died before Ibrahim Ali, his possession over the entire property should continue for his life; that no lawful heir would have any right to sue for the property and its profits; that if Ibrahim Ali died before Salim-un-nissa, the first party (Salim-un-nissa) should be owner of the villages and their mesne profits, and that the heirs of Ibrahim Ali could not interfere.

Mutation of names was effected in favour of Salim-un-nissa, and she, on the 26th of May 1883, executed a general power of attorney in favour of her husband for the management of the property which she got under the award. She sold some, mortgaged some, and leased some of it.

Salim-un-nissa died on the 5th of April, 1907, and the defendants 1, 2 and 3 got their names entered in respect of one-half of the property covered by the award, and the name of Ibrahim Ali in respect of the other half. Ibrahim Ali died on the 10th of June, 1907 and the plaintiff, who is one of his heirs, brought an action for her share, alleging that the property covered by the award was Ibrahim Ali's; that he did not intend to vest its ownership in his life in Salim-un-nissa that the award had not the effect of transferring the property to Salim-un-nissa, and that it was not valid under the Shia law.

The defence was that the husband did intend to transfer in præsenti the ownership of the property to his wife, that the award did transfer it, and that it was lawful under the Shia law and effect was given to it.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree, holding in substance as follows:—An award under the English law transfers no property and therefore the award in question was not sufficient to have effect of conveying the property to the wife.

As the arbitrators reserved the possession of the property to the husband for his life, they did not transfer its ownership to her.

Mutation of names conferred no proprietary title on Salim-un-nissa. Ibrahim Ali admitted the claim for dower and stated [689] that he did not wish to give up possession of his zamindari during his life-time, and the arbitrators carried out his wishes giving the matter a legal aspect just to satisfy Salim-un-nissa, who was to be the owner of the property in case she survived Ibrahim Ali. The agreement and award constitute a device by Ibrahim Ali to prevent his wife and her heirs from suing him for dower debt. Ibrahim Ali was not in his full senses when he signed the application for mutation of names after the death of his wife.

In second appeal it is contended that the award is genuine; that it has been acted upon; that it transferred absolute ownership in præsenti to Salim-un-nissa, and that according to the Shia law the agreement made between the husband and wife by the award is lawful. On behalf of the respondents it was at first argued that the arrangement made by the award could not be made under the Shia School of Muhammadan law, but afterwards it was rightly conceded by the learned vakil for the respondents that it could be made. I am not disposed to hold that the award was governed by Muhammadan law, but it is unnecessary to discuss it now.

Next it was contended by the learned vakil for the respondents that the agreement, dated the 25th of April, 1881, and the award, dated the 17th of June, 1881, were fictitious, and that Ibrahim Ali had no intention to pass the ownership of the property in his life-time to his wife, and that the whole thing was done to defeat the rights of the heirs of Ibrahim Ali in his estate.

I have no doubt that Ibrahim did intend to transfer the absolute ownership of his property to his wife in præsenti and that effect was given to the award. The finding of the lower Appellate Court that the arbitrators carried out the wishes of Ibrahim Ali and the contention of the respondents that the agreement and the award were designed to defeat the rights of the heirs of Ibrahim Ali completely negative the idea that the arrangement in the award was a mere paper transaction and that no effect was given to it.

Ownership and possession are two distinct juristic conceptions and in every transfer of ownership from one person to [690] another by the act of the party a transfer of possession is not necessary.

The fact that possession was reserved for the husband does in no way show that the ownership of the property did not pass to the wife. The award was sufficient to transfer ownership to Salim-un-nissa; see Ram Bakhsh v. Mughlani Khanam (1). Mutation alone creates no title, but in the case before us the award made the wife absolute owner of the property; and mutation showed that effect was given to the award.

For the above reasons I would set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs.

CHAMIER, J.—I concur.

BY THE COURT.—The appeal is decreed with costs. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the decree of the Court of first instance restored.

Appeal allowed.

Before Mr. Justice Sir George Knox and Mr. Justice Piggott.

RAM NARAIN DUBE AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. JAGDEO AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs).*

[22nd May, 1911.]

Civil Procedure Code (1908), order XVII, rule 3 ; order XLI, rule 27—Procedure—Order for parties to appear with witnesses at adjourned hearing—Default of plaintiff's witnesses—Dismissal of suit.

On the date fixed for the hearing of a suit the parties and their witnesses were present, but, as there was some prospect of a compromise, the hearing was ajourned. On the adjourned date the plaintiffs were present, but their witnesses, though summoned, did not appear. The plaintiffs did not apply for an adjournment, nor did they ask the Court to enforce the attendance of their witnesses under order XVI, rule 10, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and the Court, acting apparently under order XVII, rule 3 of the Code, dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appealed, and the District Judge, dealing with the case as if the plaintiffs had made default in appearing, remitted the case to the first Court to be disposed of according to law. Held that the procedure of the District Judge was erroneous : he should have proceeded under order XLI, rule 27, to direct the admission of fresh evidence, and under order XLI, rule 25, to refer the issues for trial to the Court of first instance.

[691] THE facts of this case were as follows :—

A suit was fixed for hearing on the 24th of April, 1910. The parties and their witnesses were present on that date ; but as the parties were negotiating for a compromise, they made a joint application for two weeks' adjournment. The Court made an order granting the application and directing the parties to file the compromise within two weeks and failing that, to be present with their witnesses on the 27th of May, 1910. The compromise was not effected and the parties summoned their witnesses for the said date. On that date the parties and their pleaders were present when the case was called on, but the plaintiffs' witnesses had not come, although summoned. The plaintiffs' pleader stated to the Court that the witnesses would be coming shortly ; but no application was made for adjournment or for enforcing the appearance of the witnesses by issue of warrant or attachment. The Court proceeded to decide the suit under order XVII, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and dismissed it. On appeal, the District Judge treated the case as if it had been dismissed for default of appearance, and setting aside the order of dismissal, remanded the suit under order XLI, rule 23.

Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba, for the appellants :—

The District Judge was wrong in his opinion that the dismissal was for default of appearance. There was no failure of appearance as the plaintiffs, and their pleaders also, were present. The failure was in production of evidence, for which time had been granted by the Court by its order of the 24th of April, 1910. Under these circumstances the action of the Court under order XVII, rule 3, was the right action. It would have been wrong to have dismissed the suit for default, which could be done only when neither the plaintiff nor his pleader was present; Badam v. Nathu Singh (1), Sitara Begam v. Tulshi Singh (2). The difference between order XVII, rule 2, and order XVII, rule 3, is well pointed out in Chandramathi

Ammal v. Narayanasami Aiyar (1). The ruling in Dulhin Sonrai Kuari v. Audhan Singh (2), which is relied on by the lower Appellate Court, is not in point, as the circumstances were entirely different.

[692] Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan, for the respondents :—

Order XVII, rule 3, was not applicable to this case. The suit was not adjourned on the 24th of April, 1910, on the application of the plaintiffs alone. Both parties had jointly applied for time ; and order XVII, rule 3, does not apply to such a case. The dismissal, therefore, could not be under that rule ; it was for default. The mere presence of the pleader where he did nothing more than praying for time would not be sufficient appearance, and the dismissal was, properly, one for default. The latest authority on this point is the case of Satish Chandra Mukerjee v. Ahara Prasad Mukerjee (3). There was an oral application for adjournment ; no written application could be made, as the Court at once proceeded to write the judgment. In the absence of witnesses the plaintiff is in the same position as his pleader; so that the presence of the plaintiff personally would not alter the case. The Appellate Court can allow further evidence to be taken under order XLI, rule 27. This is a case in which there is substantial cause within the meaning of clause (b) of that rule. The plaintiff exercised all due diligence in summoning his witnesses ; they were served, but did not turn up in time. It was not the fault of the plaintiff at all.

Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba in reply :—

It is for a party to move the Court to take action under order XVI, rule 10, and not for the Court to proceed suo motu to further the production of the witnesses of that party ; J. G. Bachman v. Lall Beharee Pandey (4). The plaintiffs did not move the Court to take any steps. They should have used the utmost diligence. When a plaintiff does not exhaust all means provided by the law for the production of evidence, the Court may rightly proceed to dispose of the case on the materials present before it ; and the case should not be remanded for taking further evidence ; Luchmun Singh v. Chokowree Singh (5). In that case a remand for further evidence was not allowed, although the plaintiff had exercised much greater diligence than in the present case. The language of order XVI, rule 10, is stronger than that of the law in force at the time when these rulings were laid down, and [693] the requirements of the rule should be strictly complied with. The Court should be satisfied that the evidence is material. It would be casting too great a burden on Courts to lay down that in every case in which witnesses do not attend, the Court is, of its own motion, and without any initiative or help from the party who summoned those witnesses to decide which of the witnesses are material and to act under order XVI, rule 10. The plaintiffs could easily have taken the initiative if they were in earnest about the attendance of their witnesses. There was ample time to put in an application for adjournment.

KNOX and PIGGOTT, JJ. :—We find ourselves unable to support the order passed by the learned District Judge in this case on the grounds taken by him. The ruling which the learned Judge professes to follow namely, Dulhin Sonraj Kuari v. Audhan Singh (2), differs in circumstances materially from the case before us. In the present case the parties to the suit were present in Court on the 24th of April, 1910, the day fixed for the first hearing. The witnesses, too, were in attendance on that day, so far as we gather from the order sheet. On that day the parties expressed a desire to compromise the matter in dispute between them and the Court very properly granted time for this purpose. It, however, directed the parties, if they found themselves unable to come to terms, to present themselves again in court with evidence on the 27th of May, 1910. They were unable to agree. On the 27th of May, 1910, the parties were present in court, but the witnesses for the plaintiffs, although summoned to appear on that date had not appeared in court, although the time fixed for the opening of the court and for their attendance had passed by a considerable interval. The plaintiffs' pleader appears to have stated to the Court that the witnesses were coming, but neither then nor afterwards was any application for adjournment put in on the part of the plaintiffs, nor did the plaintiffs apply to enforce the attendance of the witnesses. The Court went on to deal with the case under order XVII, rule 3, and proceeded to decide the suit forthwith against the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge. The District Judge dealt with the case as though the plaintiffs had made a default in appearing, and setting aside [694] the order of the court of first instance, directed that court to restore the suit to its file to be disposed of anew, according to law. His procedure was in error. There had been no default on the part of the plaintiffs. At the same time the Court could by reference to its file, and no doubt did so refer, find that the plaintiffs used due diligence in causing their witnesses to be summoned. It might fairly have presumed from the fact that the witnesses had twice been summoned by the plaintiffs that the evidence of such witnesses was material; that the plaintiffs deemed it material and fully intended to have put it before the court, but were prevented by the non-appearance of the witnesses. It is contended by the defendants appellants that when this stage had been reached, the plaintiffs, if in earnest, ought to have applied to the court to enforce the power given to the court by order XVI, rule 10, clauses (2) and (3). But it is a matter of experience that parties who have cited witnesses, and who, when such witnesses do not appear, proceed to put them to the indignity of arrest or proclamation, often find such witnesses very unwilling to give evidence on behalf of the persons who have thus acted. We think that, under the circumstances, the court, which certainly had reason to believe that the evidence was material and that the witnesses were failing to attend, so far as it could then judge, without lawful excuse, would have exercised a sound discretion in putting in force the powers entrusted to it by order XVI, rule 10, clauses (2) and (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure. Our attention was called to certain rulings of the Calcutta High Court passed under the previous Code of Civil Procedure, namely, J. G. Bachman v. Lall Beharee Pandey (1) and Luchmun Singh v. Chokowree Singh (2). It was urged that there is considerable difference between the present Code and the previous Code so far as the duty cast on the court in this matter is concerned. As we read the present Code, we think that the present Code leaves the court a discretion to proceed at once when witnesses have failed to attend, if from any circumstance before it, it has reason to believe that the evidence of such defaulting witnesses is material, and that the witnesses are defaulting. It [695] would be for the witnesses to show that their absence rested on lawful excuse. It is urged before us that where a number of witnesses have been cited, it would be casting too great a burden on a Court to proceed against all who might have defaulted. The probability is that in such a case the Court would of itself see that the evidence of all such witnesses is not material. The Court can generally make a shrewd guess where witnesses have been unnecessarily summoned. In any case a discretion is allowed by law. We think that the Court should have proceeded under order XLI, rule 27, to direct the admission of fresh evidence and under order XLI, rule 25, to refer the issues, which in this case had never been really tried, for trial to the Court of first instance, directing that Court to return findings. We so far allow the appeal as to make the order just pointed out. Costs will abide the event.

Appeal allowed.

Held that a transaction, one of the objects of which is that one party shall be divested of his ex-proprietary rights and that those rights shall vest in the other party, or a sale of zamindari property coupled with an agreement to relinquish the exproprietary rights of the vendor, is void so far as the relinquishment of exproprietary rights is concerned. Bhikham Singh v. Har Prasad (1), Muridhar v. Pem Raj (2), Kashi Prasad v. Kedar Nath Sahu (3), Raghubans Sahai v. Brijnandan Lal (4), Bharath Singh v. Debi Dayal Singh (5) and Khurshed Ali v. Wazir-un-nissa (6) referred to.

[Fol: 17 I. C. 522.]

THE facts of this case are, briefly, as follows:—

The defendants sold certain zamindari property to the plaintiffs by a registered sale deed, dated the 2nd of May, 1903. The sale deed contained a stipulation that the defendants would relinquish their sir and khudkasht lands and give the [696] plaintiffs possession thereof, or in default would be liable to damages at the rate of Rs. 16 per bigha. On the 5th of May, 1903, the defendants executed a deed of relinquishment of the sir and khudkasht lands, but they did not get it registered, nor did they give the plaintiffs possession. On the application of the plaintiffs for compulsory registration it was registered as against some of the defendants, but not as against all. The present suit was brought to recover a sum of Rs. 9,468 8-0 as damages for breach of the covenant to relinquish the sir and khudkasht lands. The court of first instance (Subordinate Judge of Azamgarh) gave the plaintiffs a decree. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq (with Mr. B E. O'Conor) for the appellants, contended that the contract which was the basis of the plaintiffs' suit was wholly void, and cited the following rulings :—Indar Sen v. Naubat Singh (1), Kashi Prasad v. Kedar Nath Sahu (2), Murlidhar v. Pem Raj (3), Bhikham Singh v. Har Prasad (4), Bharath Singh v. Debi Dayal Singh (5) and Khurshed Ali v. Wazir-un-nissa (6).

Babu Durga Charan Banerji (with him the Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal and Munshi Kalandi Prasad), for the respondents :—

The contract to relinquish or surrender an ex-proprietary right is not illegal. The law recognizes relinquishment in favour of a zamindar, hence a contract to relinquish is perfectly lawful. Specific performance of such a contract may not be allowed, because the law does not favour surrender by compulsion. Consideration has nothing to do with the legality of such a contract. See the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, section 83 (3), Gaya Singh v. Udit Singh (7) and Lekhraj v. Parshadi (8).

Surrender means the placing of the zamindar in possession. This deed is evidence of an agreement to surrender the rights which came into existence upon the sale. We seek to enforce, not a sale of ex-proprietary rights, but an agreement to pay damages in the event of the ex-proprietary tenant failing to [697] surrender those rights. Under Article 115 of the Limitation Act, the suit is within time.

Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq, in reply referred to Indar Sen v. Naubat Singh (9), Baldeo v. Kunlan (10) and Raghuban Sahai v. Brijnandan Lal (11).

KARAMAT HUSAIN, J.—The defendants, on the 2nd of May, 1903, executed a sale deed of certain zamindari property in favour of the plaintiff. The material portion of the sale deed is the following :—

"We, all the executants.....absolutely sold in lieu of the remaining amount of Rs. 77,500, the whole of the mauzas Khorant Daulsapur, and Bharthpur, together with all the zamindari rights appertaining to them and mal and sair items .....in short, all the rights appertaining to the zamindari property, together with sir and khudkasht lands and ex-proprietary tenancy right, without the exception of any thing or right.

"We, the executants have relinquished our claim and interest in respect of all the sir and khudkasht lands. We shall execute a deed of relinquishment of claim in respect of the sir lands and shall file an application surrendering the holding. If we should make a delay in, or take any objection to the filing of an application surrendering the holding, or to the execution of the deed of relinquishment of claim in respect of the sir lands, or should we, the executants, our heirs, or representatives, or successors, keep in our possession any portion of the sir and khudkasht lands; then we and our heirs and representatives and successors shall pay damages in respect thereof at the rate of Rs. 16 per bigha."

In pursuance of the stipulation set forth above, the defendants, on the 5th of May, 1903, executed a deed of relinquishment in favour of the plaintiffs which contained the following passages :—

"We, the executants, have absolutely sold the whole of the mauzas Khorant Daulsapur, and Bhartipur..... .....and have removed our possession and put the said vendees in possession of the whole of the property sold. We, the executants, have 735 bighas 9 biswas 4 dhurs of the sir and khudkasht lands in the said mauzas according to the detail given below. As we, the executants, have no longer any concern whatever with the property sold in the said villages, and as we, for want of concern, are unable to cultivate the sir lands and pay the rent, we have of our free will and accord relinquished our claim and right in respect of all the sir and khudkhast lands which, according to the detail given below, we, the executants, have in the villages sold and have removed our possession and put the vendees in possession of the same."

[698] The defendants did not, however, have the deed of relinquishment registered, and on the application of the plaintiffs it was registered compulsorily against the male executants of the said deed, but not against the female executants. On the 14th of July, 1903, according to the allegations in the plaint, a demand was made by the plaintiffs calling on the defendants to relinquish the ex-proprietary holdings and to put the plaintiffs in possession thereof. The defendants did not deliver possession of the sir to the plaintiffs. On the basis of the deed of relinquishment there were law suits between the parties for the arrears of rent of the sir and for the determination of the rent therefor. As those suits, in my opinion, do not bar the present suits, I need not give their details.

The suit out of which this appeal arose, was brought on the 3rd of July, 1909, for damages amounting to Rs. 9,468-8-0 for the breach of the contract of relinquishment, together with interest. The case for the plaintiffs is that the defendants in pursuance of a stipulation entered in the sale deed of 2nd May, 1903, executed a deed of relinquishment on the 5th of May 1903, which was compulsorily registered on the 13th of July, 1903. On the 14th of July, 1903, the plaintiffs asked the defendants to relinquish the sir and put the plaintiffs in possession of it. But they declined to do so, and hence the suit for damages for the breach of the contract to relinquish. The pleas in defence with which we have to deal in this case are, that the sale deed and the deed of relinquishment, so far as they entitle the plaintiffs to sue for damages, are illegal, and that the suit is barred by limitation. The Court below decreed the claim. The agreement to relinquish in its opinion is a lawful agreement, inasmuch as a sir holder is entitled under the law to relinquish his holding, whenever he pleases, according to the provisions of s. 83 of the Agra Tenancy Act. In support of this view the Court below relies upon Gaya Singh v. Udit Singh (1) and Lekhraj v. Parshadi (2). The cause of action, according to the Court below, arose on the 14th of July, 1903, when delivery of possession was refused to be made and a breach of the contract to relinquish was committed, and hence the suit under article 116 of the schedule II of the [699] Limitation Act is not time-barred. The defendants appeal to this Court, and their learned vakil contends that the transaction of the sale of the zamindari and the so-called relinquishment of the sir land form one single transaction having for one of its objects the transfer of the sir, which is illegal, and that if the transaction of reliquishment be supposed to be a separate and independent transaction, even then, according to the rulings of this Court, it would be unlawful. In support of the above proposition he relies on Indar Sen v. Naubat Singh (3), Baldeo v. Kundun (4), Bhikham Singh v. Har Prasad (5), Kashi Prasad v. Kedar Nath Sahu (6), Murlidhar v. Pem Raj (7), Dipan Rai v. Ram Khelawan (8) and Khurshed Ali v. Wazir-un-nissa (9). The learned advocate for the respondents in answer to the argument of the learned vakil for the appellant says that the rulings quoted by the learned vakil do not touch the point in question in the present case, which really is whether a sir holder can or cannot agree to relinquish his holding in favour of his zamindar; that, according to the provisions of section 83 of the Tenancy Act relinquishment of a sir land in favour of the zamindar is sanctioned by law, and that, as the relinquishment of a sir is a lawful act, an agreement to relinquish sir cannot in any way be unlawful. In support of what he says he relies on Gaya Singh v. Udit Singh (1) and Bharath Singh v. Debi Dayal Singh (2). The case reported in I. L. R. 13 All. p. 396, simply lays down that there is nothing in law to prevent a tenant from voluntarily relinquishing his ex-proprietary tenancy in favour of his zamindar. But it does not touch the question whether a tenant can or cannot enter into an agreement to relinquish his ex-proprietary holding. In the case of Bharath Singh v. Debi Dayal Singh (2), there was an actual relinquishment of an ex-proprietary holding in favour of the zamindar, and therefore that case also has no bearing upon the point in the present case. The transaction entered into between the plaintiffs on the one hand and the defendants on the other, may either be regarded as a single transaction, one of the objects of which [700] was that the defendants be divested of their ex-proprietary rights and that those rights should vest in the plaintiffs, or it may be regarded as consisting of two distinct and separate transactions, one, the sale of the zamindari property, and the other the agreement to relinquish the ex-proprietary rights. In either view the cases referred to by the learned vakil for the appellants are authorities for the proposition that the said transaction, so far as it deals with the relinquishment of the ex-proprietary rights, is void, inasmuch as the defendants, by means of a transfer or by means of an agreement to relinquish, had no power under the law to divest themselves of their ex-proprietary rights and the agreement to relinquish ex-proprietary rights is illegal.

For the above reasons I would allow the appeal and set aside the decree of the court below with costs. In this view of the case it is unnecessary for me to enter into the question of limitation.

CHAMIER, J.—It appears to me that the case is covered by authority. In Bhikham Singh v. Har Prasad (3), the defendants had sold certain zamindari property to the plaintiffs, expressly including therein any rights which might accrue to them as ex-proprietary tenants, and they purported to relinquish those rights in favour of the plaintiffs. It was held that the attempted sale of prospective ex-proprietary rights was invalid, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any compensation for non-delivery of possession of the sir lands. That decision was approved in Murlidhar v. Pem Raj (4), where a similar contract had been made and the sale deed expressly provided that if the vendors failed to deliver possession of the sir lands, they would refund Rs. 1,500. It was held that the contract being contrary to law the vendees, who had failed to obtain possession, were not entitled to recover the sum of Rs. 1,500. In Kashi Prasad v. Kedar Nath Sahu (5), the parties to a private partition of zamindari lands agreed that if either party was at the time of partition holding sir land in a village which at the partition fell into the share of the other party, he would relinquish his ex-proprietary [701] rights in favour of the party into whose share the village fell. It was held that the agreement could not be enforced. In Raghubans Sahai v. Brijnandan Lal (6) it was held that an agreement to relinquish ex-proprietary rights in sir land could not be enforced. Debi Dayal Singh (1) the facts were that a sale deed of zamindari property and a perpetual lease of the sir lands therein were executed on the same day, and Rs. 1,105 were paid to the lessor vendor as nazrana on the lease. It was held that the sum ostensibly paid as nazrana was in reality the price paid for the ex-proprietary rights that arose on the sale and could not be recovered by the vendees, although they had not obtained possession of the sir land. In Khurshed Ali v. Wazir-un-nissa (2), on a compromise, the defendant agreed to sell certain zamindari property and to relinquish his ex-proprietary right in his sir in consideration of a sum to be fixed by an arbitrator. It was held that the transaction was an agreement to sell ex-proprietary rights when they came into existence and was unlawful. In the present case we have an attempted sale of prospective ex-proprietary rights in sir and khudkasht lands and an agreement to execute a deed of relinquishment in respect of those rights, with a provision that if the vendors fail to carry out their undertaking, they shall be liable for damages at the rate of Rs. 16 per bigha. On the above authorities it appears to me that, whether the transaction is regarded as an attempted sale of ex-proprietary rights or an agreement to relinquish those rights when they arise, it is unlawful, and therefore the claim to damages for failure to deliver possession of the sir and khudkasht lands is not maintainable. I agree that the appeal should be allowed and the suit dismissed.

BY THE COURT.—Order of the Court is, that the appeal is allowed, the decree of the court below is set aside, and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Succession—Unchastity of mother no bar to her inheriting son's estate.

Held, that unchastity does not preclude a Hindu mother from succeeding to her son's property. Musammat Ganga Jati v. Ghasita (3), Dal Singh v. Musammat Dini (4) and Vedammal v. Vedanayaga Mudaliar (5) followed.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

One Akbar Singh died in 1901, leaving him surviving his widow, Musammat Mathura Kunwar, and Shib Singh, his son. Shib Singh succeeded to the property, but he also died in 1907. Mathura Kunwar, entered into possession as heir of Shib Singh. The plaintiff, Baldeo Singh, who was the brother of Akbar Singh, came into court on the allegation that Mathura Kunwar was not entitled to inherit her son's property as she had become unchaste during his life-time. The first court did not go into the question of unchastity, holding it to be entirely, immaterial, and dismissed the suit of the plaintiff. The plaintiff appealed. The suit was remanded to the first court for a finding whether Mathura Kunwar had become unchaste at all. The finding was that she had given birth to a son about two years before the death of Shib Singh and some four years after the death of her husband, but that she was chaste during the life of her husband.

Babu Sital Prasad Ghose (with him Babu Surendra Nath Sen), for the appellants :—

The question was whether Mathura Kunwar, having become unchaste in the life-time of Shib Singh, could retain possession of his property as against his uncle the plaintiff. In Dal Singh v. Musammat Dini (1) there was an admission made by the vakil for the appellant that the lady in question could not be a patita woman. Here she was a patita woman. Ramnath Tolapattro v. Durga Sundari Debi (2) was also cited.

[703] [Babu Mangal Prasad Bhargava, for the respondent, referred to Vedammal v. Vedanayaga Mudaliar (3). The word 'out-caste' had nothing to do with patita ; Musammat Ganga Jati v. Ghasita (4) ; Golap Chandra Sastri, Hindu Law, p. 330.]

Mr. B. E. O'Conor (with him Babu Mangal Prasad Bhargava), for the respondent, was not called upon.

RICHARDS, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff, Baldeo Singh who is the paternal uncle of one Shib Singh, deceased, for possession of the estate left by Shib Singh, at his death. The defendant is the mother of Shib Singh. In the ordinary course she would be the next heir to the estate of her son, but the plaintiff claims it on the ground that she became unchaste during the life-time of her son. The question to be determined, therefore, is whether a Hindu mother forfeits her right of inheritance by reason of unchastity. The court below has found that the defendant, Musammat Mathura Kunwar, the mother of Shib Singh, had after the death of her husband formed an immoral intimacy with one Pitam and had a child by him. It is urged that under these circumstances she forfeited her right of inheritance. The court below has held against the plaintiff and dismissed the claim. In our judgment the question raised is concluded by authority. In the case of Mussammat Ganga Jati v. Ghasita (4), which was a case relating to the right of inheritance to stridhan, the learned Acting Chief Justice remarked that " want of chastity in a mother does not deprive her of her right of inheritance." The question before us was fully considered in the case of Dal Singh v. Mussammat Dini (1). In that case the authorities of Hindu Law on the subject were considered, and it was held that there was no authority for holding that a Hindu woman who after her husband's death had become unchaste is thereby excluded from inheritance to the estate left by her son. The same view was taken by the Madras High Court, in several cases, the last of which is that of Vedammal v. Vedanayaga Mudaliar (3). The decision of the Bombay High Court is also to the same effect. The Calcutta High Court has, no doubt, taken a different view, but its decision is based on [704] grounds which, as pointed out by the Madras High Court, do not apply to a case governed by the Mitakshara. It is admitted that there is no authority in the Mitakshara which, in the case of a mother, requires as a necessary condition of succession that she should be chaste. Her case is unlike that of a widow succeeding to her husband's property, where it is laid down that unchastity would deprive her of her right of inheritance. The learned vakil for the appellant relied on the word 'patita' to be found in the Mitakshara, chapter II, section X, verse 140, but that word was rendered as 'outcaste' in the case of Dal Singh v. Musammat Dini (1), and its effect was considered by the learned Judges who decided that case. We are not prepared to dissent from the view taken by them, and in the face of the long course of decisions on the point we should not be justified in departing from the rule laid down in these decisions. No doubt it is repugnant to Hindu sentiment that an unchaste woman should inherit property. But in the absence of clear authority in the texts of Hindu law precluding an unchaste mother from succeeding to her son's property, and having regard to the decided cases on the point, we are unable to hold that the decision of the court below is erroneous.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

RUP CHAND (Plaintiff) v. FATEH CHAND AND ANOTHER (Defendants).*

Act No. VII of 1870 (Court Fees Act), section 7, clause V (b)—Court fee—Appeal—Suit for possession—Decree for qualified possession—Appeal seeking to remove the qualification contained in the decree.

Plaintiff brought a claim for possession of certain property as transferee from a Musammat Gomi, to whom the property had been bequeathed by one Musammat Gomti Kunwar, who had acquired it under a will executed by her husband. The court of first instance granted him a decree for possession, but limited to the life-time of Musammat Gomi. The defendant appealed, and the plaintiff also appealed, seeking to have this condition removed from the decree, and paid a court fee of Rs. 10 on his memorandum of appeal. Held that the court fee was sufficient, the plaintiff appellant being in the position of a person in possession of property who sought to clear his title and to obtain a declaration that he had the full right of ownership to the property.

[Ref. 68 I. C. 441=14 L. W. 624=41 M. L. J. 587=1921 M. W. N. 854=45 Mad. 216; 80 I. C. 568=3 Pat. 640.]

ON presentation of the memorandum of appeal the Stamp Reporter reported as follows:—

"The plaintiff brought a suit for possession of mauza Khudda and to recover Rs. 4,695 as mesne profits. The court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree for possession of mauza Khudda to last only for the life-time of Mussmmat Gomi and dismissed the rest of his claim. The plaintiff is dissatisfied with the above decree, and appeals to this Hon'ble Court. He has paid a court fee of Rs. 10 only on the first part of the relief in appeal, treating it as a declaratory one.

"I beg to submit that the suit has not changed its character in appeal. The object of the appeal is to get a decree for absolute proprietary possession of the property in suit and not a life estate only as has been decreed by the lower court. That being so, an ad valorem fee of Rs. 610 is leviable. Rs. 270 having been paid, there is therefore a deficiency of Rs. 340 to be made good by the plaintiff appellant for this court."

The following objections were preferred by—

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal and Babu Durga Charan Banerji, for the appellant :—

"The plaintiff appellant claimed possession of mauza Khudda. The lower court has decreed the claim for possession, and the defendant has appealed against the said decree for possession and has paid ad valorem court fee in full. But the Subordinate Judge has added a condition in the decree that the plaintiff's possession shall continue during the life-time of his assignor. By his appeal the plaintiff wishes to get rid of this condition as illegal and ultra vires; practically he claims a declaration that the condition so attached to the decree is void, and he has paid a court fee of Rs. 10 for that relief. There is no change in the [706] character of the suit as the office report suggests. He claimed possession and he has got a decree for possession. The defendant has paid the court fee payable for that relief, as he seeks to set aside the decree for possession. The plaintiff cannot and does not claim possession by his appeal, but he seeks to get rid of the condition attached to the decree."

The Stamp Reporter made the following further report :—

"In reply to the objection taken by the learned advocate for the appellant, I beg to submit that in the objection the learned advocate says, 'there is no change in the character of the suit.' This itself shows that ad valorem duty is payable The payment of full court fees by the defendant on his memorandum of appeal does not exonerate the plaintiff from liability to pay on his memorandum of appeal the proper court fees leviable under the law. The lower court having decreed the possession in plaintiff's favour to last for the life-time of Musammat Gomi, the defendant could not but pay the ad valorem court fees on his memorandum of appeal.

"The object of the present appeal is to get a decree for possession for ever, i.e. he, the appellant. may be legally allowed to remain in possession even after the death of Musammat Gomi, and I do not see any reason why he should not be called upon to pay ad valorem court-fees, the suit for possession be governed by section 7, clause v (b) of Act VII of 1870.

"Even conceding for the sake of argument that the plaintiff does claim a declaration only in this appeal, I would submit that the declaration sought for involves a consequential relief, for if the condition attached is removed, the plaintiff's possession over the property in suit would extend beyond the life-time of his assignor, Musammat Gomi, and he shall remain in possession of the property for ever."

The Taxing Officer's report was as follows :—

"The plaintiff brought a suit in which he claimed possession of certain property—a mauza of the name of Khudda—on the ground that this property had been assigned to him by one Musammat Gomi to whom it had been bequeathed by Musammat Gomti Kunwar, who had acquired it under a will executed by her husband, the original owner of the property. The Subordinate Judge granted a decree for possession, but limited it to the life-time of the assignor, Musammat Gomi. The plaintiff appellant now seeks to have this condition set aside, and claims a decree for absolute and unqualified possession. The question is, whether the appeal which bears a 10 rupee stamp is properly stamped. On the one hand it is contended that what the plaintiff appellant claims is possession of the property, viz., possession unlimited in point of time as against the limited possession decreed by the lower court. On the other hand, it is argued for the plaintiff appellant, that he has already got possession, or a decree for possession, and that his position is, therefore, analogous to that of a man who being in possession but finding his title as absolute owner impugned, brings a suit for a declaration that his title is absolute but asks for no consequential relief.

"To my mind it cannot be said that the suit is only one for a declaration without consequential relief. If the plaintiff appellant succeeds, he will take [707] out execution, and be given an unqualified and unlimited possession, whereas if the decree of the lower Court stands, he will be given in execution only a limited possession. The most relevant ruling I can find is 8 B. L. App. 23. It appears to me, therefore, that the appeal should bear an ad valorem stamp under section 7, v (b)."

The following order was passed by the Taxing Judge.

TUDBALL, J.—This is a reference by the Taxing Officer. The plaintiff in the suit brought a claim for possession of certain property as transferee from a Musammat Gomi. Musammat Gomi is a person to whom property had been bequeathed by Musammat Gomti Kuar, a Hindu widow, who had acquired it under a will executed by her husband. The plaintiff was resisted by a person who was also a beneficiary under the will of Gomti Kuar. The lower Court held the plaintiff was entitled to possession, but that that possession should be restricted to the life-time of Musammat Gomi. The defendant has appealed that he has paid full Court fee, as he objects to the decree for possession. The plaintiff has also appealed, and he seeks thereby to set aside so much of the lower Court's decree as declared him to be entitled to possession for the life-time of Musammat Gomi, and he asks the Court on appeal to declare that he is entitled to the absolute ownership of the property and not to a limited interest. He has paid a Court fee of Rs. 10. The Taxing Officer is of opinion that the appeal should bear an ad valorem stamp, as in a suit for possession of land under section 7, clause v (b) of the Court Fees Act. I find it difficult to see that the appeal falls under this section and clause. As matters stand now, the plaintiff appellant seems to me to be in the possession of a person in possession of property who seeks to clear his title and to obtain a declaration that he has the full right of ownership to the property. Under the circumstances I think the Rs. 10 paid as for a declaration is sufficient.

Order accordingly.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

Amir Husain, the ancestor of the first two defendants, owned shares in three villages,—namely, (1) Bilaspur, khewats 1, 2 and 3, (2) Dandhera and (3) Kheri Dudadhari.

[709] On the 17th of March, 1883, he made a usufructuary mortgage of his property in Kheri Dudadhari in favour of Rai Bahadur Nihal Chand, the predecessor in title of the defendants Nos. 3 to 5. In 1891, the mortgagee purchased the equity of redemption of the mortgagor in execution of a simple money decree and thus became the absolute owner of the property.

On the 29th of August, 1885, Amir Husain made a simple mortgage of the villages Dandhera and Kheri Dudadhari and khewat No. 1 of Bilaspur in favour of one Makhan Lal.

On the 3rd of March, 1887, he mortgaged his interests in all the three villages to the aforesaid Makhan Lal.

On the 20th of June, 1894, the plaintiff purchased at auction the whole of Amir Husain's interest in the village Bilaspur in execution of a simple money decree.

Mansamrath Das, the son of Makhan Lal, first brought a suit on the third mortgage mentioned above, namely, that of the 3rd of March, 1887, and obtained a decree for sale on the 31st of May, 1890. In execution of that decree he caused khewat No. 3 of Bilaspur, the village purchased by the plaintiff, to be sold by auction on the 20th of November, 1903. The proceeds of the sale discharged the decree in full and a surplus of Rs. 165 was received by the plaintiff.

Mansamrath Das obtained a decree for sale on the 5th of September, 1895, on the basis of the mortgage of the 29th of August, 1885, and in execution thereof caused khewat No. 1 of Bilaspur, to be sold by auction on the 20th of June, 1895. The proceeds of this sale were insufficient to satisfy the decree, and therefore, on the 21st of January, 1907, he caused the village Kheri Dudadhari to be sold and Nihal Chand purchased it. After satisfying the decree in full, the sale proceeds left a surplus of Rs. 4,542-14-0 which was paid over to Nihal Chand some time after the 4th of May, 1907, in spite of plaintiff's protests, on the ground that he was the owner of the village sold.

The plaintiff instituted the present suit on the 6th of August, 1909, on the allegations that the proportionate liability of his village Bilaspur for the two mortgages in favour of Makhan Lal was Rs. 9,430-5-0; that by the auction sale of his village Bilaspur a sum of Rs. 14,255 was realized ; that the said village has therefore contributed more than its share of liability and [710] that he is entitled to recover the excess amount so contributed from the villages Dandhera and Kheri Dudadhari. In the plaint, as originally framed, he claimed to recover Rs. 4,659-3-0 and interest by sale of the two villages mentioned above, on which he stated he had a charge under section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act. By a petition dated the 4th of February, 1910, he amended his plaint and abandoned his claim for enforcement of a charge on the village Kheri Dudadhari and prayed for a money decree against the defendants Nos. 3 to 5, the legal representatives of Nihal Chand, for Rs. 2,417-2 0 and interest.

The Court below has dismissed the claim on the ground that the plaintiff acquired no charge on the property of his co-mortgagors and that his suit was time-barred, as it was brought after three years from the date of the sale of his village Bilaspur.

The plaintiff appealed.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji (with him Dr. Tej Dahadur Sapru), for the appellant.

Section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act expressly makes the property liable. Read with section 100 of the same Act, it clearly created a charge by operation of law. The liability is of the property and not of the person. The section was taken in substance from Fisher on Mortgages, p. 543, 5th edition. As to equitable liens generally I rely on Pomeroy's Equity, pp. 2465, et seq.

[Mr. Nihal Chand, on behalf of respondents 1 and 2, admitted a charge on the property by reason of satisfaction of the mortgage of 1887, but stated that his contention would be that section 82 of Transfer of Property Act did not create a charge, it only distributed one, where it existed, among several parcels of property.]

Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukhan Saran (1) was referred to.

STANLEY, C. J., explained what he meant in that case in the subsequent case of Muhammad Yahiya v. Rashid-ud-din (2). There is a uniform course of rulings in this Court that a charge is created in circumstances like those which exist in this present [711] case; Bhagirath v. Naubat Singh (3). The entire decree there had not been satisfied by the sale of the property, yet it was held that a charge was created on the other properties. There were also cited Pancham Singh v. Ali Ahmad (4), Ibn Husain v. Ram Dai (5), Balleo Sahai v. Baij Nath (6), Hari Raj Singh v. Ahmed-ud-din Khan (7), Shanto Chandar Mukerji v. Nain Sukh (8), Bhagwan Das v. Har Deri (9), Rajah of Vizianagram v. Raja Satrucherla Somasekhararaz (10), Har Prasad v. Raghunandan Prasad (11).

In the case in 26 All. where the provisions of section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act were considered, it was held that article 132 of the Limitation Act would apply and not article 99. To the same effect are Yakub Ali Khan v. Kishan Lal (12), and Sagar Mal v. Janki Das (13). If there were no charge on any other property of a person who had purchased part of the equity of redemption the property might be put up for sale. But such purchaser incurs no personal liability.

As to the liability of the other set of defendants (Nihal Chand's heirs), it was by sale of the plaintiff's property that the bulk of the decree obtained upon the first mortgage was discharged. For the small balance which remained due the property of Nihal Chand was sold, and he appropriated the entire surplus. We are entitled to a portion of the surplus inasmuch as it represents the property in his hands. That money was payable to us on equitable grounds. The payment of the money out of Court does not put an end to the lien; Berhamdeo Pershad v. Tara Chand (1). It may be that we had no lien on the day our property was sold. But we acquired it as soon as other property was sold and the mortgage was satisfied. It then attached to the money into which the property had been converted. This is a case of substituted or transmitted security; Padmanabh Bombshenvi v. Khemu Komar Naik (2). Nihal Chand was not entitled to [712] the whole of the money, but only to part of it Mahdi Husain v. Sukh Chand (3).

Mr. Nihal Chand (for defendants 1, 2, 6).

I do not dispute the liability under the first mortgage, but I submit that after the Full Bench case in 26 Allahabad it is not possible to argue that a person who has satisfied part only of debt can claim a charge; Ghose on Mortgages (ed. 4), p. 332; Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrikah Singh (4). Even if there can be a charge, the question will remain as to when it will arise, whether upon payment in excess of the plaintiff's quota or upon the complete discharge of the debt, as in 36 Calcutta at 217. All the cases were decided with reference to the principle of subrogation; Ghose on Mortgages, p. 372. There may be a right to contribution, but not necessarily a right to a charge. The claim will, therefore, only be for a simple money decree and that is barred by three years' limitation. Section 82, Transfer of Property Act, cannot keep the lien alive.

Munshi Gokul Prasad (for respondents 3—5, heirs of Nihal Chand).

The right to contribution arose when the defendant's property was made to pay more than its share. The plaintiff concedes he cannot follow the property. He has a personal right, which came into existence at the latest in 1905. It has become barred now, whether articles 16 or 99, Limitation Act, schedule I, applied; Davies v. Humphreys (5). The cause of action arose when the property was sold and the plaintiff paid more than his quota. Berhamdeo Pershad v. Tara Chand (6) lays down that money paid that way is not money had and received. The mere fact of our taking the sale proceeds away did not give rise to a new cause of action; Gosto Behari Pyne v. Shib Nath Dut (7), Kamla Kant Sen v. Abul Barkat (8), Jogeshur Bhagat v. Ghanasham Dass (9). Even if it applied, article 132 would not save limitation. It applied to relief against property not to simple money claims; Ram Din v. Kalka Prasad (10). The article applicable is article 61. Plaintiff had a charge on property, that charge [713] might or might not have been enforced. It might never have been enforced and the money might have been realized by sale of other property; Ram Kishan v. Bhawani Das (11). The money must be shown to have belonged to the plaintiff alone. No personal suit for contribution lay. The sale on the prior mortgage wiped off the whole charge. Section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act applied to usufructuary as well as to simple mortgages; Ahmad Wali Khan v. Shamsh-ul-Jahan Begam (1). And it was not necessary to travel outside that section to decide the question of charge.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, in reply. There was no question of subrogation. The plaintiff did not claim to step into the shoes of the mortgagee. He only claimed contribution from other properties to equalize the burden on all of them.

[Their Lordships intimated that they did not want to hear him on that point.]

One of the three articles 132, 120, 62, Limitation Act, schedule I, would apply. If article 62 applied, the suit was not barred; Bullen and Leake, Pleadings, 292. The surplus money taken was money received to the use of the plaintiff. We are claiming an equitable lien. The distinction between a common law lien and an equitable lien is that for the latter no possession is necessary. The relationship is of the nature of a trust. Consequently the fact that the money had been paid out to the defendant would not make any difference. The charge would attach to it all the same. Section 295 of the old Code of Civil Procedure itself gave a right of suit for money. Where it could be shown that immoveable property had been converted into something else it could be followed; Transfer of Property Act, section 73. If the claim be rested on the basis of an equitable lien, article 120 would apply and the claim is within time. On the other hand if the plaintiff can claim on the basis of a charge to this money, then, as the Calcutta cases have laid down, article 132 would apply. I rely upon the doctrine of equitable conversion. Conversion into money would not make property any the less immoveable for the purposes of a charge; Mitra on Limitation, ed. 5, Vol. II, pp. 1097-8.

[714] RICHARDS, C. J.—The facts out of which this appeal arose are of a very complicated nature. They are, however, very fully set forth in the judgment of the learned Additional Judge, and I consider it only necessary to state the questions of law which admittedly are the questions which arise and have been argued on behalf of the parties before us. They are as follows:—

(1) Has the owner of a property, which was mortgaged with other properties to secure a single debt, a charge against such other properties when his property has been sold in execution of a mortgage decree and has contributed more than its rateable share, but where the owner of the property claiming the charge has neither redeemed the mortgaged property, nor has the sale of his property alone been the means of discharging the mortgage decree?

(2) If two properties are mortgaged to secure one debt, and both properties are sold in execution of a mortgage decree, has the owner of the property which has borne more than its rateable share a right to a personal decree against the owner of the property that has borne less than its rateable share of the debt, where the latter has actually received the surplus proceeds of the sale of his property?

The plaintiff contends that he has a charge against the property represented by the defendants 1, 2 and 6, which has not been sold, and he seeks to enforce such claim by sale of the property.

The defendants 1, 2 and 6 contend that, inasmuch as the plaintiff did not redeem the property and the mortgage decree was not discharged solely out of the proceeds of the sale of the plaintiff's property, the plaintiff has no charge against the property itself, that the only right he ever had was a personal right of contribution, and that the last mentioned right is barred by limitation.

As regards the defendants 3 to 5, the plaintiff, in his plaint, alleged that he had a similar charge which he sought to enforce by sale of certain other property. This position was, however, abandoned, at the trial in the Court below. The plaintiff admitted that the entire property represented by the defendants 3 to 5, [715] was, like his own, sold in execution of the mortgage decrees; but he contends that the surplus proceeds of the sale having been paid over to the defendants without providing for payment to him of the excess for which he alleges his property was made liable, he is entitled to a simple money decree against the defendants 3 to 5.

The defendants 3 to 5 contend that the plaintiff having abandoned his claim against the property, his present claim must be deemed to be a personal claim for contribution, which arose when the plaintiff' sproperty was made liable for more than its rateable share of the mortgage debt, and that it is therefore barred by limitation.

I think the plaint ought to be looked upon as amended and that the plaintiff's claim as against the defendants 3 to 5 should be dealt with as if he had alleged in the plaint that his property had to bear more than its rateble share, and the defendants escaped paying the rateable share which their property would have borne by reason of the fact that the surplus proceeds of the sale of their property was paid over to the defendants 3 to 5 without any regard being had to the plaintiff's claim, and that under these circumstances he is entitled to a personal decree. I propose so to deal with the plaintiff's claim as against the defendants 3 to 5.

The Court below has not come to any finding as to the respective values of the several properties. It has decided the case on a preliminary point holding that the plaintiff had no charge but only a right to sue as a personal claim for the excess, if any, his property was made liable to and that such right was barred by articles 61 and 99 of the first schedule to the Limitation Act. The learned Additional Judge accordingly dismissed the suit against all the defendants.

If we hold that he was wrong in point of law, the case will have to be remanded for disposal.

For the purpose of disposing of the appeal I shall assume that the result of the sale of the plaintiff's property and the distribution of the sale proceeds was that the plaintiff's property had to bear more than the rateable share which it ought to have borne; but that he neither redeemed the mortgage nor paid up the decree, but allowed his own property and the property of the defendants [716] 3 to 5 to be sold. I shall also assume that the property represented by the two sets of defendants has borne less than the rateable share which their property ought to have borne. It also appears from the written statements of the defendants 3 to 5 that after the sale of their property on the 4th of May, 1905, the plaintiff filed an objection to the surplus being paid out and claimed that a portion of the surplus belonged to him and should be paid to him. His objection, however, was disallowed. There seems to me to be no room for doubt that where several properties are mortgaged to secure one debt, the owner of [redacted] property that has been made liable for more than its rateable proportion of the debt has a charge on the other properties. Section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act is a statutory enactment in India of a principle which has long been recognised to be founded on justice and equity. It is as follows:—"Where several properties, whether of one several owners, or are mortgaged to secure one debt, such properties are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage, after deducting from the value of each property the amount of any other incumbrance to which it is subject at the date of the mortgage." It seems to me that the section creates what I may call a stautory charge on the other properties. It creates no personal liability against the owner of the property. In some cases it might be most inequitable to make the owner personally liable. The liability might be greater than the interest in the property. In my opinion article 99 of the Limitation Act has no application whatever to a suit to enforce the right conferred by section 82. It makes no difference whatever, in my judgment that the party claiming the charge did not redeem the mortgage or discharge the mortgage decree before the property was actually sold, nor does it make any difference that the amount of the mortgage or mortgage decree, was not entirely raised out of the plaintiff's property. I am of opinion that in considering whether or not the plaintiff has a charge, he need not and ought not to go outside the provisions of sections 82 and 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is, however, if it were needed, abundant authority for the proposition that the owner of property [717] which has had to bear more than its rateable value, has a charge. The cases will be found collected in the case of Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukhan Saran (1) and Muhammad Yahiya v. Muhammad Rashid-ud-din (2).

In the first case a mortgagor, whose property had been made to bear more than its rateable share, sued his co-mortgagors in a suit like the present for the excess. The majority of the court were of opinion that the plaintiffs could not sue because the entire amount of the mortgage had not been satisfied. The question which was decided in that case does not arise in the present, because it is admitted that the result of the sales which have taken place is that the mortgages have been fully paid off and discharged. There are, no doubt, some dicta of STANLEY, C. J., which suggest that he considered that it was necessary to sustain the plaintiff's claim that he should have redeemed the property and placed himself in the position of one of several mortgagors who has redeemed the mortgage (section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act). However, it will be seen on a perusal of the judgment that the all-important fact, in the opinion of the Chief Justice, was the fact that the mortgage had not been entirely satisfied. If there was any doubt upon the matter, it is set at rest by the remarks of the learned Chief Justice in the second case. There the suit was a suit exactly like the present. The property of some of the mortgagors had been made liable for the entire mortgage debt. The mortgagee had obtained a decree and had sold the property, and he claimed to be entitled to realize the excess for which his property had been made liable by a sale of the property which had not been sold. The case came before our brother BANERJI and STANLEY, C. J. Our brother BANERJI held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. At page 67, STANLEY, C. J., says as follows:—"I agree. In my judgment in Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukhan Saran, upon which reliance has been placed by the appellant's learned advocate, I did not decide, or intend to decide that, where a mortga[illegible] has been wholly satisfied, a co-mortgagor who has discharged m[illegible]han his rateable portion of the debt is not entitled to cont[illegible]n from his co-mortgagors. What was decided in that case was that [718] until the entire mortgage debt has been satisfied a claim for rateable contribution could not be enforced." It seems to me that some confusion has arisen from calling suits like the present " suits for contribution." They would be better described as suits to enforce charges for rateable contribution between co-mortgagors. Defendants 1, 2 and 6, no doubt, rely very strongly on the dicta of STANLEY, C. J., in Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukhan Saran, and contend that section 82 must be read with section 95, and the plaintiff not having paid the decree himself in full and the amount not having been entirely realized out of his own property, he has no charge. In my opinion there is no justification whatever for this contention. In my opinion sections 82 and 95 are quite independent of each other.

The question whether or not the plaintiff is entitled to a simple money decree is not free from difficulty. I have already pointed out that the plaintiff's right originally was not a personal right for contribution. He had a charge on the property which had borne less than its rateable share of the mortgage debt. He could enforce this right so long as the property of the defendants 3 to 5 remained unsold; and any right that he had against that property would attach to the surplus proceeds of sale after the property had been sold. The property, however, having been sold and the surplus proceeds paid out, the plaintiff's right, if any, has now completely changed. In my opinion he has no right now, unless it can be said that the payment out of the surplus proceeds to the defendants 3 to 5 under the peculiar circumstances of the present case gave him a new cause of action. I feel difficulty in seeing what cause of action he has. The surplus proceeds of the sale belonged to the defendants 3 to 5 subject to the plaintiff's charge. No fiduciary relation existed between the plaintiff and the defendants 3 to 5, although it may be that after the plaintiff had filed an objection the payment out of the money to the defendants 3 to 5, the court was wrong in allowing the payment to be made without providing for the plaintiff's charge. It seems to me that this claim can hardly be regarded as a claim for money had and received by the defendants 3 to 5, to the use of the plaintiff. The money was not the plaintiff's money: he merely had a [719] charge or lien upon it: see Guru Das Pyne v. Ram Narain Sahu (1). In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council had to consider whether the claim of the plaintiff was a claim for money had and received. The claim would have been barred if it was a claim for money had and received. Their Lordships held that the suit was not a suit for money had and received. At page 864 their Lordships say:—" When he sold the timber he was selling it as the agent of Moti Dasi, and he received the money for her. The suit is to enforce an equitable claim on the part of the plaintiffs to follow the proceeds of their timber, and finding them in the hands of the defendants to make him responsible for the amount." Of course if the claim of the plaintiff, as now put forward against the defendants 3 to 5, can be regarded as a suit to enforce an equitable claim to follow the surplus of the proceeds of the property into the hands of the defendants 3 to 5, the case is an authority in favour of the plaintiff. On the other hand it seems to me that the case is an authority in favour of the defendants that the suit cannot be regarded as a claim for money had and received. The facts of the case were peculiar. It is quite clear that the High Court (whose judgment was affirmed by their Lordships) felt justified in giving the plaintiff a decree because they held that the defendant had sold timber which belonged to the plaintiff and received the purchase money. At page 863 their Lordships quote from the judgment of the High Court:—"It is quite clear that in this case the plaintiffs did rely in their plaint upon the fact that the defendant had sold the timber and received the proceeds." Under the circumstances of the case the Court considered that the plaintiff was entitled to a personal decree against Guru Das, and their Lordships, describing the suit as a suit to enforce an equitable claim on the part of the plaintiffs to follow the proceeds of their timber in the hands of the defendant, Guru Das, and to make him responsible for the amount, affirmed the decree of the High Court. It seems to me that the facts of the present case are different. No fiduciary relationship of any kind ever existed between the plaintiff and the defendants 3 to 5. There was no fraud in their obtaining payment of the surplus proceeds of [720] the sale of the property. The money was the money of the defendants 3 to 5 subject only to the lien of the plaintiff. The most that can be said in favour of the plaintiff is that the decision of the court that directed or allowed the money to be paid out notwithstanding the plaintiff's objection was incorrect. I am inclined to think that the plaintiff's proper remedy would have been to have instituted a suit for rateable contribution and when the suit was instituted to have applied for an injunction to restrain the payment out of the money pending the hearing of the suit. Both my learned colleagues think that the plaintiff should have a personal decree against the defendants 3 to 5. Notwithstanding the doubts I have expressed, I am not disposed to record a dissentient judgment on the point. The decree that the plaintiff may have against the defendants 3 to 5 will, of course, in no event exceed the amount of the surplus paid out to them.

BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for contribution brought by the plaintiff appellant under the following circumstances:—

Amir Husain, the ancestor of the first two defendants, owned shares in three villages,—namely, (1) Bilaspur, khewat No. 1, (2) Dandhera and (3) Kheri Dudadhari.

On the 17th of March, 1883, he made a usufructuary mortgage of his property in Kheri Dudadhari in favour of Rai Bahadur Nihal Chand, the predecessor in title of the defendants Nos. 3 to 5. In 1891, the mortgagee purchased the equity of redemption of the mortgagor in execution of a simple money decree and thus became the absolute owner of the property.

On the 29th of August, 1885, Amir Husain made a simple mortgage of the villages Dandhera and Kheri Dudadhari and khewat No. 1 of Bilaspur in favour of one Makhan Lal.

On the 3rd of March, 1887, he mortgaged his interests in all the three villages to the aforesaid Makhan Lal.

On the 20th of June, 1894, the plaintiff purchased at auction the whole of Amir Husain's interest in the village Bilaspur in execution of a simple money decree.

Mansamrath Das, the son of Makhan Lal, first brought a suit on the third mortgage mentioned above, namely, that of the 3rd of March, 1887, and obtained a decree for sale on the 31st of [721] May, 1890. In execution of that decree he caused khewat No. 3 of Bilaspur, the village purchased by the plaintiff, to be sold by auction on the 20th of November, 1903. The proceeds of the sale discharged the decree in full and a surplus of Rs. 165 was received by the plaintiff.

Mansamrath Das obtained a decree for sale on the 5th of September, 1895, on the basis of the motgage of the 29th of August, 1885, and in execution thereof caused khewat No. 1 of Bilaspur to be sold by auction on the 20th of June, 1895. The proceeds of this sale were insufficient to satisfy the decree, and therefore on the 21st of January 1907, he caused the village Kheri Dudadhari to be sold and Nihal Chand purchased it. After satisfying the decree in full, the sale proceeds left a surplus of Rs. 4,542-14-0 which was paid over to Nihal Chand some time after the 4th of May, 1907, in spite of plaintiff's protests, on the ground that he was the owner of the village sold.

The plaintiff instituted the present suit on the 6th of August, 1909, on the allegations that the proportionate liability of his village Bilaspur for the two mortgages in favour of Makhan Lal was Rs. 9,430-5-0; that by the auction sale of his village Bilaspur a sum of Rs. 14,255 was realised; that the said village has therefore contributed more than its share of liability and that he is entitled to recover the excess amount so contributed from the villages Dandhera and Kheri Dudahari. In the plaint, as originally framed, he claimed to recover Rs. 4,659-3-0 and interest by sale of the two villages mentioned above, on which he stated he had a charge under section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act. By a petition, dated the 4th of February, 1910, he amended his plaint and abandoned his claim for enforcement of a charge on the village Kheri Dudadhari and prayed for a money decree against the defendants Nos. 3 to 5, the legal representatives of Nihal Chand, for Rs. 2,417-2-0 and interest.

The court below has dismissed the claim on the ground that the plaintiff acquired no charge on the property of his co-mortgagors and that his suit was time-barred, as it was brought after three years from the date of the sale of his village Bilaspur.

[722] The plaintiff has preferred this appeal and the question to be determined is, whether the whole or any part of the claim is barred by limitation.

The suit embraces two branches, first, the claim against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the legal representatives of the original mortgagor, Amir Husain, and defendant No. 6, who is a subsequent mortgagee of the village Dandhera, for enforcement of a charge on that village; and secondly, the claim to obtain a money decree against the defendants Nos. 3 to 5, the legal representatives of Nihal Chand. I shall consider each branch of the claim separately.

As regards the first branch of the claim, I am of opinion that by virtue of the provisions of sections 82 and 100 of the Transfer of Property Act a mortgagor, or his representative in interest, whose property has contributed more than its proportionate share of the mortgage debt, is entitled to a charge on the remainder of the mortgaged property which has not discharged its own share of the debt. Section 82 gives legislative effect to the well-known rule stated in Fisher on Mortgages (6th edition, p. 688) in the following terms:—"If several estates (whether of one or several owners) be mortgaged for or subject equally to one debt, * * * the several estates shall contribute rateably to the debt; being valued for that purpose, after deducting from each estate any other incumbrances by which it is affected." This rule "rests upon the principle that the fund, which is equally liable with another to pay the debt shall not escape because the creditor has been paid out of that other fund alone." (p. 688). The liability to contribute is that of the estates subject to the mortgage, and where those estates have passed to a purchaser or to the heirs of the mortgagor, it is not a personal liability. The necessary effect of the provisions of section 82, therefore, is that where one of the mortgaged estates has contributed more than its own quota of liability, the owner of that estate is entitled to recover the excess from the other estates subject to the mortgage, and acquires a charge on those estates. This charge is created by the provisions of section 82, read with section 100. I stated my views on the point at length [723] in my judgment in Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukhan Saran (1), and I do not think any useful purpose will be served by reiterating them. Section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act was relied upon by the learned counsel for the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 6, but that section, in my opinion, provides for only one class of cases and does not preclude the acquisition of a charge in any other case to which section 82 applies. (See Ghose on Mortgages, 4th edition, p. 371, and the cases cited in the foot-note.) If, therefore, the plaintiff's property has contributed more than the amount for which it was proportionately liable, he has a charge on the other mortgaged properties which have been relieved of the burden which lay on them. The claim being to enforce that charge, article 132 of the first schedule to the Limitation Act applies, and the claim, as against the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 6, is clearly within time.

As regards the mortgage of 1887, which was satisfied by the proceeds of the sale of the plaintiff's property alone he has undoubtedly a right to contribution and to enforce the charge which he has acquired is respect of the amount for which he is entitled to contribution, on the property of the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 6, as the said property was not sold in execution of the decree obtained on the aforesaid mortgage.

As for the mortgage of 1885, it is urged that as by the sale of the plaintiff's property only a part of the amount of that mortgage was realized, the plaintiff has not acquired a charge. In support of this contention the decision of STANLEY, C. J., in Ibn Hasan v. Brijbukhan Saran (1) has been referred to. All that was held by the learned Chief Justice in that case was that a right of contribution and a charge do not arise until the whole mortgage is discharged. This was explained by SIR JOHN STANLEY in his judgment in the later case of Muhammad Yahiya v. Rashid-ud-din (2). In the case before us the full amount of the mortgage of 1885 has been satisfied. Therefore, if the plaintiff's property has contributed a larger amount than that for which it was rateably liable he has acquired a charge for the excess amount contributed by him, on Dandhera, the village of the defendants 1 and 2, which contributed nothing. [724] Whether, therefore, the charge came into existence on the 20th of June, 1905, when the plaintiff's property was sold, or on 20th of January, 1907, when the decree upon the mortgage of 1885 was satisfied in full, the claim to enforce the charge is within time, under article 132 of schedule I of the Limitation Act. Article 99 is, in my opinion, applicable to a suit for a personal decree for contribution and not to a suit to enforce a charge. This was so held in The Raja of Vizianagram v. Rajah Satrucherla Somasekhararaz (3) and Bhagwan Das v. Har Dei (4). The court below was wrong in applying that article and in holding the claim against the defendants Nos 1, 2 nd 6, to be time-barred.

The second branch of the claim, namely, that directed against the defendants Nos. 3 to 5, the legal representatives of Nihal Chand, involves somewhat different considerations. As this part of the claim now stands, the plaintiff does not seek to enforce a charge on immovable property, but prays for a money decree. The ground on which he does so is this :—Upon the sale of his village Bilaspur in 1903 for the realization of the amount of the mortgage of 1887, he acquired a charge on the village Kheri Dudadhari, which was also comprised in that mortgage and was not sold; that this charge was subject to the earlier mortgage of 1885; that a charge also arose when the plaintiff's property was sold in 1905, in execution of the decree obtained on the mortgage of 1885; that, as the village Kheri Dudadhari was comprised in that mortgage and was sold in execution of the aforesaid decree, the plaintiff's charge or lien attached to the surplus sale proceeds, and that, as the surplus sale proceeds were withdrawn from court and appropriated by the predecessor in title of the defendants Nos. 3 to 5, he was liable to repay to the plaintiff that portion of the surplus which is equivalent to the amount for which the plaintiff had a charge. This contention is, in my judgment, well founded. As the village Kheri Dudadhari was also comprised in Makhan Lal's mortgage of 1887 and the whole amount of that mortgage was realized from the property of the plaintiff alone, he acquired a charge on the said village for the excess amount contributed by him. This [725] charge, however, was subject to the prior mortgage of 1885 in which the village Kheri Dudadhari was also included. Similarly, the charge which arose in plaintiff's favour in 1905, when according to him his village contributed more than its share of liability, was subject to the said mortgage. Therefore, in spite of the charge the village was liable to be sold in execution of the decree obtained on the mortgage and was accordingly sold. Had the whole amount of the sale proceeds been appropriated to the discharge of the mortgage, the charge would have been of no effect. But as there was a surplus, the charge attached to the surplus. Had a part only of the property been sold for the satisfaction of the mortgage, the plaintiff would have been entitled to enforce his charge on the remainder of the property; but, as the whole property was sold and the purchaser of it acquired it free from the charge, the plaintiff could not follow it into the hands of the purchaser. His lien would attach to the surplus sale proceeds into which the property was converted. Those proceeds are substituted for the property itself and are therefore subject to the lien to which the property itself was subject. This principle is recognised in section 73 of the Transfer of Property Act. It arises out of equitable considerations, and the lien acquired is an equitable and not a possessory lien. The fact, therefore, of the withdrawal from court of the money to which it attaches cannot extinguish or affect it. The plaintiff is, in my opinion, entitled to follow the money into the hands of the defendants, whose predecessor in title received it with notice of the plaintiff's lien. The plaintiff applied to the court for payment of the surplus sale proceeds, but the court rejected his application, and despite his protests paid over those proceeds to Nihal Chand. So that the plaintiff did all that he could possibly have done under the circumstances. I fail to see on what principles of justice or equity the defendant can claim that the plaintiff has lost his lien on the money and his right to recover it, simply because it has been paid over to the defendant's predecessor in title. In Berhamdeo Pershad v. Tara Chand (1), certain property was sold under a decree on a first mortgage and after the mortgage was satisfied there remained a surplus which [726] was received by the first mortgagee, who also held a third mortgage. The second mortgagee of the porperty then brought a suit claiming to recover the surplus proceeds so withdrawn. It was held that the right of the puisne incumbrancer "to follow the surplus sale proceeds is an equitable right, equity regarding his right as not extinguished or discharged by the sale but as transferred thereby to the surplus sale proceeds, which would be treated as part of his mortgage security, and his right to follow the money or the nature of the suit to enforce such right cannot be affected by the fact that the money had been withdrawn from the court by a party having notice of the plaintiff's right." The principle of this ruling fully applies to the present case and supports the view I have expressed above. I may point out that in suits to which section 73 of the Transfer of Property Act applies, the plaintiff has always been granted a decree for recovery of the surplus proceeds, although the proceeds may have been withdrawn from Court by third parties (see Gosto Behary Pyne v. Shiv Nath Dut (1) and Kamala Kant Sen v. Abdul Barkat (2). For the above reason I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to maintain a money claim against the defendants Nos. 3 to 5.

The only question which remains to be considered is whether this part of the claim is time-barred, as argued by the defendants. The determination of this question depends on the date on which the plaintiff's right to sue accrued and the article of schedule I of the Limitation Act which governs the suit. In my judgment the plaintiff's cause of action arose when Rai Nihal Chand withdrew from court the surplus sale proceeds, that is, after the 4th of May, 1907, and the suit is governed by article 62 of schedule I of the Limitation Act. That article provides for suits "for money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant to the plaintiff's use," that is, for the class of suits well known as suits for money had and received. Under this category of suits are included actions for money wrongfully received by the defendant to which the plaintiff was in justice and equity entitled. The cases on the point are collected in the judgment of MOOKERJEE, J., in Mahomed Wahib [727] v. Mahomed Ameer (3), and the latest case in this Court is that of The Rajputana Malwa Railway Co-operative Stores, Limited, v. The Ajmer Municipal Board (4). In that case a Municipal Board, in disregard of certain lawful orders of the Government of India, levied upon a company trading within municipal limits certain sums by way of octroi duty over and above what they were entitled to. It was held that the suit to recover from the Board the sums so levied was one for money had and received to the use of the plaintiff within the meaning of article 62. The principle of these rulings applies to the present case, and this suit may, in my opinion, be regarded as a suit of the description mentioned in article 62. The learned vakil for the defendants referred to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Guru Das Pyne v. Ram Narain Sahu (5). That case seems to me to be distinguishable. Their Lordships observed that when the defendant sold the plaintiff's timber, he was selling it as the agent of Moti Dasi and received the money for her and not for the plaintiff, and therefore article 62 did not apply. Their Lordships held that the suit was one " to enforce an equitable claim on the part of the plaintiffs to follow the proceeds of their timber and finding them in the hands of the defendants to make him responsible for the amount," and that it was governed by article 118 of Act IX of 1871, which corresponds to article 120 of the present Act. If, as I hold, article 62 applies, limitation would run from the date on which the surplus sale proceeds were received by Rai Nihal Chand, and the suit, having been brought within three years from that date, is not time-barred. If the claim be regarded as one to enforce an equitable right, it is governed by the six years' rule of limitation provided in article 120, and is within time, whether the cause of action arose on the 20th of November, 1903, and the 20th of June, 1905, when the plaintiff's property was sold, or in May, 1907, when the money was withdrawn. According to the Calcutta High Court a suit of this description is governed by article 132. I, however, express no opinion on the point. If that article applies, the suit is clearly not statute-barred. Therefore, whether we apply [728] article 62 or 120 or 132, the claim is within time. Article 61 which provides the limitation for suits "for money payable to the plaintiff for money paid for the defendant," relied upon by the learned vakil for the defendants is clearly inapplicable.

For the above reasons I am of opinion that neither branch of the claim is barred by limitation and the decision of the Court below is erroneous. I would allow the appeal and remand the case to the Court below for trial on the merits.

CHAMIER, J.—I agree with the judgment of my brother BANERJI, and having nothing to add.

BY THE Court.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below is set aside and the case is remanded to that Court under order XLI, rule 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure for trial on the merits.

THIS was a suit by one Musammat Gaura for a declaration of her title to certain property which had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's sister Musammat Mahtabo and brought to sale in execution of a decree upon the mortgage. The plaintiff's case [729] was that the property in suit had been sold by her father to one Sheo Ghulam and bought back by her from the purchaser. The court of first instance (Munsif of Jaunpur) dismissed the suit, basing its judgment mainly upon certain mutation proceedings which took place after the death of plaintiff's father in the course of which the plaintiff and her two sisters came to a compromise regarding their title to certain property said to be identical with the property in suit. The court held that the compromise and the order passed thereon conferred title on the three sisters to the extent specified therein. On appeal the Additional District Judge disagreed with this view of the court below and remanded the case for trial on the merits. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the appellants.

Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan, for the respondent.

KNOX and PIGGOTT, JJ.—In this case Rustam Ali Khan, the principal defendant appellant, took a mortgage of a half-share in a certain house from one Musammat Mahtabo, and eventually brought the said half-share to sale in execution of his decree. The plaintiff, Musammat Gaura, is own sister of Musammat Mahtabo. She sues for a declaration that the entire house is her property and that no part of it is liable to be sold in execution of the decree obtained by Rustam Ali Khan on his mortgage. The plaintiff's case is that the house in suit did not form part of the estate of her late father, as inherited by her sisters, Mahtabo and Shitabo; she says that, on the contrary, this house had been sold by her father in his life-time to one Sheo Ghulam, and purchased from Sheo Ghulam by the plaintiff herself. The learned Munsif who tried the suit in the first instance fixed four issues; and it may perhaps save the parties trouble hereafter if we take occasion to remark in this place that the issues so fixed hardly seem to cover the whole ground. They take no account of the pleas raised in the fifth paragraph of the written statement filed by Rustam Ali Khan, to the effect that he took his mortgage of half the house from Musammat Mahtabo in good faith, with the knowledge of the plaintiff, and under such circumstances as would justify a finding that the plaintiff was allowing her sister, Mahtabo, to appear as the ostensible owner of half the house. [730] On the issues fixed by him, however, the learned Munsif decided one only, the fourth, which referred to certain proceedings in mutation before a Revenue Court which followed on the death of the plaintiff's father. There was a dispute at the time between the plaintiff and her two sisters. This dispute came before the Revenue Courts in connection with the question of the entries to be made in the revenue registers consequent on the death of the father of these ladies. The plaintiff and her sisters filed before the Revenue Court a petition of compromise, in which they explain how they have settled differences between them in reference to the estate left by their father. It is not denied that this petition deals with matters beyond the scope of the Revenue Court's inquiry; the order actually passed by that court referred only to a certain plot of land Bs. 0-1-19 in area, and as to this it directed simply that the names of the plaintiff (Musammat Gaura) and her sisters Mahtabo and Shitabo, should be recorded in the revenue registers as proprietors of this plot in equal shares. The learned Munsif held in effect that this petition of compromise operated to confer upon the three ladies concerned a proprietary right to the extent of one-third each in the house in suit; that the plaintiff was bound by its terms, which were capable of being enforced as they stood, on the strength of the petition itself and of the order passed upon it by the Revenue Court; and that consequently it was not necessary to determine the issue whether the entire house had or had not passed to the plaintiff by purchase from Sheo Ghulam. On appeal from the decree which followed on this finding the learned Additional Judge points out that the petition of compromise relates admittedly to immovable property of a value exceeding Rs. 100; that title in such property could only pass by registered deed or by decree of a competent court; that it did not appear from the facts as laid before him that the order in mutation passed by the Revenue Court referred to the house now in suit at all, and that in any case the petition and the order of the Revenue Court therein could not between them operate so as to transfer proprietary title in the house from the plaintiff to any other person. He therefore set aside the decree of the first court and remanded the case for trial with reference to the remaining issues fixed and to [731] the pleadings of the parties. The defendants come to us in appeal against this order of remand, which, however, seems to be clearly right. Where the law requires a registered instrument in order to the effecting of a certain transfer of property by way of sale, mortgage, exchange or gift, such transfer can only be effected by registered instrument or by decree of a competent court. In none of the numerous rulings to which we were referred, will anything be found to contradict this proposition of law. On the contrary, the principle involved appears distinctly in the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Pranal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (1) and in the judgment of this Court in Raghubans Mani Singh v. Mahabir Singh (2), where the decree of a competent court made good what would otherwise have been a defective title. Cases in which the weakness of an unregistered petition of compromise, not incorporated in any decree or order by a competent court, to confer title is shown are numerous. We may refer to Kashi Kunbi v. Sumer Kunbi (3), Biraj Mohini Dasee v. Kedar Nath Karmakar (4), Muthayya v. Venkataratnam (5) and Sadar-ud-din Ahmad v. Chajju (6). This last is particularly in point because dealing with a compromise filed in a mutation case.

It was contended in argument before us that the plot of land referred to in the mutation order of the Revenue Court was identically the same property under a different description as the "house" which forms the subject-matter of the present suit. The point is by no means clear on the evidence as it stands; but it is not material for the determination of this appeal because the order of the Revenue Court in mutation could not in any case operate so as to confer title. The fact is that the learned Munsif would seem to have tried to find a short cut to the decision of this case, by adopting a view of the law and the facts which was not put forward by either of the parties to the case. He says in effect that Musammat Gaura may have been full owner of the entire house in suit in her father's life-time; but that after her father's death she conveyed a one-third share in this house to each of her sisters, and this conveyance he holds to have been at [732] once effected and proved by the petition of compromise and the order in mutation passed thereon by the Revenue Court. This is not a correct view of law; and if the petition of compromise was tendered in evidence as a title-deed, that is to say, as a document by which transfer of ownership was effected between Musammat Gaura and her sisters, it was not admissible in evidence by reason of section 49 of the Indian Registration Act (III of 1877). It would not appear, however, from a perusal of the pleadings that the case thus made out by the learned Munsif was the case set up by the defendant Rustam Ali Khan. The defendant's case is that there was never any real transfer of ownership from the plaintiff's father to Sheo Ghulam, or from the latter to the plaintiff; that the house in suit formed part of the estate of the plaintiff's father at the time of his death, and was treated as such by the three daughters when they settled their differences by the compromise in the mutation case. As bearing upon the issues thus raised, the proceedings before the Revenue Courts, including the petition of compromise and the orders passed by the Court, are undoubtedly admissible in evidence, and must be taken into account for what they may be worth in deciding those issues.

The essential issues in the case still remain to be tried, and the learned District Judge was clearly right in remanding the case to the first Court for the purpose. We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Act No. I of 1894 (Land Acquisition Act), section 23—General principles of valuation.

Although in ascertaining the market-value of land sought to be acquired under Act No. 1 of 1894 the general principle to be applied is that the value of the land should be calculated with reference to the most lucrative and advantageous way in which the land might be used, if it is apparent that the use of such land for some special purpose, e.g., as building sites, would never be permitted, the land should not be valued as if it could be utilized for such purpose. Stebbing v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1) referred to.

THIS was an appeal against an award made by the District Judge of Shahjahanpur under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. The District Judge calculated the value of the land on the basis of the rent theretofore received by the owner. The owner appealed, urging that the land, being situated alongside of a number of shops in a busy grain market, was of great value as a building site. The sole question in the appeal was what was the correct principle of valuation to be applied in existing circumstances.

Judge has calculated the value of the land on the basis of the rent hitherto received by the owner of the land. In appeal it is urged that the land, lying as it does alongside a number of shops in a busy grain market, was of great value as a building site. It is said that 17 shops and a godown or grain store could be built on it, which would bring in not less than Rs. 1,200 per annum, and thus the market value of the land is not less than Rs. 20,000. Mr. Ryves, on behalf of the Secretary of State, admits the general principle that in cases of this kind the value of the land should be calculated with reference to the most lucrative and advantageous way in which the land might be used, but he points out that the Municipal Board of Shahjahanpur, [734] has repeatedly refused to allow any buildings to be erected on the plot in question on the ground that it is required as a parao or stand for carts coming to the ganj, and that serious inconvenience would be caused to the public if buildings were erected thereon. The appellant contends that the orders of the Board should be disregarded for the purpose of calculating the value of the lands, and that the Board, for whom the land is being acquired, cannot be allowed to use their own orders for the purpose of depreciating the land. It is not suggested that the Board had any idea of taking up the land under the Land Acquisition Act when they refused to allow buildings to be erected on the land, or that they were actuated by any improper motive. It must be taken that they acted in the interest of the inhabitants of the municipality. The appellant made no attempt to have the orders of the Board set aside. In the circumstances it seems to me that the fact that the appellant would never have been allowed to build on the land must be taken into consideration in ascertaining the market value, and that the land cannot be valued as a building site. This view is supported to some exent by the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in Stebbing v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1). In that case part of a disused grave yard was taken up for the purpose of a new road. The rector of the parish claimed that the land should be valued as if it was divested of its ecclesiastical character and could be used for any purpose. The Court overruled this contention and held that as the land could not be used by the rector and was practically valueless in his hands, it could not be valued as land which was not subject to any restriction. In the present case it is quite clear that the Board would never have allowed the appellant to build on the land. At the time when it was acquired for the Board, it was of no value whatever as a building site, and in my opinion it would be wrong to value it as such.

It seems to have been contended in the Court below that the land was worth Rs. 25 per square yard owing to its proximity to the ganj. There is no evidence to support this extravagant claim, [735] I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

JODHI RAI (Plaintiff) v. BASDEO PRASAD and others (Defendants).*

[30th May 1911.]

Suit against an idol—Description of defendant—Amendment of plaint—Limitation—Practice.

Inasmuch as an idol is a juristic person capable of holding property, a suit respecting property in which an idol is interested is properly brought or defended in the name of the idol, although ex necessitate rei the proceedings in the suit must be carried on by some person who represents the idol, usually the manager of the temple in which the idol is installed. Thakur Raghunathji Maharaj v. Shah Lal Chand (1) overruled.

[Ref. 50 I. C. 525=46 Cal. 877 ; 84 I. C. 91 ; 51 I. C. 953 ; Rel. 71 I. C. 480=21 A. L. J. 148=45 All. 319.]

IN this case certain property was purchased in the name of an idol which was under the sarbarakarship of the defendant Basdeo Prasad. The plaintiff brought this suit for pre-emption against the idol under the sarbarakarship of Basdeo Prasad. The court of first instance (Munsif of Rasra) decreed the suit. The District Judge on appeal set aside the decree holding that the suit was wrongly brought against the idol and should have been against the sarbarakar as such, and that the plaint could not at that stage be amended, as the amendment would involve the introduction into the suit of a third party as against whom the claim was barred by limitation. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the appellant :—

The suit has been dismissed on a mere technicality. The defendant raised no objection in the court of first instance which decreed the claim. The lower appellate court has dismissed it, relying on Thakur Raghunathji Maharaj v. Shah Lal Chand (1). The misdescription is not very material. An idol is after [736] all a juristic person, and its position is similar to that of any other juristic person, for instance a corporation. It is true that there is a special provision for corporations but the case of minors is on all fours with the present one. A minor is a juristic person, but he can sue or be sued only through a next friend or guardian ad litem. An idol may not be a sentient being, but it is a juristic person, even though it cannot sign any pleadings itself, just like a minor. The manager of an idol does not sue and cannot be sued in a personal capacity, but only as representing the property attached to the idol. He referred to Manni Kasaundhan v. Crooke (2) and Peary Mohan Mukerjee v. Narendranath Mukerjee (3).

Munshi Gobind Prasad, for the respondent :—

An idol is not a sentient being like a minor. Suit by or against corporations are specially provided for in the Code. Their case is not similar to that of an idol. The real point is to see who is the person really interested in the suit. The question is no doubt only a technical one, but it may have grave consequences.

BANERJI, KARAMAT HUSAIN and CHAMIER, JJ.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption brought by the plaintiff-appellant under the following circumstances :—

Certain property was purchased in the name of Sri Thakurji, seated in the temple, named Purandar Lal, in the town of Rasra, under the management of Basdeo Prasad. The plaintiff claims pre-emption in respect of that property and he brought the suit against the vendor and the vendee. In the plaint the vendee was described as Sri Thakurji, installed in the temple, known as Purandar Lal, in the town of Rasra, under the sarbarakarship of Basdeo Prasad. In the court of first instance no objection was raised as to the form of the suit, and on the merits the claim was decreed. Basdeo Prasad preferred an appeal and in that appeal for the first time he contended that the first defendant had been wrongly described, and by reason of this misdescription the suit must fail. This plea was upheld by the learned Judge who also refused to allow an amendment on the ground that the effect of the amendment would be to introduce another person on the [737] record, and the claim would therefore be time-barred. In support of his opinion the learned Judge relied on the decision of this Court in Thakur Raghunathji Maharaj v. Shah Lal Chand (1). In that case a Bench of this Court held that a suit relating to property alleged to belong to a temple cannot be brought in the name of the idol of the temple. The learned Judges in their judgment gave no reason for this opinion beyond the fact that there may be difficulties about realizing costs. With great respect we are unable to agree with the learned Judges. An idol has been held to be a juristic person who can hold property. Therefore, when a suit is brought in respect of property held by an idol, it is the idol who is the person bringing the suit or against whom the suit is brought, the idol being the person beneficially interested in the suit. No doubt, in every suit the party bringing it or the party against whom it is brought must, when he is suffering from an incapacity, be represented by some other person, as in the case of an infant or a lunatic. Therefore, when a suit is brought on behalf of or against an idol, there must be on the record a person who represents the idol, such as the manager of the temple in which the idol is installed. The manager of the idol is not personally interested in the suit, any more than is the next friend or guardian of a minor. As a suit by a minor should be brought in the name of the minor and not of his next friend, so should a suit on behalf of the idol be brought in the name of the idol as represented by the manager, and in a suit against the idol the defendant should be similarly described. It is true that every pleading must be signed by a sentient being ; but this can be done by the manager, just in the same way as in the case of an infant the pleadings are signed by his next friend or guardian for the suit. The first defendant in this suit was, therefore, properly described in the plaint, and the view of the learned Judge in this respect is in our judgment erroneous. If there is any defect in the description of the defendants in suit of this kind, it is nothing more than an irregularity or misdescription. If, for instance, a suit on behalf of an idol is brought in the name of the manager of the idol that would not warrant the dismissal of the suit : but the plaint may be amended [738] by correcting the description. Similarly, in the case of a defendant. Such an amendment would not have the effect of introducing a third party on the record, and no question of limitation would, in our opinion, arise.

We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the court below, and remand the case to that court with directions to re-admit it under its original number in the register and dispose of it according to law. Costs here and hitherto will abide the event.

JUGAL KISHORE (Petitioner) v. GUR NARAIN AND OTHERS (Opposite Parties).*

Act No. III of 1907 (Provincial Insolvency Act), section 46 (4)—Act No. IX of 1908 (Indian Limitation Act), sections 12 and 29—Appeal—Limitation—Time requisite for obtaining copies.

The Provincial Insolvency Act was intended to be, and is, so far as matters governed by it are concerned, a complete code in itself and contains its own limitation law. In computing, therefore, the period of limitation prescribed for presenting an appeal under the said Act the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the order complained of cannot be excluded. Behari Lall Mookerjee v. Mungolanath Mookerjee (1) and Nagendro Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mohun Parhi (2) referred to. Beni Prasad Kuari v. Dukkhi Rai (3) distinguished.

[Over: 34 All. 496 (F. B.).]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

On the 13th of August 1909, the District Judge of Mainpuri made an order for the appointment of a receiver in certain insolvency proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907. An appeal against this order was filed in the High Court on 1st December, 1909, beyond 90 days from the date of the order ; but the appeal would have been within time if the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the order were deducted in computing the period of 90 days.

[739] At the hearing of the appeal, a preliminary objection was taken by

Babu Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the respondents :

The appeal is time-barred. The limitation prescribed for an appeal to the High Court in insolvency proceedings is, under section 46, clause (4), of the Provincial Insolvency Act, a period of 90 days. This is a period of limitation specially prescribed by a special law, and therefore, under section 29, clause (b), of the Limitation Act, nothing in that Act can alter or affect this period. The appellant cannot, therefore, get the benefit of section 12, clause (2), of the Limitation Act.

Babu Binoy Kumar Mukerji, for the appellant, in reply to preliminary objection :—

The appellant is entitled to a deduction of the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the order, and the appeal is within time. The general provisions of the law of limitation contained in the Limitation Act apply, even where a special law provides a special period of limitation for certan suits or appeals; Behari Loll Mookerjee v. Mungolanath Mookerjee (1). There the provisions of section 12 of the Limitation Act were held applicable to a case under the Bengal Tenancy Act, VIII of 1869, notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the Limitation Act of 1877, which were virtually the same as those of section 29 of the present Act. In the following cases other sections of the Limitation Act, as section 14 and section 5 were held applicable to cases for which periods of limitation were prescribed by special or local Acts; Guracharya v. The President of the Belgaum Town (2), Khetter Mohun v. Dinabashy (3), Reference under section 39 of (Madras) Act V of 1882 (4), Beni Prasad Kuari v. Dukkhi Rai (5). The principle of these rulings, which is set forth at page 279 of the report in I. L. R. 23 All. applies to the present case; section 12 and sections 14 and 5 stand on the same footing, so far as the scope of section 29 is concerned. The case of Girija Nath v. Patani Bibee (6) was as to the applicability of section 7 of the Limitation Act. It did not overrule [740] or dissent from in any way the case in I. L. R. 5 Calcutta. In the case of Nagendro Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mohun Parhi (7) it was decided that section 14 of the Limitation Act did not apply to suits under Act X of 1859, for the reason that that Act was a Code complete in itself and unaffected by the general laws of limitation or procedure. Where an enactment is a complete codification and embodies in itself its own laws of limitation, procedure, stamp, &c., there the provisions of the Limitation Act will have no application. Act X of 1859 is such a complete Code; it provides for periods of limitation by sections 30 to 33, 152, 154 and 158; for stamps by sections 156, 161; and provides elaborately for the procedure to be followed in cases under the Act. But the Provincial Insolvency Act is not such a Code. The only provisions for limitation in it are those contained in section 46, clause 4, and section 22, and they cannot be said to be exhaustive or to contain the whole law of limitation applicable to cases under the Act. In the matter of procedure the Act has to be supplemented by the Civil Procedure Code at every step. The reasons given in the case of Beni Prasad Kuari v. Dharaka Rai (8) for holding that the N.-W. P. Rent Act of 1881 was not a complete Code, apply with equal force to the Provincial Insolvency Act. There are cases in which it has been held that the time requisite for obtaining copies will not be deducted; but it has been held in those cases that it was not neces sary to file copies of the decree or order appealed from; In the matter of petition of Sita Ram (9), Kumara Akkappa v. Sithala Naidu (10), Fazal Muhammad v. Phul Kuar (11). In the case of an appeal under the Provincial Insolvency Act, it is necessary to file copy of the order appealed from. Section 47 lays down that the procedure is to be the same as in the case of civil suits. If the time requisite for obtaining a copy be not deducted, great hardship may result to the appellant, who may be deprived of his right of appeal through no fault of his own. An order may be passed, an appeal from which lies under section 46 to the District Judge, a day or two before the court closes for the long vacation, and although the appellant may apply for a copy at once, yet he may not get it till [741] after the re-opening of the court when his appeal would be time barred. The Legislature could not have intended such a result, by which an appellant would be punished for no fault of his own.

Should the court be disposed to decide the point against the appellant, an opportunity should be given to him to file an affidavit to show why he brought the appeal to be filed after the expiry of 90 days. He was under the impression that he would get the benefit of the period requisite for obtaining the copy, and under the circumstances the court may extend the time.

Babu Girdhari Lal Agarwala, in reply : —

The whole policy of the Provincial Insolvency Act is to expedite the proceedings and prevent delay. The provisions of section 46, clause (4) should, therefore, be strictly enforced. The Act is a complete Code in itself.

KNOX and PIGGOTT, JJ.—A preliminary objection is taken to the hearing of this appeal to the effect that it is time-barred. In support of the objection reliance is placed upon the provisions of section 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act No. III of 1907. That section in clause (4) lays down that the " periods of limitation for appeals to the District Court and the High Court under this section shall be thirty days and ninety days respectively." It is admitted that the order appealed from falls within the provisions of section 46. The date on which the order was passed was the 13th of August, 1909. The memorandum of appeal was not presented until the 1st of December, 1909. The period of ninety days had thus expired before the appeal was presented to this Court. But the appellant seeks to call to his aid the provisions of section 12 of Act No. IX of 1908 and wishes to extend the 90 days allowed by section 46 of Act No. III of 1907 by 19 days, the time occupied in obtaining the copy of the order appealed from. The question we have to consider is whether we can apply to the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907 the provisions contained in parts II and III of Act No. IX of 1908. Section 29 of Act No. IX of 1908 lays down that nothing in this Act shall affect or alter any period of limitation specially prescribed for any suit, appeal or application, by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India. Act No. III of 1907 is such a special law, and at first sight it would seem that the provisions of [742] section 29 of Act No. IX of 1908 effectually prevent our applying to the period of limitation specially prescribed in Act No. III of 1907 any of the general provisions contained in Act No. IX of 1908. The question has been several times before the different courts in this country. At one time the Calcutta Court, for instance, was prepared to apply the general provisions of the limitation of the time to special or local laws. In this connection we may refer particularly to Behari Lal Mookerjee v. Mungolanath Mookerjee (1). But the later trend of rulings in that court has been in the opposite direction ; vide Nagendra Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mohun Parhi (2). In this court there is only one case that we know of bearing upon the point, namely, Beni Prasad Kuari v. Dukhi Rai (3). In this case the learned Judges who decided the question held that section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1877 did apply to a suit under section 93 (a) of the local law, North-Western Provinces Act No. XII of 1881. This case, however, proceeds upon a very special line of reasoning. The learned Judges hold that section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act did not extend any period of limitation. It seems that the period prescribed for the suit had expired on a day when the court was closed, and it was held that nevertheless the suit might be instituted on the day when the court re-opened. It was further held that it is impossible to consider that the Rent Act of 1881 constituted by itself a complete code so as to render inapplicable the provisions of the Limitation Act generally to a case under the Rent Act. The Provincial Insolvency Act sets out in its preamble that it is expedient to consolidate and amend the law relating to insolvency in British India as administered by courts having jurisdiction outside the Presidency towns and the town of Rangoon. We think that the Provincial Insolvency Act was intended to be, and is, so far as matters governed by it are concerned, a complete code in itself and retains its own limitation law. If we hold otherwise, it is easy to conceive that cases would occur where we should be asked to apply a section like section 6 of Act No. IX of 1908 to insolvency proceedings. This could never have been contemplated. Finally, there is no doubt that if we were to [743] allow the appellant the period occupied in obtaining the copy of the order appealed against, we should be altering the special period of limitation contained in section 46, clause (4). A good deal of argument on behalf of the appellant turned on the hardship which would arise if we did not allow this period for which he is in no way responsible and which was entirely beyond his control. The answer is that he can always present his petition of appeal and ask for time under the special circumstances to obtain and file subsequently a copy of the order under appeal. As it happens in the present case the appellant had in his hands the copy on the 9th of September, 1909. This Court re-opened after the long vacation on the 26th of October, 1909, and the appeal was not presented until the 1st December, 1909 The special case of hardship owing to the closing of the Court for vacation is moreover met by the provisions of section 10 of the General Clauses Act No. X of 1897. The preliminary objection succeeds and the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Pugardin Ravutan v. Moidinsa Ravutan (1) and Bepin Behari Chowdhry v. Annoda Prosad Mullick (2) disapproved of.

[744] In the present case the parties had compromised the suit, and had stated in the instrument of compromise the matters in dispute, and had each nominated therein a person as arbitrator to decide them. A decree in terms of the compromise was made by the Court and the matters were referred to the arbitrators named for their decision. One of them refused to act, and the party whose nominee he was declined to make another nomination. The District Judge in the exercise of his discretion under section 510 of the Code thereupon himself determined the matters submitted to the arbitrators, thus practically superseding the arbitration. His decision was confirmed by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner.

Held (reversing the decision of the Courts in India) that the District Judge should, under section 510, have appointed a new arbitrator, which he had power to do notwithstanding that the arbitrator refusing to act had not first consented to do so, and he was not precluded from making such appointment by the fact that the party whose arbitrator had refused to act declined to assist the Court by suggesting another name. The Court could not "proceed with the suit," which had been put an end to by the compromise, the decree on which was final; and it had no power except by consent of parties to itself decide the matters referred to arbitration. That rights having been remitted to one tribunal, had been decided by another, was a fatal objection to the procedure adopted.

APPEAL from a judgment and decree (27th November, 1906) of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which affirmed an order (5th September, 1906) of the District Judge of Lucknow.

The questions for decision in this appeal arose out of the compromise of a suit brought by the respondents Musammat Nazir Begam and Musammat Kaniz Zohra Begam against the appellant.

The facts were that one Agha Hasan Khan died on the 27th of December, 1901, leaving as his hears his widow the first respondent, a daughter, the second respondent, and a son, the appellant. The estate of the deceased was governed by the Shia Muhammadan law, in accordance with which it was, for the purpose of determining the shares of those inheriting, divided into 24 parts, of which the widow took three, the daughter seven, and the son fourteen parts. Disputes arose between the heirs as to their shares, and the suit abovementioned was on the 25th of April, 1903, brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow for the administration of Aga Hasan Khan's estate, in defence of which the appellant put in his written statement. On the 1st of August, 1905, the parties settled the suit by a compromise, the material portion of which was as follows:—

[745] "Paragraph 10.—The division of the zamindari property between the parties will be effected in this way that instead of allotting detached portions of zamindari property (in a share), some ek-ja (lit: in one place) zamindari property situate in one district of as nearly as possible the same value will be allotted to the share of the plaintiffs in accordance with the proposal of the defendant which will be declared by the 1st of September, 1905, but subject to this condition that the plaintiffs would under all circumstances get a 6-anna 8-pie share in village Dadra, pargana Partabgarh, district Bara Banki.

"Maulvi Muhammad Nasim and Sheikh Ali Abbas, two pleaders of the Court, would ascertain the fact that the property proposed by the defendant is with regard to the plaintiffs' share, yielding as far as possible equal profits and is ek-ja (situate in one place), that is to say, the share allotted to the plaintiffs in each of the villages as proposed by the defendant includes the whole of the share possessed by the defendant therein, provided the profits arising out of that share do not exceed those of the plaintiffs' share.

"If after examination both the gentlemen should decide that there is some defect in the defendant's proposal as regards the equality of profits and situation of the property, they would be authorized to make such proposal as they may think proper to remove that defect, and that proposal would be final for the parties.

"If Maulvi Muhammad Nasim and Sheikh Ali Abbas differ in their opinions the decision of Syed Nabi-ullah, barrister-at-law, on the points in which they differed would be binding on the parties.

"The defendant would before the 1st of October, 1905, deliver to the plaintiffs possession over the zamindari which may fall to the share of the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs would be entitled to the profits of kharif 1313 Fasli. If the defendant fail to deliver over possession, the plaintiffs would be entitled to obtain possession by getting the decree executed through Court.

"If by the 1st of September, 1905, the defendant does not submit his proposal in respect of the partition of zamindari to Maulvi Muhammad Nasim, plaintiffs' pleader, the plaintiffs would be at liberty to apply to the Court to have a Commissioner appointed for partition, and according to the partition made by the Commissioner the plaintiffs would be entitled to recover possession through Court."

On the 2nd of August, 1905, a decree was made by the Subordinate Judge in terms of the compromise; and on the 31st of August the defendant, in accordance with the compromise, submitted his proposal of the zamindari property to be allotted to the plaintiffs.

The decree of the Subordinate Judge stated that—

"It is ordered that in terms of the compromise . . . plaintiffs' claim be decreed under sections 157 and 375 of the Civil Procedure Code; and as regards costs the Court orders that parties do bear their own costs."

[746] On the 17th of August, 1906, the District Judge made an order referring the suit to arbitration, and appointed Maulvi Muhammad Nasim, and Sheikh Ali Abbas arbitrators according to the terms of the compromise. On the 21st of August, 1906, Maulvi Muhammad Nasim refused to act as arbitrator, and on the 23rd of August the plaintiffs applied to the District Judge praying the Court to withdraw the order of reference to arbitration and to deal with the matter itself. The plaintiffs declined to appoint another arbitrator, and on the 28th of August, 1906, the District Judge made an order that he would scrutinize the list of properties proposed by the defendant and decide thereon. He said:—

"The provisions of chapter XXXVII, and especially section 510, Civil Procedure Code, do not apply here because there is no point in issue and speaking technically no reference to arbitration. In my opinion the decree-holder cannot be compelled to appoint a fresh arbitrator and is entitled on the failure of one of the persons named in clause 10 to demand the decision of the Court on the question which was referred to arbitration.

"The decree embodying the compromise of course stands good. Only the provisions of clause 10 have become incapable of execution. If the parties had agreed to the appointment of a substitute for Muhammad Nasim it would have come nearest to carrying out the original intention of clause 10. But it would not be a competent order to direct decree-holder against his will to nominate a fresh arbitrator. Even under section 510 the Court can only appoint where there has been an acceptance followed by a refusal, not where the arbitration has never been accepted."

The District Judge accordingly came to a decision on his scrutiny of the list, and on the 5th of September, 1906, he passed an order allotting to the plaintiffs jointly seven villages, not the villages proposed by the defendant. And as the order was appealed from he added the following observations to his order of the 5th of September:—

"The parties entered into a compromise on the 2nd of August, 1905, by which they agreed among other matters that there should be a partition of the zamindari property, in the following terms: -

"The plaintiffs' share consisting of various fractions in the various villages was to be calculated in terms of rupees representing their share of the profits, and totalled. Then the defendant was to draw up a list of villages yielding profits equal to this total, as nearly as might be. It was further provided that these villages should be as far as possible situate at one place.

"The defendant proposed to allot to plaintiffs all the villages in Gonda and some in Bara Banki. The plaintiffs objected that it was not practicable to give them the whole of their share in Gonda, but it was practicable to give the whole of it in Bara Banki. I upheld this objection and assigned them certain villages in Bara Banki nearly equivalent to the total profits due to them."

[747] From that decision the defendant appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner and MR. E. CHAMIER (1st Additional Judicial Commissioner) and MR. L. G. EVANS (2nd Additional Judicial Commissioner) affirmed the order of the District Judge with the observation in the course of their judgment, that—"It seems impossible to make any division of the property which will comply with the compromise more literally than that adopted by the learned Judge."

On this appeal,

De Gruyther, K. C., and S. A. Kyffin for the appellant contended that the Courts in India ought to have appointed an arbitrator in the place of Maulvi Muhammad Nasim who had refused to act. Those Courts had no jurisdiction to settle the matters in dispute as stated in paragraph 10 of the compromise. Section 510 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) gives the Court power to appoint another arbitrator in the place of one who "refuses or neglects to act." Here one of them after being appointed arbitrator, did, "refuse" and did "neglect to act." Reference was made to Pugardin Ravutan v. Moidinsa Ravutan (1), which, it was submitted, had been wrongly decided on the construction of section 510; and to sections 506 and 508 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882. That the Courts should take up and decide what the arbitrators ought to have themselves decided was a wrong procedure: they had no power to do so without the consent of the parties.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and B. Dube for the respondent Zohra Begam contended that the decision of the Courts below was right. They had power under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure to give effect to the compromise in the execution of the decree; see sub-section (2) of that section and the case of Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hasan (2). They had, without consent of the parties, no power to appoint another arbitrator in the place of Maulvi Muhammad Nasim. Reference was made to Pugardin Ravutan v. Moidinsa Ravutan (1) and Bipin Behari Chowdhry v. Annoda Prosad Mullick (3). In the present case, as in those cases, the arbitrator who is said to have refused to act had never accepted the office of arbitrator, or [748] consented to act: Sadha Sookh v. Shiva Dyal (4). Section 510 of the Code applied to cases where the machinery for carrying on a reference to arbitrators appointed by the parties had broken down; in such a case the Court has power to take the suit in hand, and that was the view taken, and it was submitted rightly taken, by the Courts below. Reference was made to the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, sections 213, 392, 396, 506, 514 and 523; and also to section 375 and the case of Biraj Mohini Dasi v. Srimati Chinta Moni Dasi (5) to show that when a decree had been passed by consent of parties, the question as to whether or not the compromise decree was valid could not be gone into on an appeal against that decree. The Civil Procedure Code, 1908 section 5, schedule II, was also referred to. Whether on the construction of this compromise all the property allotted to one party ought to be in one district was a question on which their Lordships were also asked to intimate their opinion.

De Gruyther, K. C., replied, referring to sections 506—510. No suit was "pending" within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code, and the Court had no power itself to decide the reference. Sections 524, 525 and 526 of the Civil Procedure Code were also referred to.

1911, July 21*st*.—The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by LORD SHAW :—

This appeal is presented from an order, dated the 27th of November, 1906, made by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which affirmed an order, dated the 5th of September, 1906, made by the District Judge of Lucknow.

It appears that one Mirza Agha Hasan Khan died on the 27th of December 1901. He was survived by a widow, a daughter and a son. They were heirs of the deceased under the Muhammadan Law of the Shia sect, and the property fell to be divided amongst them in certain proportions. Mirza Agha Hasan Khan's property, however, was situated in various districts, and while the arithmetical division of the shares fell to be determined by law, it was considered by the heirs that it would be to their advantage that, instead of a large variety of fractional portions of property being taken by each heir in subjects situate, it might be, at a [749] considerable distance from each other, an arrangement should be carried out by arbitrators whereby the shares falling to the ladies should be consolidated in one district, and other arrangements for convenience of management entered upon. Accordingly a compromise and agreement in this sense was drawn up.

In April, 1903, the respondents had brought a suit claiming administration of the estate, and on the 1st of August, 1905, the compromise was made, and on the following day, namely, the 2nd of August, 1905, the decree which raises the crucial question in this case was pronounced by the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, which bore that "It is ordered that in terms of the compromise herewith annexed, marked 'A' . . . . plaintiffs' claim be decreed under sections 157 and 375, Civil Procedure Code ; and as re ards costs, the Court orders that parties do bear their own costs." Section 157 seems to have no bearing upon the procedure and to have appeared in the judgment by mistake, but section 375 deals with the matter of compromise of suit and provides that "if a suit be adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise . . . . such agreement, compromise, or satisfaction shall be recorded and the Court shall pass a decree in accordance therewith, so far as it relates to the suit, and such decree shall be final so far as relates to so much of the subject-matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement, compromise, or satisfaction."

As has been pointed out, the agreement or compromise in this case went by its nature beyond the actual matter of suit between the parties. But it is also clear that the decree thus, so to speak, ratifying the compromise, was a final decree. The Court has discharged itself of the lis between the parties, and by their own agreement thus ratified the settlement of the points upon which they had agreed fell to be made by the tribunal of arbitration to which the parties had consigned it.

By the agreement two arbitrators were appointed to settle, allocate, &c., the respective rights of parties. One of these, for reasons which need not be entered upon (he was the advocate for the respondents), refused to act as arbitrator. Thereupon the respondents, on the 23rd of August, 1906, presented a petition in the Court of the District Judge, narrating this fact and averring that [750] "owing to his refusal to act, it has become necessary that the honourable Court should itself examine the schedule and bring it in conformity with the terms of the compromise, or, failing that, it should appoint a commissioner and direct,' &c. The respondents declined to nominate another arbitrator on their behalf; and, in fact, it seems clear that they held, not only that this declinature was within their rights, but that it was also not in the power of the Court to nominate another arbitrator to supply the gap which had been caused by the declinature. The Court accordingly was asked to take the matter into its own hands. Before seeing how the Civil Procedure Code and the Indian decisions bear upon the point, it may be added that the District Judge acceded to the view presented and to all intents and purposes superseded the arbitration and entered upon the scrutiny of the lists of properties and the determination of the allocation—in short, performed the duties of the tribunal of arbitration as if the agreement of compromise had authorized that procedure. This was confirmed in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh by the order appealed from.

By section 510 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882 (Act XIV) it is provided that "if the arbitrator, or, where there are more arbitrators than one, any of the arbitrators . . . dies, or refuses or neglects or becomes incapable to act . . . the Court may in its discretion . . . . appoint a new arbitrator . . . . or make an order superseding the arbitration, and in such case shall proceed with the suit." What had happened in the present case was that after the arbitrator had been appointed he refused to accept office as such, or to act. It appears, however, that the Courts in India have construed this section of the Code as meaning that the section can only apply if the arbitrator who refuses had accepted office before refusing. These decisions are, Pugardin Ravutan v. Mondinsa Ravutan (1) and Bepin Behari Chowdhry v. Annoda Prosad Mullick (2). In both of these cases it was held that the Court has power, under section 510, to appoint a new arbitrator in the place of another only when that other had first consented to act and thereafter refused or become incapable. In their Lordships' opinion this is not a [751] proper construction of section 510 of the Code. It appears to their Lordships that, when an arbitrator is nominated by parties, his refusal to act is signified as clearly by his refusal to accept nomination as by any other course he could pursue. His refusal to act necessarily follows, for he has not performed the first action of all, namely, to take up the office by signifying his assent to his appointment. Their Lordships do not enter at length into the matter as it appears that any other construction would open the way to an easy defeat of the provisions of the Statute. Nor do their Lordships doubt that the decisions referred to proved in the present case an embarrassment to the Courts below and have probably prevented the District Judge doing what would have supplied all that was required, namely, to appoint another arbitrator instead of the one who had declined to accept nomination. Had that been done the tribunal of arbitration would have been set up and the proceedings would have gone forward. Further more, the appointment was in the hands of the District Judge, and he was in no way precluded from making it by the fact that the party whose arbitrator had declined refused to assist the Court by suggesting another name. In their Lordships' opinion the procedure of the Courts below in this particular, and the decisions upon which they manifestly proceeded, were erroneous.

What was done, however, was (apparently under the same section which was held to make it incompetent to appoint a fresh arbitrator), to adopt the other course of superseding the arbitration and entering upon the determination of the matters submitted by the agreement. It was this latter which was done, and not proceeding with the suit. To "proceed with the suit" (to use the language of section 510) was in this case in their Lordships' view, impossible. The suit was at an end, something different from and going much beyond the suit had been entered upon. The decree of the 2nd of August, 1905, was not a decree for partition nor for administration. It was simply a decree ordering the agreement and compromise of parties to be carried into effect, and that decree was final. It put an end to the suit, and that was the very object of the compromise. The alternative in section 510 is impossible, because there is no suit now pending with which the Court can proceed. All that the Courts in India could [752] do was to take advantage of the sections of the Code which enabled them to keep the machinery of arbitration going. This could have been done, and, had it not been for the decisions cited, would in all probability have been done, by simply naming a fresh arbitrator. Parties who agree to set up a tribunal of arbitration are not bound to submit the case referred to another tribunal, such as a District or other Judge. It may be regretted that the supersession of the arbitration and the interposition of the Judge himself to settle the points referred to arbitrators should not have been assented to. But the objection which has been taken—that the rights having been remitted to one tribunal have been settled by another—is, in their Lordships' opinion, a fatal objection.

Their Lordships' will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be allowed and the decrees of the Courts below reversed with costs. The respondent, Kaniz Zohra Begam, must pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Before the Hon'ble Mr. H. G. Richards, Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Banerji.

MANOHARI (Defendant) v. MUHAMMAD ISMAIL AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs.)*

[1st June 1911.]

Civil Procedure Code (1882), sections 13, 539—Res judicata—Suit for declaration of trust and of property comprised in it—Party to such suit not competent subsequently to deny existence of trust.

Held that a person who had been a party to a suit under section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, in which suit the existence of a waqf and the property comprised therein had been declared, was not competent in a subsequent suit for ejectment of the defendant from a part of the waqf property to plead that the property was not waqf. Ghazaffar Husain Khan v. Yawar Husain (1) referred to.

[753] THE fact out of which this appeal arose were as follows:—

One Qazi Amin-ud-din was the owner of 14 shops under a mosque in Kairana and of another 35 shops in close proximity to the mosque. The plaintiffs respondents alleged that these shops had been made waqf by the Qazi in favour of the mosque, and they sued the defendant, appellant, who was in possession of some of them, for ejectment and mesne profits. Qazi Amin-ud-din was succeeded by his granddaughter Musammat Salima Bibi, and a nephew Zahir-ud-din, who got his property under his will. Zahir-ud-din died and was succeeded by his son Fazl-ullah. In 1882, Salima Bibi and Fazl-ullah mortgaged some of these shops to one Naurang Lal; they created three more mortgages of them the same year in favour of Aman Singh, son of Naurang Lal. On the 14th of September, 1884, they motgaged a half share of the 35 shops to Dalip Singh, the husband of the appellant in this case. Dalip Singh brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree on the 29th of February, 1882. The waqf was set up in defence, but the waqfnama was held to be a forgery by the first Court, and that decision was upheld by the High Court, on appeal. On the 20th of August, 1894, a half of 18 shops was put up for sale and purchased by the decree-holder Dalip Singh. On the 29th of January, 1895, Dalip Singh purchased the other half share of these 18 shops from Fazl-ullah alone, together with a half of another four shops. Subsequently there was a partition between Dalip Singh and one Haidar, a purchaser from Fazl-ullah of the other half of the above 4 shops, and Dalip Singh got two entire shops instead of a half of four shops. Thus the defendant came to be in possession of 20 shops.

On the 8th of September, 1905, a suit was brought by some of the Muhammadan residents of Kairana under section 539 of the old Code of Civil Procedure for a declaration that the shops were waqf property and for the appointment of trustees and settlement of a scheme of management. The present appellant was also made a party to the suit. The claim was decreed by the Additional Judge of Meerut on the 18th of June, 1906, and the present plaintiffs respondents in this case were appointed trustees. The present appellant appealed to the High Court, but the decision of the Judge was confirmed on the 25th of July, 1908.

[754] The present suit was by members of the committee of trust for ejectment of Musammat Manohari, who denied the waqf. The Subordinate Judge held that the question of waqf was res judicata because of the above mentioned decision and decreed the suit. The defendant appealed.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji for the appellant :—

The trustees have been entrusted with the waqf property. The Muhammadan community is the beneficiary, and it cannot be said that the cestui qui trust and the trustees are identical. The trustees do not claim under the original parties. They are to hold the property and administer it for the community. They hold a legal estate, the community has only got an equitable one. A suit under section 539 of Act XIV of 1882 is to be brought by persons who are not trustees. The words "under whom they claim" in section 13 of that Act implied some privity between the two. It could not be so here.

The first suit was to keep property safe from any beach of trust not to eject trespassers. That suit was by the plaintiffs as members of the Muhammadan community, this one is by plaintiffs as trustees. The test is whether they claim under the plaintiff in the first suit, not whether they can put forward the same claims as the others. A trustee does not necessarily derive his title from the cestui qui trust but he claims under the creator of the trust. The District Judge holds that position here. Any Muhammadan could bring a suit under section 539, but every Muhammadan could not administer the waqf. Where the waqf was in question, an ordinary suit had to be brought, not one under section 539; Jamal-ud-din v. Mujtaba Husain (1). That section contemplated an existing trust. The words "contentious or not" were probably put in to overrule Mohi-ud-di v. Sayid-ud-din alias Nawab Mean (2). The District Judge had no jurisdiction to decide the question under section 539. Ghazaffar Husain Khan v. Yawar Husain (3) was also referred to.

Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba, for the respondents.

RICHARDS, C. J., and BANERJI, J :—This appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment from certain shops and also for mesne profits. [755] It is not necessary to state the facts in any detail. The plaintiff's claim was that the shops in question were the subject of a waqf created by one Qazi Amin-ud-din ; that in the year 1905 a suit was instituted by certain Muhammadans of Kairana, where the shops are situate, under section 539 of Act No. XIV of 1882: that as the result of that suit, the plaintiffs were appointed trustees, and it was ascertained that the waqf in fact existed and that the shops in question were part of the waqf property. The defendant appellant was a party to the proceedings under section 539 and the plaintiffs contended that they were now entitled to recover possession of the shops from her together with mesne profits. The defendant pleaded that there was no waqf and that she was the representative of a transferee for value and was therefore entitled to remain in possession. The main issue in the case accordingly was, whether or not the defendant could go behind the proceedings under section 539 and re-open the case. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the defendant could not go behind these proceedings and overruled this defence.

There was another claim put forward by the defendant, namely, that certain improvements had been made in the shops and that she was entitled to compensation for such improvements as a condition of possession being taken from her. The learned Subordinate Judge overruled this claim also, with the result that the plaintiff's claim for possession and mesne profits for three years in respect of nine shops was decreed; as regards the rest of the claim it was dismissed. The defendant alone has appealed, and it is argued on her behalf that the proceedings under section 539 cannot operate as res judicata. It is said that the present plaintiffs were no parties to that suit, and that the present plaintiffs cannot be said to claim "under the plaintiffs" in the previous suit. It was further argued that section 539 only applies to a case in which the existence of the trust is not denied; that in the suit brought in 1905 the present defendant denied the existence of the trust, and that therefore the declaration that the shops in question were waqf property as against the present appellant was ultra vires, and that accordingly she is not bound by the decision. In the case of Ghazaffar Husain Khan v. Yawar Hussain (1), [756] a suit was instituted under section 539. Amongst other parties to that suit were certain alienees of the property alleged to be waqf. These alienees (just as in the suit of 1905) pleaded that there was no waqf and that they ought not to have been impleaded in the suit. It was held by the court that the alienees were proper parties and that the court was entitled, as against them, to ascertain what the trust property consisted of. STANLEY, C. J., had some doubt as to whether or not the trustees appointed in the suit would be obliged to bring a separate suit for possession in the event of the defendants who were in actual possession not surrendering it up. This we take to be the meaning of the following passage in the judgment of STANLEY, C. J., at page 116 :—" I see no good reason for holding that under that section the Court cannot, as it did in this case, determine of what the trust properties consisted or find that particular alienations of it could not be maintained, provided all proper parties are present before it. If transferees or mortgagees who have been impleaded in a suit instituted under section 539, do not accept the findings of the court in that suit, it may be necessary for the trustees appointed by the court to manage the trust property, to institute a suit for recovery of possession. As to this I express no opinion." This case is a direct authority that persons who dispute the existence of the trust can be made parties to a suit under section 539, and of course it necessarily follows that they will be bound by the decision arrived at in the suit.

The words in section 13 " parties under whom they claim " are very wide. It is, however, unnecessary for us to decide whether or not the present plaintiffs can be said to claim under the plaintiffs in the suit of 1905. The question between the defendant appellant and the plaintiffs as to the property being waqf could be and was decided once and for all in the proceedings instituted in 1905, and the present suit is merely carrying into effect the decree that was pronounced against the defendant appellant in that suit. In our opinion the learned Subordinate Judge was correct in holding that it is not open in this suit for the defendant appellant to re-open the question as to whether or not the shops in question were waqf property, though not necessarily on the ground of res judicata. As to the question [757] of compensation, even if we assume that improvements were made by the husband of the appellant for which they had not been amply compensated by the user, we are not satisfied that such improvements were made in the bona fide belief that he was absolutely entitled to the shops. There is a large amount of documentary evidence which goes to show that the defendant's husband had at least notice that the property was alleged to be waqf property.

The result is that we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Land-holder and tenant—Presumptions as to land-holder's rights in the abadi of an agricultural village—House site occupied by a person not an agriculturist nor one of the customary village servants or artizans—Adverse possession.

In a village which was not a purely agricultural village, but in which, on the contrary, some two-thirds of the inhabitants were non-agriculturists, certain persons, father and son, were in possession of a house site in the abadi. They carried on the occupation of inn keepers and sellers of tobacco, and there was no evidence of the origin of their possession or that they ever paid rent to the zamindar or acknowledged his title in any way. The site was sold by the son, and some time after such sale, the house or shop thereon having fallen down, the zamindar sued to eject the purchasers.

Held that in the circumstances of the case the defendants and their predecessors in interest, were properly held to have acquired a title to the site by adverse possession. Chajju Singh v. Kanhia (1) and Bhaddar v. Khair-ud-din Husain (2) referred to.

[Ref. 14 I. C. 324, 22 I. C. 891.]

THIS was a suit for possession of a plot of land, the site of a house in the abadi of a village brought by the zemindars of the village. In the plaint it was alleged that the plot in question was situate in mauza Kamalganj, which was an agricultural [758] village, that there had been a dilapidated shop on the site, that the defendants 1 and 2 had taken possession of the plot and erected a shed thereon. They claimed that defendant No. 3 had no right to sell the plot in question to the defendants 1 and 2, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to possession. The defendants pleaded (1) that the shop was situate in a new ganj which had been established by Mr. Redcock, a Collector, and that the persons who occupied houses and shops in this ganj were the owners of their shops; (2) that the shop in question was situate in Qasba Kamalganj, and that Qasba Kamalganj belonged to Government, and that the zemindars had no right to the houses and shops. Lastly they pleaded limitation. The court of first instance decided in favour of the defendants that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as the defendants had been in adverse possession. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge found that the village was an agricultural village and having arrived at this finding he reversed the decree of the court of first instance and decreed the plaintiff's suit. In second appeal to the High Court the Court was of opinion that the case ought not to be decided on the mere finding that Kamalganj was an agricultural village. Two issues were remitted for determination by the Subordinate Judge. The issues were:—

(1) Are the plaintiffs or the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 owners of the land in dispute?

(2) Have the defendants or their predecessors in title been in adverse possession of the property in dispute for upwards of 12 years prior to the institution of this suit?

The finding returned was in favour of the appellants. The case was then referred to a larger bench by RICHARDS, C. J., and BANERJI, J.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji (with him Babu Girdhari Lal Agarwala), for the appellants:—

A zamindar stands on the same footing as any other plaintiff. When he brings an action in ejectment he must prove a subsisting title. The title of a zamindar can be extinguished by adverse possession. The appellants are not tenants; they do not belong to the class of artisans or handicraftsmen who usually find a place in agricultural villages; they have never paid rent in cash [759] or kind to the zamindar, and have never acknowledged his title. No presumption in favour of the zamindars arises in such a case: Bhaddar v. Khair-ud-din Husain (1), Nazir Hasan v. Shibba (2). Possession is prima facie exclusive and adverse, and the person out of possession must prove that the defendant's possession is of a permissive character, that he came in as a tenant or as a licensee; Ramchandra v. Narayan Mahadev (3). Tenants in an agricultural village claim under the zamindar and even where they do not pay rent, they render services of various kinds to the zamindar. Their possession, therefore, under ordinary circumstances, cannot be adverse to the zamindar. But this is not an agricultural village and the defendants are not tenants. Reference was made to the Gazetteer of Farrukhabad district.

Mr. W. A. Porter (with him Maulvi Gulam Mujtaba), for the respondents:

The court below has found that Kamalganj is an agricultural village. The plot in suit admittedly lies within the ambit of the zamindari. There is a presumption that the zamindar is in possession of the entire village site, and all residents of houses thereon are there with his permission or license; Chajju Singh v. Kanhia (4). In any case, it would be for the defendants to establish their plea of adverse possession by proving that they had actually denied the zamindar's title more than twelve years before suit. There can be no presumption made in favour of squatters whom the zamindar allows to stay on and does not care to turn out. If the law were as the Subordinate Judge laid it down, the title of the zamindars to the bulk of their property in the abadi would at once become insecure, if not positively bad; Jankishun Singh v. Moti Chand (5), Framji Cursetji v. Goculdas Madhowji (6), Panna v. Nazir Husain (7), Saadu v. Behari Singh (8).

The finding that the defendants have been in adverse possession is one of mixed law and fact, and the High Court is not bound to accept it in second appeal; Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein (9).

[760] Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, was not heard in reply.

RICHARDS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiffs claimed possession of a plot of ground. In the plaint it was alleged that the plot in question was situate in mauza Kamalganj, which was an agricultural village, that there had been a dilapidated shop on the site, that the defendants 1 and 2 had taken possession of the plot and erected a shed thereon. They claimed that defendant No. 3 had no right to sell the plot in question to the defendants 1 and 2, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to possession. The defendants pleaded (1) that the shop was situate in a new ganj which had been established by Mr. Redcock, a Collector, and that the persons who occupied houses and shops in this ganj were the owners of their shops; (2) that the shop in question was situate in Qasba Kamalganj, and that Qasba Kamalganj belonged to Government, and that the zamindars had no right to the houses and shops. Lastly they pleaded limitation. The court of first instance decided in favour of the defendants that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as the defendants had been in adverse possession. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge found that the village was an agricultural village and having arrived at this finding he reversed the decree of the court of first instance and decreed the plaintiff's suit. In second appeal to this Court the learned Judges were of opinion that the case ought not to be decided on the mere finding that Kamalganj was an agricultural village. Two issues were remitted for determination by the Subordinate Judge. The issues were:—

(1) Are the plaintiffs or the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 owners of the land in dispute? and

(2) have the defendants or their predecessors in title been in adverse possession of the property in dispute for upwards of 12 years prior to the institution of this suit?

These issues came before Mr. Gauri Shankar, Subordinate Judge, who had succeeded Mr. Prem Behari.

I think that the facts have now been ascertained pretty clearly, and it remains to consider what should be the decision of the court upon the ascertained facts. It appears that many years ago, before the Mutiny, Mr. Redcock established a ganj at Kamal-[761] ganj. The zamindars appear to have voluntarily given up all claim to the sites and the houses situate in that ganj. The occupiers have been accustomed to deal with the sites and houses as their own absolute property. It has been found, however, contrary to the allegation of the defendants that the site in question is not situate in the ganj established by Mr. Redcock. Mr. Prem Behari found that Kamalganj was an agricultural village. He does not give any reasons for his finding, nor does it appear what Mr. Prem Behari considered to be an "agricultural village." His finding on this question is very unsatisfactory. We must take it, however, that in Kamalganj there are agriculturists living in the abadi who are the tenants of the zamindars. Beyond this I do not think we are bound by the finding of Mr. Prem Behari. The real facts, I think, have been fairly ascertained by Mr. Gauri Shankar when determining the issues referred to him by this Court. He says that according to the evidence of the plaintiffs own witnesses two-thirds of the population of Kamalganj are non-agriculturists. Various businesses are carried on there. Some persons even carry on the business of commission agents. It is quite clear that Kamalganj is not an ordinary agricultural village.

I now come to the history so far as it could be ascertained, of the piece of land in dispute. The first person found in possession was one Chingi. The origin of Chingi's possession has not been ascertained, nor is there any evidence as to who was there before him. Chingi was succeeded by his son Nanhe. After the death of Chingi the site was sold on the 12th of December, 1901. The transfer was effected by a registered sale-deed. Nanhe executed it on behalf of himself and as the certificated guardian of his minor son and two minor sisters. The sanction of the District Court was obtained to the transfer. It has been clearly found that neither Chingi nor Nahne, nor the defendants 1 and 2 were ever at any time agriculturists. The main business of Chingi and Nanhe was that of inn-keepers and sellers of tobacco. The court finds, and I think it was perfectly justified in finding, that neither Chingi, Nanhe, nor the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 ever paid rent in cash or kind. In the Full Bench case of Chajju Singh [762] v. Kanhia (1), it is laid down that " the zamindars of a village are, as a rule, and presumably, the owners of all the house sites in their village." I entirely agree with this proposition. In the ordinary agricultural village there are a number of persons occupying the abadi. In a great many cases it would be impossible for the zamindar to prove the origin of the occupation or the payment of rent either in cash or kind. The agriculturists pay no rent for their houses as such. There are persons carrying on certain trades who invariably reside in the village without payment of rent. In my opinion in an ordinary agricultural village there is a very strong presumption that the sites of the houses belong to the zamindar. I think it would be wrong as a general rule to hold that a zamindar loses his proprietary title in a site within the ambit of a zamindari by reason merely of the fact that he is unable to prove that the person who last held the land or his predecessors in occupation were agriculturists or carried on some one of the recognized village trades, or the payment of rent in cash or kind. In many cases it might be that a person who was either an agriculturist or village trader and as such, in occupation of a site, has given possession to some relative or friend. If it were held that the moment any person who was not an agriculturist or village trader began to acquire a title against the zamindar, the position of the began to occupy a village site without the express premission of the zamindar, he latter would be well-nigh intolerable, and he would be driven to perpetually harass the occupiers of the village to the detriment of the whole village community.

There is no doubt that in many villages the occupiers have acquired certain rights and privileges by usage, but the zamindar remains proprietor subject to the usage.

Great reliance was placed by Dr. Banerji on behalf of the defendants in the case of Bhaddar v. Khair-ud-din Husain (2). In that case the suit of the plaintiff in which he sought to recover possession of the site of a house within the municipal limits of the city of Allahabad was dismissed by the court of first instance. A Bench of this Court set aside the decree of the court of first appeal which had reversed the decree [763] of the court of first instance. The learned Judges restored the decree of the court of first instance. Independent judgments, however, were delivered by STANLEY, C. J., and RUSTOMJEE, J., and the reasons given by each of the Judges are not quite the same. STANLEY, C. J., held that either a title had been acquired by adverse possession or that leave and licence to build the house must be inferred: whichever view was accepted, the plaintiff's suit failed. I have referred to this case because I do not think that we ought to lay down any hard and fast rule as to the presumption which arises in any particular case. I my opinion this question of adverse possession ought to be decided on the facts proved, and surrounding circumstances of each case. I think the finding of Mr. Gauri Shankar is a finding that the defendants and their predecessors in title have acquired a title by adverse possession. I think that we ought to accept this finding unless we think that the finding is a finding which could not legally be arrived at upon the evidence. In other words, the question is whether or not there was evidence before the court which would justify the finding of adverse possession. The learned Subordinate Judges says: —" Possession is prima facie evidence of ownership and is presumed to be adverse unless it is proved to have been otherwise." I think that this is hardly a correct way of approching the consideration of the case. It seems to me that prima facie the zamindars are in possession of the whole of their zamindari. The possession prima facie of all the occupiers of houses and sites in the abadi is the possession of the zamindar. But this presumption is capable of being rebutted. It is a very strong presumption in the case of an ordinary agricultural village. The presumption is not so strong in the case of a village like the present where the large majority of the population are non-agriculturists.

In the circumstances of the present case I do not think that it was necessary that the defendants should prove that they expressly set up adverse possession more than twelve years before the institution of the suit as contended by Mr. Porter for the respondents. In considering the nature of the possession of Chingi and Nanhe, I think that the court below was entitled to take into consideration the fact that the majority of the population [764] were non-agriculturists. It was entitled to take into consideration the fact that the occupiers of shops in the ganj established by Mr Redcock had become the actual owners, and that there would be a natural tendency for others to assert a similar right, although they did not occupy the new ganj. I think also that the court was entitled to consider the circumstances of the sale of the present site in 1901. It was sold in the most public way for a considerable sum of money. The leave of the court was obtained to the sale, and the defendants 1 and 2 openly purchased the site. The circumstances of this sale tend to show that people generally in the district would look upon Nanhe as the owner of the site.

Lastly, I think that the court was entitled to consider the long continued user of the premises for purposes which were not part of the ordinary machinery of an ordinary agricultural village.

In my opinion on the evidence the court was quite justified in finding that the defendants and their predecessors had been in adverse possession for more than twelve years before the institution of the suit. I would therefore allow the appeal with the exception mentioned in the finding of Mr. Gauri Shankar dated the 8th April, 1911.

BANERJI, J. —I agree in the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice. No doubt, in an agricultural village the zamindar is presumably the owner of all the sites in the abadi; but it does not follow from this that adverse possession cannot be acquired of any particular plot of land. Each case must be determined with reference to its own peculiar circumstances. In the case of an agricultural tenant or a handicraftsman or trader whose presence is necessary for the requirements of the village, the presumption is that his occupation of the site of his house is with the permission of the landlord. In their case the quantum of evidence required to prove adverse possession would be greater than in the case of other persons. But where, as in this case, it is not proved that the occupation of the site in question was with the leave and licence of the landlord, but it is proved that the occupier belonged to a class of persons, such as an inn-keeper, who ordinarily found no place in an agricultural village, that he [765] never acknowledged the landlord's title and never paid rent or any other due to him for the occupation of the site, the ordinary rule that every plaintiff against whom limitation is pleaded must prove a subsisting title not barred by limitation will, in my opinion, apply even when the plaintiff happens to be the zamindar. In the case before us the court below has found on evidence which it was entitled to take into consideration that the possession of the defendants and their predecessors in title was adverse to the plaintiffs. That finding must be accepted in second appeal. I am unable to agree with the contention of the learned counsel for the respondents that the finding should be held to be erroneous in law, simply because the land in suit lies within the ambit of the plaintiff's zamindari. In veiw of the finding the claim must be held to be time barred, except as to the strip of land mentioned in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge.

CHAMIER, J.—I also agree in the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice. The facts have been stated fully by him and I will not repeat them.

The ordinary rule is that a plaintiff in a suit for possession of property against whom limitation is pleaded must prove a subsisting title not barred by limitation; and this he generally does by evidence that he has title and that he has been in possession within limitation. I apprehend that the rule applies as much to a zamindar suing for possession of land lying within his zamindari as to any other person. In the case of waste land and in some other cases possession by the plaintiff beyond limitation may be presumed to have continued until the contrary is proved. There can be no doubt that in the case of a suit by a zamindar for possession of land in an abadi which has been occupied by an agricultural tenant or by a person belonging to the village community such as the village lohar, the barber and the like, the zamindar is entitled to rely on the presumption, the strength of which varies with the circumstances of the case, that such person held possession by leave or licence of the zamindar. This presumption may, perhaps, be made, in other cases also. Where such a presumption can be made, the burden of proving adverse possession lies on the defendant, and even when the presumption [766] cannot be made, very little evidence is required in some cases of the kind to shift the burden of proof on to the defendant. But in the present case the circumstances were peculiar. It has been held that the village was an agricultural village, but two-thirds of the inhabitants are said to have been non-agriculturists. There seems to have been no proof and no ground for presuming that the zamindar had been in possession of the land at any time during the last forty years, or that the defendants or their predecessors held under him in any sense, and I think that the case might have been disposed of on that ground. Assuming, however, that the burden of proof lay on the defendants to prove that their possession was adverse, I think that the lower appellate court was right in inferring from the proved facts that the possession of the defendants and the persons through whom they claim, has been adverse to the zamindars for considerably more than twelve years.

Before Mr. Justice Tudball.

AISHA AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. FAIYAZ HUSAIN (Plaintiff).*

[10th June, 1911.]

Act No. VII of 1870 (Court Fees Act), schedule II, article 17 (vi)—Court fee—Suit for restitution of conjugal rights.

Held, that the court fee payable in respect of a suit for restitution of conjugal rights is a fee of ten rupees under article 17, clause (vi), of the second schedule to the Court Fees Act, 1870. Zair Husain Khan v. Kurshed Jan (1), referred to.

ON a memorandum of appeal being filed the Stamp Reporter made the following report :—

"Article 15, schedule II, of Act VII of 1870, which governed suits for the recovery of a wife, was repealed by the present Code of Civil Procedure, schedule V. The case in my humble opinion is now governed by article I, schedule I, of Act No. VII of 1870, and the court fee is leviable ad valorem on the value of the subject-matter in dispute.

"The valuation of the suit and of the appeal to the lower appellate court was Rs 1,150 and that, I submit, should be the valuation of this appeal, it not being open to the appellants to put their own valuation on the appeal.

"That being so, a fee of Rs 85 is payable. Rupees 13-12-0 having been paid, there is therefore a deficiency of Rs. 71-4-0 to be made good by the defendants appellants for this Court.

"As to sufficiency or otherwise of the fee paid in the lower Court report will be submitted on receipt of record."

The following objections were raised by Babu Balram Chandra Mukerji for the appellant :—

"This was a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The plaintiff, as will appear from the plaint, valued his suit for the purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 1,100 and paid a court fee of Rs. 10. The defendant did object, but he was overruled. On appeal a similar court fee was paid in the lower Appellate Court without any objection. No doubt, the clause in the Court Fees Act prescribing a fixed Court fee of Rs. 5 for such suits has been repealed by the Civil Procedure Code, but there is nothing to show that it does not come under article 17, clause (vi) of the Court Fees Act. The mere fact that a suit is valued at a certain amount for the purposes of jurisdiction would not necessarily mean that that [768] amount was the value of the subject-matter of the suit. In no case has it ever been held that a wife could be valued. In fact, there are cases both in this and other High Courts where it has been held that a wife cannot be valued. A plaintiff can only put some value on his plaint or relief so as to give jurisdiction. In the case of Zair Husain Khan v. Kurshed Jan (1) AIKMAN, J., says:—'It appears to me that it would be more accurate to characterize a suit of this nature as one, the subject-matter of which does not admit of being satisfactorily valued.' 'Subject-matter in dispute' is quite a different thing from the value of the suit or relief. The point will be more clear by referring to Indian Law Reports, 13 Calcutta, 232, and 18 Calcutta, 378, where it was held that the mere fact that a suit for restitution of conjugal rights is valued at Rs. 25,000 will not enable a party to appeal to the Privy Council. The distinction between the words 'subject-matter in dispute' and 'relief' must be borne in mind. At any rate the point might be settled by an authoritative decision. I submit the court fee paid is sufficient."

The Stamp Reporter made the following further report:—

"The learned vakil for the appellant objects to the correctness of the office report, the case is therefore submitted under section 5 of Act No VII of 1870 to the Taxing Officer for decision.

"In continuation of my report dated the 12th May last, I beg to submit that before Act No. V of 1908, the present Code of Civil Procedure, came into force, there was a fixed fee of Rs. 5 prescribed by article 15, schedule II, of the Court Fees Act for a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, and therefore there could not be an occasion for a decision of the question as to whether such a suit could or could not be valued for purposes of Court fees. There have been cases in which it was decided that such a suit could be valued for purposes of jurisdiction, and that the value is, as a rule, the value which the plaintiff chooses to put upon it. The full bench case in 28 Allahabad, 545 in which the whole case-law on the subject was reviewed and on which the learned vakil for the appellant also relies, is conclusive authority on the point so far as these Provinces are concerned. Just before the passage quoted by the learned vakil for the appellant from that judgment, AIKMAN, J. is reported to have observed, at p. 548 of the report. 'In the case before us the suit has been valued, and therefore I think that it is scarcely correct to say that such a suit is incapable of being valued.'

"Now, I submit that if the subject-matter of a suit can be valued in money for purposes of jurisdiction, there is no reason why it cannot be valued for purposes of Court fees. The value of the subject-matter in dispute is the value of the suit or relief. The fact that the subject-matter in dispute in a suit does not admit of satisfactorily being valued, does not mean that the matter in controversy [769] cannot at all be valued. That being so, article 17, clause (vi) of schedule II does not apply. The only article left in the Court Fees Act which can apply to a suit like this is article 1 of schedule I of the Act.

"Besides that, to my mind it is not right to say that the Legislature in repealing article 15, Schedule II, intended that the suits which were theretofore governed by that article should thenceforward be governed by another article in the same schedule, namely, article 17, clause (vi), which requires a higher fixed fee to be paid."

"The plaintiff in this suit sued for restitution of conjugal rights, and obtained a decree. Against this decree the defendant has appealed. The appeal bears a Rs. 10 stamp. The office contends that it should bear an ad valorem stamp, calculated on the value of the suit as shown by the plaintiff for the purpose of jurisdiction. The defendant, on the other hand, contends that the case comes under schedule II, clause 17 (vi), of the Court Fees Act as a suit 'where it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject-matter of the suit.' In Akhmannessa Bibi v. Mahomed Hatem (2) it has been held that a suit for restitution of conjugal rights is incapable of being valued. This ruling was dissented from in Zair Husain Khan v Khurshed Jan (1) a Full Bench decision. In both cases the decision was with reference to section 19 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act the Calcutta High Court holding that such a suit could not be valued for purposes of jurisdiction, and this Court holding that it could, and that the value of the suit was the value which the plaintiff chose to put upon it. question whether a suit for restitution of conjugal rights was or was not one, of which the subject-matter could not possibly be estimated at a money value, was not considered. I may observe, however, that the reasoning of AIKMAN, J., who delivered the Full Bench ruling, clearly indicated that the fact that a suit can be valued for purposes of jurisdiction is not conclusive on the point now at issue. for he says .—' I am of opinion that the Legislature took it for granted that a money value of some kind, it may be an arbitrary value, can be placed on all suits. Now if all suits are capable for purposes of jurisdiction of a money valuation and if suits so capable of valuation are not suits in which the value of the subject-matter cannot be estimated in money, then it would seem that there are no suits falling under schedule II, article 17 (vi).

" It is clear that the subject-matter of a suit for restitution of conjugal rights cannot be satisfactorily valued in money. On the other hand, it cannot be said that the subject-matter, viz., restitution of certain rights, can in no circumstances have a money value. Conceivably the plaintiff might be willing to take a certain sum in lieu thereof. The question would therefore seem to be whether in article 17 (vi) 'estimate at a money value' is to be taken to mean 'estimate satisfactorily' at a money value. Having regard to the character of the other suits which are bracketed in article 17 with the suits referred to in clause (vi) thereof, all suits, it will be observed, are as capable of a money valuation as suits for restitution of conjugal rights, but all incapable of a satisfactory valuation. I venture myself to opine that 'estimate' should be construed as 'estimate satsifactorily.'"

This is a reference by the Taxing Officer. The plaintiff in the suit sued for restitution of conjugal rights and obtained a decree. The defendant has appealed affixing a court fee stamp of Rs. 10, under article 17, clause (vi), of the second schedule to the Court Fees Act. The office report is to the effect that it should have an ad valorem stamp calculated on the value of the suit, as given by the plaintiff, for the purposes of jurisdiction. It has, no doubt, been held by this court in the case of Zair Husain Khan v. Khurshed Jan (1) that a suit of this nature may be arbitrarily valued by the plaintiff for the purpose of jurisdiction. The office suggests that this being so, an ad valorem fee must be paid, but it is obvious that the valuation placed by the plaintiff for the purposes of jurisdiction is entirely an arbitrary one, enabling him thereby to select the forum for the trial of the suit. But at the same time it is equally clear that it it not possible to estimate at a money value the subject-matter of the present suit. The valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction is clearly an arbitrary valuation pure and simple. Prior to the coming into force of the present Code of Civil Procedure Act V of 1908, in such suits, there was a fixed court fee of Rs. 5. Under section 156 of Act V of 1908, article 15 of schedule II to the Court Fees Act is repealed. The present class of suits, therefore, is not one which prior to that Act was such that an ad valorem fee was taken upon it. If every plaintiff can for the purpose of jurisdiction put an arbitrary value on the subject-matter in suits in which the value of such subject-matter cannot be estimated in money, and if by reason thereof an ad valorem court fee must be calculated in such suits, unless they fall within some specified article, then clause (vi), article 17, schedule II to the Court Fees Act is quite useless. It cannot, however, be presumed that it was retained for no purpose whatever.

It is clear to my mind, that the present suit does fall within clause (vi) of article 17 of schedule II. The proper court fee is Rs. 10.

EMPEROR v. MANIK RAI AND OTHERS*

[14th June, 1911.]

Criminal Procedure Code, section 106—Security to keep the peace—"Offence involving a breach of the peace"—Mischief by removing land-mark—Act No. XLV of 1860 (Indian Penal Code), section 434.

Held that an offence "involing a breach of the peace" mentioned in section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, does not mean only an offence which necessarily involves a breach of the peace or of which a breach of the peace forms an ingredient, but includes such an offence as in common knowledge is ordinarily or very probably the occasion of a breach of the peace, as, for example, the removal of a land-mark. Baidya Nath Majumdar v. Nibaran Chunder Gope (1), Arun Samanta v. Emperor (2), Raj Narain Roy v. Bhagabat Chunder Nundi (3), Muthiah Chetty v. Emperor (4), dissented from.

IN this case Manik Rai and others were convicted under section 434 of the Indian Penal Code of the offence of removing a land-mark and were sentenced to a fine of Rs. 25 each. They were also bound over under section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to execute bonds to keep the peace for one year. The Sessions Judge of Ghazipur referred the case to the High Court, being of opinion that the offence punishable under section 434 of the Indian Penal Code was not an offence involving a breach of the peace within the meaning of section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Munshi Haribans Sahai, for the accused.

KNOX, J.—The accused have been convicted of an offence under section 434, Indian Penal Code, and they have been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25 each. They have also been ordered under section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to execute a bond for keeping the peace for one year. The case has been sent up by the Court of Session, Ghazipur, with a recommendation that that portion of the order, which was made under section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, be set aside. In support of this reference my attention has been called to several rulings, namely, Baidya Nath Majumdar v. Nibaran [772] Gope (1), Arun Samanta v. Emperor (2), Raj Narain Roy v. Bhagabat Chunder Nandi (3), Muthiah Chetti, v. Emperor (4). That the offence of removing a land-mark is in several districts in this provinces too often followed by serious riots and loss of life, is a matter of common experience. I do not say that in every case in which a land-mark is removed, the offences of grievous hurt, et cetera necessarily follow. But if the offence is such an offence that it is as a matter of experience, often followed by breaches of the peace, and if the evidence shows, as in this case it does, that the accused were prepared to accompany the removal of the land-mark by a breach of the peace and were only prevented from doing so by the other side running away, I am of opinion that the offence is one which comes within the terms used in section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure "offence involving a breach of the peace." The word "involve"—in my opinion connotes the inclusion, not only of a necessary, but also of a probable feature, circumstance, antecedent condition or consequence. I notice in the Calcutta cases that the word "necessarily" is inserted by learned Judges between the word "offence" and the word "involving". This is not the view taken by this Court. The object of the section, as we understand it, is to prevent breaches of peace taking place and not merely to follow up breaches of the peace which have taken place. The Madras Court considers that the words "involving breach of the peace" in this section require that breach of peace should be an ingredient of the offence proved, and that before that section is put in force, there must be a finding that a breach of peace has occurred. This again is not the view taken by this Court. With every respect for the learned Judges who decided the above cases, I prefer to follow the rulings of this Court. I see no reason for interfering and direct that the record be returned.

petition of revision was not pressed. The facts found are that the accused went to a grove in Sindhauli to demarcate a certain share in the grove which had been purchased by the petitioner, Ram Prasad, a Bania, who has acquired a share in the village of Sindhauli. In the course of the demarcation the petitioner had dug up certain graves, which were in this bagh, and exposed the bones of the persons buried there, in [774] spite of the remonstrances of the relations of the persons buried. The persons buried were Syeds, residents of the village of Sindhauli. There is nothing to show that the particular portion in this grove had been either by act of court or act of private parties set apart and allotted to Ram Prasad as the particular share of the grove to which he individually was entitled. We mention this to show that the question has not risen before us in this case as to what rights, if any, the residents in the village who have been in the habit of burying their dead in the grove may or may not have acquired even as against the proprietor of the portion of the land in which the grove lies. The argument before us has taken the line that Ram Prasad, the petitioner (and Bhagwan Das, his servant), being a joint owner in this grove, had not even on the facts proved, committed any trespass on the land in question. We have heard all that the learned Counsel could urge on behalf of the petitioners. No precedent was cited to us in support of the contention that a person who enters upon land belonging to himself with the intention of doing a wrongful act to a joint owner does not commit trespass. We know of no authority which carries the case so far as this. It appears to us that a joint owner of land who enters upon the land with the intention or knowledge that he was about to do an act which was wrongful to his fellow owners, does commit trespass. We are not in any way concerned with what is known in the Penal Code as a criminal trespass. That is a separate form of trespass which has its own express definition. One of the Judges of this Bench had to consider the case on a previous occasion, namely, Queen-Empress v. Subhan (1), in which a person went upon a property with the knowledge of the owner and apparently with his wish that certain graves should be ploughed. The case is, of course, not exactly in point, but it was there held that trespass could be committed on the land entered upon with the knowledge and consent of the owner. We find no reason to interfere with the view taken by the learned Judge of the court below, and we dismiss this petition.

Application rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code, section 107—Security to keep the peace—Circumstances in which the performance of religious ceremonies may amount to a wrongful act likely to occasion a breach of the peace.

Held that persons who performed religious ceremonies in a place not set apart for the purpose and where no such ceremonies had been performed before, and who did so with the deliberate intention of triumphing over, insulting, and wounding the religious feeling of their neighbours, committed a wrongful act and one which might probably occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity within the meaning of section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

THE facts of this case were briefly as follows :—

Certain Muhammadans, residents of the Kathgarh mohalla of the city of Bareilly took exception to the performance, in the house of one Bajrang Das in the said mohalla, of certain religious rites or ceremonies accompanied by the blowing of a conch. A prosecution was instituted against Bajrang Das for an offence under section 298 of the Indian Penal Code, but he was acquitted by the Sessions Court. Some Hindus of the neighbourhood thereafter proceeded to perform ceremonies of some kind involving the blowing of a conch in a grove or orchard near the house of Bajrang Das. This innovation was strongly resented by the Muhammadans who lived near, and the police authorities found that there was a serious danger of a breach of the peace. Proceedings under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were taken against both parties, which resulted in the Muhammadans being discharged, and in five Hindus being bound over to keep the peace for a period of one year. The Hindus appealed to the District Magistrate, who set aside the order, except as against one man, Murli Singh, who was found to be the man in possession of the grove or orchard in which the obnoxious proceedings had taken place. Murli Singh applied in revision to the High Court.

The Assistant Government Advocate (Mr. R. Malcomson), for the Crown.

[776] PIGGOTT, J.—This is an application in revision against an order of the District Magistrate of Bareilly, which had the effect of confirming an order passed by a Subordinate Magistrate whereby the applicant was bound over under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code to keep the peace for one year. The facts found are simple. Some months previous to the institution of the present proceeding certain Muhammadan residents of the Kathgarh mohalla of Bareilly city took exception to the performance in the house of one Bajrang Das in the said mohalla of certain religious rites or ceremonies accompanied by the blowing of a conch. A prosecution was instituted against Bajrang Das for an offence under section 298 of the Indian Penal Code, which resulted in his acquittal by the Sessions Court. Some Hindus of the neighbourhood, not satisfied with the victory thus gained, proceeded further and began to perform ceremonies of same sort involving the blowing of a conch in a grove or orchard situated near the house of Bajrang Das. This innovation was strongly resented by the Muhammadans of the neighbourhood and the police authorities found that there was serious danger of a breach of the peace. Proceedings were instituted against both parties, that is to say, against the Hindus and Muhammadans both ; but the Joint Magistrate came to the conclusion that the Muhammadans before him had done nothing to justify their being bound down to keep the peace. He accordingly discharged them and bound over five Hindus for a period of one year. The latter appealed to the District Magistrate, who found on the evidence that it was not proved as regards four out of the five appellants before him that they had been guilty in the past of any such conduct as would justify him in inferring that they personally were likely to do any wrongful act that might probably occasion a breach of the peace or disturb public tranquillity. He accordingly set aside the order passed by the first court as against these four persons. He held that Murli Singh, who was admitted before him to be in possession of the grove or orchard in which the obnoxious proceedings had taken place, was a proper subject for the order passed by the Joint Magistrate. I have to consider in the first place whether the blowing of a conch in the grove or orchard under the circumstances [777] found by the lower court was or was not a wrongful act. The blowing of a conch in a public place for one's personal amusement, or with any other lawful and innocent motive, and without any intention of thereby annoying or hurting the religious feelings of any other persons, is not a wrongful act. The blowing of a conch in connection with ceremonial acts of worship, in accordance with established usage, in a place fixed for the occasional or periodical performance of such ceremonies or worship, will not as a rule be a wrongful act, even though there may be persons within hearing of the sound who find their religious feelings hurt in consequence. In the present case I take it from the findings before me that certain Hindus of Bareilly commenced to perform ceremonies involving the blowing of a conch in a place in no way set apart for the purpose, and where no such ceremonies had hitherto been performed, and that they did it with the deliberate intention of triumphing over insulting and wounding the religious feelings of their Muhammadan neighbours. I hold that this was a wrongful act. As there can be no doubt that it was also an act likely to provoke a breach of the peace and disturb the public tranquillity, any persons found to be responsible for such conduct were proper subjects for an order under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code. As regards Murli Singh personally, the view taken by the District Magistrate is that, whoever may or may not have blown the conch, and whoever may or may not have been present on any particular occasion when it was blown, the circumstances of the case as a whole just fied the inference that the objectionable proceedings could not have been started, and could not have been continued in that grove or orchard, without conduct amounting to abetment of the said proceedings on the part of the person in possession of the grove. This is in my opinion a conclusion which it was fairly open to the District Magistrate to arrive at on the facts before him, and I decline to interfere with it in revision.

I have already said enough to dispose of Murli Singh's application with reference to the grounds of revision set forth in his petition to this Court. I am disposed however to add a few words regarding matters which were made the subject of a [778] considerable amount of discussion before me at the hearing. Murli Singh is a jail darogah in the public service in these Provinces; and though he was on leave at Bareilly at the time of the proceedings now before me in revision. I may take it that he either has returned, or is likely very shortly to return, to his duties at a station a considerable distance from Bareilly. It has been suggested before me that as matters stand it is difficult to see what practical purpose is served by the existence of the security bond which Murli Singh has furnished in this case, or what effect could be given to the provisions of that bond in the event of disturbance occurring at Bareilly (no matter what the immediate cause of the disturbance might be) while Murli Singh was engaged in watching over the comfort and security of the convicts in a jail two hundred miles distant. Exception was also taken to the actual finding of the District Magistrate regarding Murli Singh's possession over the grove in question, and it was pointed out to me that in the order of the Joint Magistrate and in the evidence upon which it proceeds, the place in question is spoken of as the grove of Jai Singh; also that a Hindu of that name was one of the persons who appeared along with Murli Singh as appellant before the District Magistrate. In his petition addressed to this Court Murli Singh does not suggest any such line of argument as this; and in any case I cannot permit myself in revision to go behind the express finding of the District Magistrate that the possession of Murli Singh over this grove was not merely a fact, but an admitted fact, in his Court. This is no case of a clerical error, for the District Magistrate's order shows clearly that he understood the admission as to possession to be made in respect of Murli Singh, a jail darogah on leave. The actual result of the admission was that the District Magistrate holds a security bond as to the practical utility of which there certainly seems room for doubt, while the man Jai Singh, who was spoken of as the owner of the grove or orchard in the first Court, and who appears to be a permanent resident of Bareilly, has been discharged without security. I do not feel it incumbent on me to take upon myself duties and responsibilities which section 125, Criminal Procedure Code, lays upon the District Magistrate. I have thought the matters above referred [779] to worth nothing for the information of the said Magistrate or his successor in office. The order against Murli Singh, at the time when it was passed, was in my opinion a proper and legal order upon the facts found, and I shall not interfere with it. The application is dismissed.

Act (Local) No. II of 1901 (Agra Tenancy Act), section 21—Occupancy holding—Mortgage—Suit by mortgagor to recover possession—Illegal contract—Restitution of benefit.

Held that the mortgagor of an occupancy holding who has put the mortgagee in possession cannot recover possession upon the ground merely that the mortgage is void under the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, without repaying to the mortgagee the money which he has received from him. Fasih-ud-din v Karamat-ullah (1) followed.

THIS appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff respondent for possession of an occupancy holding which he mortgaged to the defendant appellant under a mortgage deed, dated the 5th of August, 1905, by which a principal sum of Rs. 499 was secured. The grounds on which the claim was put forward were, that the land mortgaged was the cultivatory holding of the plaintiff; that under the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act the mortgage of such land was void; that there was no consideration for the mortgage, and that it was nominal and fictitious. It is admitted that under the mortgage the mortgagee obtained possession of the property and that he is still in possession. The court of first instance decreed the suit simply on the ground that the property mortgaged was the cultivatory holding of the plaintiff, and the mortgage of it was void. The defendant appealed to the lower appellate court and raised two contentions; first, that the holding was a fixed rate tenancy, and secondly, that the court of first instance should have ordered the plaintiff to refund the mortgage money before obtaining back possession of the property. On the first point the lower appellate court found that the tenancy was an occupancy holding. On the second point it [780] held that, as a mortgage of such a holding was prohibited by section 21 of the Agra Tenancy Act, the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession without refunding the money which he had obtained from mortgagee. It accordingly dismissed the appeal. A second appeal was preferred to this Court but it was dismissed by the learned Judge before whom it came on for hearing.

BANERJI and TUDBALL, JJ:—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff respondent for possession of an occupancy holding which he mortgaged to the defendant appellant under a mortgage deed, dated the 5th of August, 1905, by which a principal sum of Rs. 499 was secured. The grounds on which the claim was put forward were, that the land mortgaged was the cultivatory holding of the plaintiff; that under the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act the mortgage of such land was void; that there was no consideration for the mortgage, and that it was nominal and fictitious. It is admitted that under the mortgage the mortgagee obtained possession of the property and that he is still in possession. The court of first instance decreed the suit simply on the ground that the property mortgaged was the cultivatory holding of the plaintiff, and the mortgage of it was void. The defendant appealed to the lower appellate court and raised two contentions; first, that the holding was a fixed rate tenancy, and secondly, that the court of first instance should have ordered the plaintiff to refund the mortgage money before obtaining back possession of the property. On the first point the lower appellate court found that the tenancy was an occupancy holding; on the second point it held that, as a mortgage of such a holding was prohibited by section 21 of the Agra Tenancy Act, the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession without refunding the money which he had obtained from the mortgagee. It accordingly dismissed the appeal. A second appeal was preferred to this court, but it was dismissed by the learned Judge before whom it came on for hearing. From the decision of the learned Judge of this court this appeal has been preferred under the Letters Patent, and the contention raised before us is that the decree in the plaintiff's favour should have been made conditional upon his restoring [781] to the defendants the benefit which he, the plaintiff, had obtained under the mortgage, that is, upon his paying back the mortgage money. We are of opinion that this contention is well founded. If as a matter of fact, the plaintiff received from the defendant the amount of the mortgage, he should not be allowed to recover possession of the mortgaged property unless he restores to the defendant the benefit which he, the plaintiff, derived from the mortgage. It is true that under the Agra Tenancy Act the mortgage of a cultivatory holding is void, but the person who made the mortgage cannot, on principles of equity, be allowed to take back the property unless he put the defendant mortgagee into the position in which he was before the mortgage and restore to him the money which he received from him. This was so held in Fasih-ud-din v. Karamat-ullah (1). That was a case in which the proprietary rights and interests in a mahal, purporting to include the vendor's interest in his sir land, were sold, and the vendor expressly stipulated that he would not claim occupancy rights in the sir. He subsequently sued for possession of the sir as an exproprietary tenant. It was held that as the plaintiff asked for possession without tendering that portion of the purchase money which was the price of the interest in the sir it would be violating every principle of equity and good conscience to decree the claim. It was contended in that case that the appellant was entitled to a decree for possession without offer or tender or payment of the portion of the purchase money given for the sir. The learned Judges, EDGE, C. J., and BURKITT, J., observed :—"We are here administering the law and are bound to administer that law as far as we can according to equity and good conscience, and it seems to us that if we were to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff in this case, we would be violating every principle of equity and good conscience by allowing a man by means of fraud to keep in his pocket the purchase money which he had obtained from his vendee and get back by the assistance of the court possession of the property which that purchase money represented. In Bhikham Singh v. Har Prasad (2), which was the converse of the case last mentioned, the principle laid down in that case was approved of. In Second Appeal No. 200 [782] of 1911, decided by one of us on the 8th of April last, the facts were exactly similar to the facts of the present case. It was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover possession without paying the money which he had received from the defendant as consideration for the mortgage made by him. A similar view was held by KARAMAT HUSAIN, J., in Second Appeal No. 1030 of 1909, decided on the 10th of June, 1910. The principle of the ruling of the Bombay High Court in Jeji Bhai Laldas v. Nagji Gulab (3), is also to the same effect. The learned vakil for the respondent has referred us to the decision of this court in Madan Lal v. Muhammad Ali Nasir Khan (4). That case, in our opinion, is perfectly distinguishable from the present case. There the tenant of the occupancy holding in question did not make a voluntary transfer of it, but his rights were sold by auction in execution of a decree and were purchased by his wife who subsequently transferred them to the defendant. This transfer was in violation of the provisions of the Tenancy Act and did not confer any title on the auction purchaser. The tenant subsequently relinquished his holding, and thereupon the landholder brought a suit to recover possession of the land from the transferee. The plaintiff in that case had derived no benefit, of which he could be held liable to make restitution. That case, therefore, has no bearing upon the question before us. In our judgment, if the plaintiff received the mortgage money from the defendant, he is not entitled to recover possession of the property mortgaged by him from the mortgagee unless he restores to the mortgagee the mortgage money received by him. On the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity, he cannot be allowed to retain the mortgage money in his own hands and at the same time to take back the property. The case of the mortgagee under similar circumstances seeking to recover possession from the mortgagor is different. This was pointed out in Bhikham Singh v. Har Prasad (1) and in Dipan Rai v. Ram Khelawan Rai (2). In the present case, however, the plaintiff alleged that he had not received any part of the mortgage money. This point was not considered by the court below and no finding was arrived at in regard to it. We must, [783] therefore, obtain from the court below a finding on the following issue, which we refer to that court under the provisions of order XLI, rule 25, of the Code of Civil Procedure:—

Was the amount secured by the mortgage of the 5th of August, 1905, or any part thereof, paid by the defendant to the plaintiff?

Hindu law—Joint family property—Mortgage by father alone—Subsequent sale by father to a third party - Suit by mortgagees for sale—Competence of purchaser to rely on invalidity of the mortgage.

The head of a joint Hindu family mortgaged in 1886 property belonging to the joint family, but neither for legal necessity nor to pay an antecedent debt. In 1898 the mortgagor sold the same property to a third person. The purchaser remained in possession for more than twelve years, when the mortgagees instituted a suit for sale on their mortgage,

Held by RICHARDS, C. J., and BANERJI, J., that in view of the fact that the purchaser had acquired a title to the property by adverse possession as against all the members of the family, it was open to him, notwithstanding that his title was originally acquired from the mortgagor alone, to set up as a defence the invalidity of the mortgage.

Per CHAMIER, J., according to the ruling of the majority of the Full Bench in Chandradeo v. Mata Prasad (3) the mortgage made by the father alone was void, and, this being so, it was open to the purchaser, who was in possession of the property, to rely upon its invalidity, whatever the weakness of his own title might be.

Judges. The facts of the case appear from the following order, as well as from the judgments of the Full Bench.

"The question raised in this appeal is of such importance as to justify us in recommending that the appeal be laid before a larger Bench. Property in two villages Kamrahwa and Abhaipur was hypothecated by an instrument of the 21st of July, 1886, by one Padam Singh in favour of the plaintiffs respondents, Lala Mithu Lal and Lala Hulas Rai. Padam Singh is dead, and his sons and grandsons are in possession and enjoyment of the village of Abhaipur. The other village, Kamrahwa, was purchased by the defendant appellant from Padam Singh in the year 1888. The plaintiffs instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen to enforce payment of their mortgage, and among the defences set up by the defendants, first party, was the plea that the bond was not executed for legal necessity. The Court of first instance held that no legal necessity for the mortgage was proved and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit in toto. The plaintiffs appealed, but in the course of the appeal they gave up their claim against Abhaipur and pressed their claim against the village of Kamrahwa only. The lower appellate court held that the question of legal necessity did not arise so far as regards the property in Kamrahwa and gave a decree to the plaintiffs to be realised out of the property in Kamrahwa. From this decree the present appeal has been preferred. The principal grounds of appeal being (1) that the Court below was in error in holding that the plea of want of legal necessity was not open to the appellant; (2) that the Court below having found that there was no legal necessity, it should not have passed a decree without a finding on the question of legal necessity; (3) that Kamrahwa and Abhaipur having been both mortgaged to secure the plaintiffs' debt, it was not open to the plaintiffs to give up their claim against one of the villages and so throw the entire burden on the village purchased by the appellant alone. An issue was referred by this Court to the lower appellate court as to the existence of legal necessity for the loan. The finding on that issue is in the negative. It appears to us that an important question is involved in this appeal, that is, whether a transferee from the head of a Hindu family who had previously mortgaged joint family property without legal necessity, stands in a better position than his transferor, and can set up the case that a prior mortgage of the property transferred to him was made without legal necessity. We accordingly refer the matter to the Chief Justice with the recommendation that the appeal be laid before a larger Bench."

Mr. A. E. Ryves (with him The Hon'ble Nawab Muhammad Abdul Majid and Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq), for the appellant.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji (with him Munshi Gulzari Lal) for the respondents.

RICHARDS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit to enforce a mortgage, dated the 21st of July, 1886. The mortgage comprised [785] property in a village called Kamrahwa and also in a village called Abhaipur Rampur. The mortgage was made by one Padam Singh, who was a member of a joint Hindu family. In the year 1888, the same Padam Singh sold the village of Kamrahwa to the defendant appellant. Padam Singh is long since dead. His sons and grandsons are in possession of the village of Abhaipur, while the defendants have ever since the sale of Kamrahwa been in possession of the same. When the suit was instituted, the plaintiffs sought to sell both villages; but, it having been found that there was no legal necessity for the mortgage, the plaintiffs abandoned their claim against Abhaipur and sought to realize the amount of their mortgage entirely out of the village of Kamrahwa. The court of first instance dismissed the suit. The lower appellate court decreed the suit against the village of Kamrahwa. It has to be admitted, having regard to the authorities, that Padam Singh, as a member of the joint Hindu family and in the absence of necessity, was incompetent to make the mortgage of the 21st of July, 1886, in favour of the plaintiffs. It is, however, contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the defendants' title has the same flaw, and that they ought not to be allowed to set up the fact that Padam Singh was incapable of making the mortgage. It seems to me that the point is concluded by authority. In the case of Balagobind Das v. Narain Lal (1) the facts were in principle very similar. A son, who, just as in the present case, was a member of a joint Hindu family, mortgaged his undivided interest. Subsequently simple money decrees were obtained against him. His interest was put up for sale on foot of these simple money decrees and purchased by the father. It was held in a suit to enforce the mortgage that the father was entitled to set up the defence that the mortgage was invalid, notwithstanding that he himself was the purchaser at the auction sale of the son's interest. At page 351 of the report their Lordships say:—"In the present case the interest has passed to Naunidh (the father) not by survivorship but by purchases at sales in execution of decrees. Although it is not the same interest as he would acquire by survivorship, it is sufficient to entitle him to set up the invalidity of [786] the mortgage deed." It must be remembered in considering the present case that, although originally the defendants acquired their state by virtue of a deed of sale from Padam Singh, they haue long since by limitation acquired title not only against Padam Singh but against the rest of the joint family. In other words the defendants now represent not only the interest of Padam Singh in the village of Kamrahwa but also the interests of the rest of the joint family. The case is in principle just the same as if the sale to the defendants had not been by Padam Singh alone but by the whole joint family. See Brijbasi Lal v. Gopal Das (2). I would allow the appeal.

BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises in a suit brought by the plaintiffs respondents for sale upon a mortgage executed in 1886 by Padam Singh, deceased, in respect of shares in two villages, namely, Kamrahwa and Abhaipur Rampur. The village Kamrahwa was sold by him to the defendant appellant in 1888. The defendants to the suit were the son and grandsons of Padam Singh and the subsequent transferee of Kamrahwa. The son and grandsons of Padam Singh contended that the mortgage was not made for family necessity. The Court of first instance found that there was no necessity for the mortgage of the family property and totally dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appealed, but in the lower appellate court they abandoned their claim in respect of the village Abhaipur Rampur and pressed it in respect of the village Kamrahwa only. The learned Judge held that so far as that property was concerned the question of legal necessity did not arise, and accordingly passed a decree for sale of the village Kamrahwa. From this decree the present appeal was preferred. It has been found by the lower appellate court on an issue referred to it that there was no family necessity for the loan. The question we have to determine is whether it is open to the transferee from the mortgagor to question the validity of the mortgage on the ground that it was not made for family necessity.

In view of the authorities and of the circumstances of this case the question should, I think, be answered in the affirmative. It was held by a majority of the Full Bench in Chandradeo [787] Singh v. Mata Prasad (3) that the father in a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law cannot execute a mortgage of the joint family property except for family necessity or to meet an antecedent debt, and the mortgage is invalid even in respect of the father's share in the family property.
